CONGRESSIONAL RECORD,

SIXTIETH CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION.

Our late colleague was of Semitic origin, and his conduct in life furnishes evidence of the traditional virtues of his great race—love of country, love of family and home, patience, thrift, industry, and application.

Others have spoken of the principal episodes of his life and of his political and legislative achievements; however, I do not consider it amiss to deal more in detail with what his best friends know to have been the pride and ambition of his life—the dry dock and naval station at New Orleans.

Nearly eighteen years a Member of the Congress of the United States, he benefited his constituents, his State, and his country by his tenure of service, and the history of his legislative life confirms the wisdom of the adage that—

The race is not always to the swift * * *

Although well educated and possessing a splendid command of language, his success was attributable more to the fairness and strength of his arguments and the persuasive manner and persistency of his advocacy of any cause espoused by him than to eloquence and oratory.

He never became discouraged at any temporary setbacks, nor vainglorious or intolerant with success.

As an instructive lesson to those who may chance to read these words, I have collated and condensed into a few lines, which I now insert, the epitome of his legislative labors, which will endure long after temporary monuments will have crumbled to their original substance:

March 3, 1893, Fifty-second Congress, second session, for dry docks	$25,000.00
July 26, 1894, Fifty-third Congress, second session, for dry docks	23,025.03
May 4, 1898, Fifty-fifth Congress, second session, for dry docks	850,000.00
June 7, 1900, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, for dry docks	650,000.00
Total	1,548,025.03
June 7, 1900, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, for naval station	145,000.00
March 3, 1901, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, for naval station	330,000.00
July 1, 1902, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, for naval station	339,000.00
March 3, 1903, Fifty-seventh Congress, second session, for naval station	111,800.00
April 27, 1904, Fifty-eighth Congress, second session, for naval station	271,500.00
March 3, 1905, Fifty-eighth Congress, third session, for naval station	95,000.00
June 29, 1906, Fifty-ninth Congress, first session, for naval station	215,500.00
March 2, 1907, Fifty-ninth Congress, second session, for naval station	156,300.00
May, 1908, Sixtieth Congress, first session, for naval station
Total	1,664,100.00

The construction of a dry dock and the establishment of a naval station at New Orleans were projects dear to the heart of General MEYER, and the results of his efforts write the story of a life well spent and devoted to the interests of those to whom he was so faithful.

It will be noted that the first appropriation made by the National Government for a dry dock was on March 3, 1893, and that the amount was very small, $25,000. But total appropriations through the efforts and ability of the late First District Congressman for the dry dock only aggregate at this time $1,548,025.03.

Well knowing and realizing the necessity for a naval station on the Mississippi River at New Orleans and the advantages to accrue to the public service from its construction, his energies were next directed to the establishment of such a station, and we find the result of his work in the naval appropriation bill adopted June 7, 1900, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, carrying an appropriation of $145,000 for that purpose, followed by an appropriation on March 3, 1901, second session, with an appropriation of $330,000; and the work was begun. And annually thereafter the naval bill carried appropriations for the naval station with unfailing regularity until March 2, 1907, aggregating $1,664,100.

The great ships of our Navy and vessels of foreign countries have been and can be at any time repaired with facility and restored to commission. Many thousands of dollars are distributed among the officers and employees stationed there. The construction of the dock and the establishment of the naval station have resulted in material benefit to New Orleans and has enhanced her importance as a great port and strategic base.

I recall when I first came to Congress that I was slightly disappointed with the unfavorable action of a committee on a measure in which my constituents were interested, and so expressed myself to my colleague, General MEYER. He stated to me that he considered he had accomplished a few things for the people of his district since his election to Congress, but the result had been attained by repeated efforts, although at first not entirely successful or satisfactory. He said he well remembered in his campaign for Congress in 1891 that his advocacy of a dry dock and naval station at New Orleans was almost treated with derision and that he was charged by his opponents as advocating a measure which he well knew would never be enacted into law. Yet he remarked:

I have lived to see both of these projects—charged as being merely electioneering schemes—approved by the Congress of my country and my people.

Were the people of his district to estimate his services merely from a financial point of view, his account would show a large balance to his credit; theirs a large debit in his favor.

His achievements in the great field of human endeavor entitle him to the commendation accorded by the greatest of cynics to those who accomplished something, that—

Whoever could make two ears of corn or two blades of grass to grow upon a spot of ground where only one grew before would deserve better of mankind and do more essential service to his country than the whole race of politicians put together.

Yet, Mr. Speaker, "a man's life * * * is neither here nor there in the destiny of a nation." General MEYER fulfilled his mission; he performed his duty; he accomplished his task; and, in the last analysis, we exclaim with the Latin poet, "Finis coronat opus!"

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, we are here to-day to endeavor to pay a tribute of respect and of love to the memory of our late colleague and friend, Gen. ADOLPH MEYER, of Louisiana. Not in the extravagance of language or in fulsomeness of praise, but in sincerity and truth to speak those things which our love would prompt and to testify to those virtues which we know. I wish sincerely, Mr. Speaker, that I possessed that richness of language which would enable me adequately to pay a just tribute which his merits and life would warrant, but I find comfort in the thought that those who have preceded me have paid a tribute more deserving and more commensurate than I can hope to do. I first met General MEYER when I became a Member of the Fifty-seventh Congress. I was not then associated with him other than as a Member of the House, meeting and being associated with him, but during the Fifty-ninth and Sixtieth Congresses we were together in our work upon the Committee on Naval Affairs, and there I learned to know him well and to love him more.

Mr. Speaker, I speak truly when I say the Committee on Naval Affairs and the Congress in his death suffered a loss. The Congress, as a representative of the whole country, his State, and the Union had in General MEYER a faithful, efficient, and competent public servant. Great crises, it is said, produce great men, or it is sometimes debated that great men produce great crises. Perhaps we are not able to give a categorical answer to that question or a dogmatic solution to the inquiry, but the young manhood of General MEYER came into activity in a great crisis during the civil war from 1861 to 1865. In the year 1862, when in the University of Virginia as a student, he felt the call of duty which his country made upon him and he responded to that call. He allied himself to the cause of the Confederacy, and while it is not my purpose to attempt to repeat what has already been told of his services and his distinguished career, his fidelity in that service was such that when the war was over it could be and it has been said of him he was faithful to every trust and faithful to every duty.

No more could be said of any man. Faithful in the environments in which we find ourselves, faithful in the duties which present themselves to us in our station and our surroundings, whether large or little, whether great or small, ever to be faithful and efficient in the discharge of the duty that is before us is the highest, the noblest, and the best tribute that can be paid to mortal man. Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose to recall the incidents of that crisis. The soldiers of the North and the soldiers of the South, the soldiers who wore the blue and the soldiers who wore the gray, who met upon the field of battle and of blood, of destruction and death, were men in the highest, noblest sense when they faithfully discharged their duty. Those were times that tried men's souls, and a man who was faithful as he saw his fellows die, who was brave in blood and carnage and death, deserves the tribute of commendation and merits the esteem and the love of his countrymen.

Mr. Speaker, whenever I stand at the grave of a man who wore the blue or of a man who wore the gray, there comes to me the memory of the words that were spoken to the prophet of old as he stood in the presence of that burning bush, "Take thy shoes from off thy feet, for the ground whereon thou standest is holy ground." Sir, as I stand at the grave of a Federal or a Confederate soldier, I take my hat from my head and bare it to the blue of heaven and my soul testifies that these are our country's heroes; and from my heart ascends the prayer that our children and our children's children may ever be as noble and as brave as were these men who wore the blue and the gray in the discharge of their duty to the call of their country. Mr. Speaker, the courage and bravery and heroism of the soldiers of the North and of the South in that great struggle is the grandest, the noblest, the best exhibition of courage and patriotism ever displayed on the field of battle and challenges the admiration of the world.

But, sir, it was after the close of that war, when the Southern soldier returned to his home in desolation and ruin, where fire and sword had made desolate the land, and faced the problems of rebuilding his country, rehabilitating its industries, reinstating its institutions, and to meet and to solve aright the many problems that presented themselves to him, that the manhood of the South exhibited its highest inspiration and its noblest aspiration and achievement and reached the high-water mark of patriotic accomplishment.

It was in this work that General MEYER entered heartily, patriotically, and successfully as a citizen of his State and of the nation. For laying hold of the new problems which presented themselves to him, for his wise and judicious consideration of them, and for their rightful solution he received the approbation of his people, and they gave to him a commission for years and years as a Member of Congress. Others have spoken more eloquently than I could hope to do of the faithfulness and the efficiency of his labor and his achievement here. I need not say more than to say that here, as elsewhere, he was faithful and efficient.

Mr. Speaker, when we come to consider General MEYER personally our admiration may prompt us, unless we be careful, to extravagant expression. He was a noble man. He was a gentle man. There was one attribute of his character that was prominent and commended itself to all—his modesty. I wish to emphasize that modesty is not and should not be a virtue limited and confined to the female sex. There is a modesty which commends itself to men and which challenges the admiration of noble men; and General MEYER possessed in a high degree that modesty. General MEYER was personally honest; no man ever questioned his personal honesty or his personal honor. But, more than that, Mr. Speaker, he was politically honest. By that I mean that in his convictions of political duty he was sincere and earnest. He had convictions; he was not afraid to state them. Those convictions were politically honest with him, and he had the courage to maintain them. He was honest in his purpose.

No man ever questioned the honesty of the purpose of General MEYER in any effort he undertook; and it was the conviction and the sincerity and the honesty of his purpose that commended itself to his associates here and gave him power in this body. He was not only honest in his purpose, but he was honest in his action; for his conduct was such that no man ever stopped or thought to question or to examine into the integrity of his purpose or the honesty of his action, because it was apparent in his life and his conduct. But one may be honest and still not rise to the highest level of manhood. We can pay our debts, we may discharge the duties that commonly and ordinarily address themselves to us, and still there is a higher plane of manhood than that. General MEYER was a man of integrity. He was pure in his thought. I ask you to let your minds run over the history of this body, and can you find where anyone has ever been purer in his thought or cleaner in his life than General MEYER? The purity of his thought and the cleanness of his life marked him as a noble man, and won for him the respect of his colleagues.

He was faithful in service. Others have amplified that fact, and I shall not detain you for it. The faithfulness of his service was marked in this House and among his people.

It is said that there are larger and smaller cycles that mark the movements of the heavenly bodies. The sun has its orbital cycle and the stars have theirs. Some are small, some are larger, and some larger still. Some of the bodies move themselves within our visions for only a little while as they pass by, and we see them but little. It seems to me that this life is such. In the great cycle of eternity, as we conceive it, what a small cycle of life there is to us here. The life and light of the cycle of his life here has passed away from us, only to move in that larger cycle which we call eternity. We hope, we expect, yes the intuitions of our souls tell us, and we know, that in that hereafter the friendships begotten here shall ripen into the full fruition of love over there; and it is a comfort and consolation to know that in the richness, the fullness, and the completeness of that life we shall be satisfied.

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, it is probably unnecessary for me to add anything to what has been so well said of the life and services of ADOLPH MEYER, but it seems to me fitting, and it certainly is an honor, to join with you who knew him so well in a few words of my appreciation of his services in the District of Columbia Committee, where I met him in the first session of the Fifty-ninth Congress. That committee is probably influenced less by political opinions than any other. The acerbities of partisan activities hardly enter into its deliberations. The question as to who is a Republican or who is a Democrat need hardly be considered. All who do their work there are actuated by the simple desire to do what is best for the city of Washington. General MEYER brought to the work rich experience and good judgment. He was tenacious in his views on any civic subject, but equally tolerant of divergent views of others. His work was always valuable, and his expressed opinions always told and did much to enable the committee to act wisely. There was no matter so trivial or detail so small that was not worthy of and did not receive his strict attention and his honest judgment. Much of what is good in the bills reported from that committee originated with him or received his cordial support. And of his personal relations with the members of the committee nothing can be said but good. My acquaintance with him soon, I am honored to say, became a friendship, and the friendship quickly ripened into genuine affection; and so when the sad news came on March 8 that he had passed away, it was the loss to me of a real friend. I had looked forward to seeing him again, not only in the old committee but in the Committee on Naval Affairs, but, alas, it was not to be. General MEYER had many friends, and closer acquaintance invariably increased the friendship. In the remarks which he made at the memorial services of Amos Cummings General MEYER closed in the following language:

I do not suppose that he left on this floor a personal enemy behind him; certainly there is not one of us who in this hour does not mourn his untimely end.

Surely nothing truer could be said of this brave soldier, faithful public servant, warm friend, and courteous, modest, and gentle man.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Speaker, the frequent eulogies in this House, Sunday after Sunday, remind us of the solemn and serious fact that in the midst of life we are in death. A visitation of this grim monster has prevented my making as full and complete a eulogy on our departed friend and comrade as I had hoped to make, for no longer ago than yesterday I was called to witness the funeral of a splendid Virginia woman who met a sudden and tragic death by a runaway accident. I only left the city of Richmond this morning after a very early breakfast, in order that I might reach this House in time to comply with the request of my colleagues from the State of Louisiana to unite in this tribute to the life and character of our deceased friend.

I have, perhaps, seen more of death in war than any other man in this presence, and as much in peace. Only this morning I came through the historic city of Fredericksburg, where in December, 1863, I counted on a surface no larger than this room the bodies of 285 of the dead men of Mears's brigade, in that conflict of which I was an eyewitness. All I have here to say has been written on the train between Fredericksburg and this city. As my mind ran over the battlefield of old Virginia I thought of the apostrophe to death I have heard so often quoted on this floor:

Come to the bridal chamber, Death!
Come to the mother's, when she feels
For the first time, her first-born's breath!
Come when the blessed seals
That close the pestilence are broke,
And crowded cities wait its stroke!
Come in consumption's ghastly form,
The earthquake shock, the ocean storm;
Come when the heart beats high and warm,
With banquet song, and dance and wine!
And thou art terrible!—the tear,
The groan, the kneel, the pall, the bier,
And all we know, or dream, or fear
Of agony, are thine.

We look upon death as the greatest of mysteries; but to my mind, accustomed as I have been in war and peace to this dread monster, I regard what we call life as even more mysterious than death itself.

Mr. Chairman, the life of ADOLPH MEYER was eventful and distinguished. Louisiana may well mourn and this House well honor this soldier, patriot, business man, and statesman.

In him was combined those qualities of sterling character, rare fidelity, courage, and faithfulness in the discharge of every duty which justly entitles him to live in the hearts and memories of his countrymen.

Modest, unassuming, and genial, liberally educated, of broad business experience, he gave to his public duties that sound judgment and untiring effort which won for him the affection, respect, and confidence of his colleagues.

ADOLPH MEYER was a native of Natchez, Miss., born in October, 1842. Educated at the University of Virginia, he left that institution while a student to enlist in the Confederate army, serving with distinction under Brig. Gen. John S. Williams, first as captain, then by promotions until at the close of the war he held the position of adjutant-general.

After the close of the war he returned to Louisiana, became the head of a firm largely interested in the production of cotton and sugar; later he became a cotton factor in New Orleans, and was prominent and successful in commercial and financial pursuits.

He was elected and served as colonel of the First Regiment Louisiana National Guard, and was appointed in 1881 brigadier-general to command all of the uniformed corps of the State of Louisiana.

At the outbreak of the war with Spain, Gen. John S. Williams, his old commander, wrote the President as follows:

To the President:

I beg leave to recommend to your favorable consideration Mr. ADOLPH MEYER, of Louisiana, for position of division or brigade commander of Southern volunteers.

Mr. MEYER served on my staff during almost the entire civil war. He was preeminent for soldierly qualities, the loftiest courage, fidelity, and endurance. In fact he seemed a natural-born soldier, and commanded the confidence and admiration of the entire command.

I know of no young officer who manifests more military aptitude. His resourcefulness in emergencies and quickness to avail himself of every possible advantage and devotion to duty were unsurpassed.

Mr. MEYER's experience in actual war has been supplemented by command in the Louisiana Militia and National Guard.

I know the appointment would be a good one and highly acceptable to the Southern people.

With sentiments of the highest regard,

I am, most respectfully, yours,

JOHN S. WILLIAMS,
Brigadier-General, Kentucky Division

This letter makes comment on General MEYER's record in the war between the States unnecessary. The highest praise by his superior officer, under whom he constantly served during almost the entire war, is glory enough for one ex-Confederate.

ADOLPH MEYER was first elected to the Fifty-second Congress from the First Congressional District of Louisiana in 1890, and was successively reelected until the Sixtieth Congress in November, 1906, at which election he received 9,158 votes to his Republican opponent's 791.

Ex-Speaker Crisp assigned General MEYER to the Committee on Naval Affairs, where he held an important place, serving under two distinguished Democratic chairmen—Hon. Hilary A. Herbert, of Alabama, and Hon. Amos Cummings, of New York.

It was on this committee that his greatest services were rendered his State and his beloved Southland.

It was chiefly to his active, untiring, and intelligent work that the largest naval station and dry dock in the South was established in the port of New Orleans, large enough for the heaviest battle ships and comparing favorably with any other station in this country.

Largely to him is due the construction of the jetties at Southwest Pass, placing New Orleans on a footing with the best and greatest ports on this continent. It was largely to his strong and earnest plea on the floor of the House in the Fifty-fifth Congress that the retention of the mint at New Orleans was secured after it had been stricken out by the Appropriations Committee.

For this service, as well as many others of like character, General MEYER endeared himself to a loyal constituency, who returned him to Congress for nine consecutive terms.

The letter of General Williams that I have quoted is a just tribute to General MEYER. If our deceased comrade watches these exercises to-day from the spirit land, as he may do for all we know, he takes the most interest in the references here made to his Confederate record. Everything touching the history of the heroic struggle his people made for constitutional liberty was of deep interest to him. I shall never forget the simple and unvarnished story he told of the part he bore in that conflict at a meeting of the ex-Confederates of the House and Senate during a banquet held at the Metropolitan Hotel in this city several years ago.

At that time we numbered fifty in both Houses. We are now reduced to eighteen. Soon the last of these heroes will have passed from the scenes of earth. While their names, for the most part, will perish and their memories fade away, their deeds of valor and chivalry will stir the hearts of future generations while the stars shine and the tides ebb and flow.

Their self-sacrifice and devotion to duty will feed the patriotism and fire the souls of men as long as valor has a votary or virtue a shrine.

Not since Cromwell established the English Commonwealth has there been on earth an army more devoted to principle nor freer of vices. To their everlasting honor stands the fact that in their march through the enemy's country they left behind them no ruined homes, no private houses burned, no families cruelly robbed.

They were, with one solitary exception, and that perhaps a righteous reprisal, careful with fire, and they were never known to borrow jewels of gold and silver with no thought of returning the same. They would divide the last morsel of food and the last drop of water with the hungry and thirsty prisoners that they captured by the thousands.

With the rarest exceptions they never cherished bitterness and ill feeling for the rank and file of the men they met in deadly combat. They were soldiers from necessity, not choice, and only fought as their Revolutionary sires did, for home and liberty. They knew then and know now that they were absolutely right in their contentions, and the last one will die, as our colleague died, with the proud satisfaction that impartial history will pronounce judgment in their favor and rank them, with a large number of their leaders, as the most heroic and least selfish of all in the tide of time who fought for their homes and firesides.

Our deceased comrade was also a striking type of the Confederate soldiers who returned to their homes after an unsuccessful conflict with a majority of their own countrymen, assisted by foreigners gathered from the four corners of the earth. Historians are to-day giving the Confederate soldier full credit for the purity of his convictions and the courage with which he defended them.

In due time they will tell of his achievements in peace that were not surpassed by his exploits in war. The territory that he defended with unsurpassed valor, containing one-third of our population, has for years contributed 40 per cent of our exports to foreign lands. Receiving no pensions save a pittance from Commonwealths that had been despoiled by war and robbed by reconstructive laws, he has, with the toil and enterprise of himself and the sons sprung from his loins, furnished from his taxable values fully one-third of the revenues that have gone to pension the survivors of the mixed hosts, speaking every language of the earth, who overran with fire and sword the fairest land ever given unto man to hold and defend.

The members of the Naval Committee have told us of the splendid services our colleague rendered as a member of that committee. To show the breadth of his view and his noble, generous spirit, I quote the closing paragraph of the very last speech he made in this House:

The time has gone by when voice of faction or party spirit could cavil at a liberal policy of encouragement of this arm of our national defense. Therefore in any steps we may take in this direction we will respond to the ardent aspiration of the American people by providing adequate means to defend our rights in peace or in war.

We old soldiers intend before we are transferred to another sphere of action to establish the justice of our cause in the eyes of mankind, and we wish to leave our good name and fame in the keeping of the young men of our country. Ask yourselves these questions, young men: Does the fact of failure prove that the South was wrong and the North right in that struggle? Was Providence on their side, and were we fighting against the fiat of the Almighty?

If America had to suffer the penalty of violated law, was the South sinners above all others? In the conduct of that war which side exhibited most of the Christian and the least of the brutal character? To ask these questions is but to answer them.

The North succeeded because they had the world to draw supplies from and mustered 2,500,000 men for the conflict.

The South failed because she could only raise 550,000 all told and was confined to her own resources for supplies.

THE CONFEDERATE SOLDIER.

In a few short years now the last one of these old soldiers will have answered the last roll call. They are falling more regularly than they fell in battle, notwithstanding they gave to the grim monster 25 per cent of their fighting men during the four years of strife. Soon, very soon—

We'll bear our last old soldier
To his quiet place of rest,
And we'll guard his mound of verdure
As the eagle shields her nest:
We'll deck his grave with violets,
And we'll keep it green each day,
And we'll carve upon his headboard,
"Lieh here the last Old Gray."

We shall love to teach our children
Of our heroes who are dead,
Of the battle scars they carried
Marching to a soldier's tread;
Of their loyal hearts so tender,
All aglow in truth's array,
And the many recollections
Of the boys who wore the gray.

And as long as time speeds onward,
And there is a heaven of love,
God will watch the silent sentinels,
Sleeping, from a world above;
He will guard the precious memory
Of the old Confederate gray,
Throughout Time's eternal pages,
When the last one's passed away.

Mr. SPIGHT. Mr. Speaker, when I became a Member of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, about ten years ago, one of the first Members, outside of my own State delegation, with whom I became acquainted was Gen. ADOLPH MEYER, of Louisiana. From that time until his death our relations were cordial. We were drawn together more closely because for four years we fought under the same flag, and each felt a pride in his record as a Confederate soldier. Another reason, perhaps, why we were attracted to each other was that we were both natives of the proud State of Mississippi.

For almost seventeen years, commencing with the Fifty-second Congress, General MEYER represented in this House the First District of Louisiana, the greater part of which is in the city of New Orleans. That a man of the Hebrew race and faith should have so long represented this cosmopolitan district is one of the highest tributes to his worth.

General MEYER was genial, courteous, and open-hearted. He was as modest as a woman, but proud of his good name and loved his honor better than his life. At the time of his death he was the dean of his State delegation by virtue of long service, which exceeded by two years that of his distinguished colleague of the Second District, Judge DAVEY, and he had the confidence and esteem of all.

As before stated, General MEYER was a gallant Confederate soldier, and this he justly regarded as a badge of honor, and yet, like the truly brave men on both sides of that fearful conflict, when the war ended he stopped fighting and became as loyal to the Government of the United States as he had been to the Confederacy. While we all deplore the death of our friend, I, as a Confederate soldier, am glad of the opportunity to pay a feeble tribute to his memory and worth. When I think of the changes which have occurred in the ten years since I have been in Congress I am forcibly reminded of the fact that in a few more years the last of the soldiers of the civil war will have passed off the stage of action.

In our boyhood or young manhood we wore the blue or the gray, as our environments and convictions led us. Each did what he thought was right, and the men who made American history in those bloody days ask no apologies from those who fought against them. We are all proud of our achievements. The one helped to preserve the Union; the other saw his flag go down in defeat, but has lived to see the indestructible doctrine of State rights for which he fought recognized in every section of our great domain and in every department of our Government. Side by side and hand in hand the Confederate soldier and his sons are marching on with the Federal soldier and his descendants to make our reunited country the proudest, richest, most powerful nation on earth, and with the confident hope that it may be the freest and happiest under the necessary limitations of a beneficent Constitution.

In speaking of the rapidity with which the ranks of the veterans of the civil war are diminishing, it may be of interest to say that in the Fifty-sixth Congress there were fifty Confederate soldiers in the two Houses—more than there were of Federal soldiers. To-day there are nineteen in all, and only eight in the House. Alabama and Virginia have two each, and Georgia, Maryland, Mississippi, and Tennessee have one each. There are now thirty-two Federal soldiers of the civil war in the two Houses, only two of whom are Democrats. The only Confederate soldier I have ever known as a Republican Member of Congress was Hon. C. SLEMP, of Virginia, who died since his election to the Sixtieth Congress.

I mention these things only as a bit of interesting information and to show how fast the men who wrote history in the smoke of battle more than forty years ago are crossing the "great divide" which separates time from eternity. I am glad that no bitterness remains in the hearts of those who took part in that great struggle, but meet now as friends, and trust that in the few remaining years we may be brought still closer together for the welfare and glory of our common country.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, it is no ordinary task to be a faithful Representative in the halls of Congress. To represent the interests of a Congressional district is an onerous undertaking, but to faithfully and intelligently represent all the interests of this great Government requires natural endowments, supplemented by training of the severest kind.

Gen. ADOLPH MEYER entered the Congress of the United States after a training so wide in its scope as to enable him to at once grasp the trend of his work and to have his labors finally crowned with success. He bore his honors so gracefully, his manner was so quiet and unassuming, that one would not determine that in him was combined the cultured scholar, the fiery warrior, the hardy yeoman, the skilled financier, and the polished statesman. But the eulogies to which we have listened this afternoon show that he was endowed with these attributes. He was a kind and affectionate husband, a loving and indulgent father, an amiable companion, a staunch friend, an elegant American gentleman.

It is related of him that he was diligent in his studies at the University of Virginia, from which institution he graduated at the beginning of the civil war. He had selected the law as his profession, but abandoned it to enter the Confederate army.

In lieu of enumerating his many engagements and the individual acts of heroism which marked his career in that long and bloody conflict, I will only cite his record as it is summarized in the letter of his superior officer, Gen. John S. Williams, of Kentucky, which he directed to the President of the United States, and which has already been read.

This gives the record as a soldier of the one of whom we speak; but when the strife was over we find him engaged in the peaceful and honorable pursuit of agriculture in the parish of Concordia, La., near the beautiful city of Natchez, Miss., where he had spent his boyhood days. But he yearned for that field of commercial enterprise which had afforded opulence to so many of his race, and New Orleans, the great metropolis of the South, was selected as a suitable site for the mercantile business in which he engaged.

But it is with his Congressional record we are more directly concerned. It would not be just to the memory of a man who had served for seventeen years in Congress to condense in a few words the more prominent acts of his accomplishment and leave to inference the multitude of minor transactions, which in the aggregate show a task performed which would tax the credulity of the most confiding casualist.

When we reflect that from the great city of New Orleans there are only two Representatives in the lower House of Congress to represent her interests in the navigation of the Mississippi River, in her levees, her wharves; to represent the great shipping interests on the Gulf and to foreign ports, the inland traffic, the manufacturing, the banking, the mercantile interests, the exchanges, the boards of trade, the progressive unions, the labor organizations, and the myriad of other interests in a city of more than one-third of a million people, we are astounded to learn that in addition to these duties great outside plans are originated and carried to a successful conclusion. To-day we see the great dry dock an accomplished fact in New Orleans; the Chalmette monument; the new Government building, costing millions of dollars, provided for; the naval station and the immigration station in New Orleans all testify to the meritorious efforts of our deceased brother.

When any question would arise affecting the Passes at the jetties or the Government mint at New Orleans, or which affected the quarantine regulations, General MEYER was always ready to protect the interests of the city, but no less the interests of the State.

General MEYER dearly loved his adopted State, and was fond of the poem, Louisiana, which was sung by Miss Nores, United Daughters of the Confederacy, and which, by request, I will recite:

LOUISIANA.
Land of the brave, aye, the gallant and bold—
Louisiana.
Home of the lads with hearts as good as gold,
Louisiana.
Unequaled in beauty the wide world o'er;
The names of thy sons reach from shore to shore,
Louisiana.
Blest are the mortals whose feet touch thy strand,
Louisiana.
Home of my childhood, imperial land,
Louisiana.
Thy rich fertile soil is forever renowned;
Thy forests in numerous trees still abound;
Thy melodious song, unsurpassed, aye, in sound,
Louisiana.
Mild are the winters that visit thy shore,
Louisiana.
Beautiful birds through thy balmy air soar,
Louisiana.
Leader of all, bright and glorious land,
Pray tell me the country which with thee can stand;
For, surely, thy fields have been touched by God's hand,
Louisiana.

This poem breathes a spirit of patriotism which made it congenial to his nature, for his soul was fired with patriotic emotions and he loved his whole country.

Who does not love a patriot?

In commemoration of those who have suffered in their country's cause the bard has awakened the slumbering chords of his noble lyre and called forth the beatific strains which still float upon the tide of time. The grandest monument which can commemorate the deeds of men is that which the patriot erects in the affections of his countrymen.

The drifting sands are slowly submerging the Egyptian pyramids; the Colossus of Rhodes, that brazen monument of a great city's gratitude, has tottered from its lofty pedestal; the tawny Tiber creeps mournfully through a marble wilderness of deserted fane and decayed temples; but there is a monument more durable than brass, more indurated than adamant. To the departed spirits of the small band of patriots who immortalized their lives on the altar of their country at the Pass of Thermopylae the dulcet symphonies and voices sweet of the poet's lay still whisper words of consolation and of cheer.

When the monastic gloom of medieval times had been refted from the mental sky; the sun of knowledge had dissipated the threatening clouds of superstition which lingered around the horizon; the Plerian fount had hidden its crystal flood beneath the funeral pile of Grecian glory, and the muses, deserting the beautiful woodlands and vaulted grottoes, where they were wont to hold high carnival, had sought refuge among the magnolia groves and rosy bowers of the Hesperian shore, and the star of patriotism, vanishing from the Old World, shone resplendent in the New, then Washington, who, like some meteor from yon distant sky, flashed upon the world in patriotic fire. Still, while master spirits have entranced the world, feebler souls have been deeply stirred and added their accordant notes to swell the patriotic song and send forth the wild, weird psalm of victory found amid the pulsations of the great human heart for love and hope and joy.

ADOLPH MEYER was one of these.

But, alas! his peaceful soul has taken its immortal flight to sunlit climes of peace and love, over whose supernal planes that unwritten music, the "Music of the Spheres," sweeps in voiceless and unbroken strains, and whose billowy tide shall flow along until it breaks in crystal spray around the millennial throne.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In accordance with the order of the House, and as a further mark of respect to our deceased colleague, General MEYER, I now declare the House adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock noon.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

In laying before the Congress the accompanying letter from the Secretary of State, I heartily recommend that appropriation be made as therein requested for the participation of the United States in the coming investigation of the opium question in the Far East by a joint international commission.

The cordial reception of this proposal by the governments concerned is a cause of gratification to the American Government and people. The high aim of this international project, placing as it does considerations of human welfare above all others, is a fine example of what is best in modern civilization and international good will and cooperation. Such an undertaking can not but appeal most strongly to the American people, and I am happy to lay before the Congress this opportunity to enable the United States to do its full share in the work.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 11, 1908.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is closed. The Chair lays before the Senate the agricultural appropriation bill.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 19158) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, the pending question being on the amendment of the Committee on Agriculture, on page 25, line 11, to strike out the word "preparation" and insert in lieu the word "publication," so as to read:

That no part of this appropriation shall be paid or used for the purpose of paying for in whole or in part the publication of any newspaper or magazine article.

Mr. SMOOT. The acting chairman of the committee is not here. I understand that he desires to speak to this amendment. If it could be passed over for the time being I would appreciate it very much, and we can go on with the rest of the bill until the acting chairman arrives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah asks that the amendment be passed over for the present. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is passed over. There is no other committee amendment remaining to be acted upon.

Mr. FULTON. On page 25, after line 23, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. After line 23, page 25, insert:

That hereafter 25 per cent of all money received from each forest reserve during any fiscal year, including the year ending June 30, 1908, shall be paid at the end thereof by the Secretary of the Treasury to the State or Territory in which said reserve is situated, to be expended as the State or Territorial legislature may prescribe, for the benefit of the public schools and public roads of the county or counties in which the forest reserve is situated: Provided further, That when any forest reservation is in more than one State or Territory or county the distributive share to each from the proceeds of said reserve shall be proportional to its area therein.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I feel constrained to move to amend the amendment by striking out the word "roads." Under our laws you can not use the proceeds of school lands for roads; you must use it for school purposes.

Mr. FULTON. They could if Congress so directed. That would not be the effect of it.

Mr. HEYBURN. It would be the effect of it by our constitution.

Mr. FULTON. I hope the Senator will not raise any question against the amendment. The committee, I understand, is satisfied with it, because it is exactly in the language of the present law.

Mr. HEYBURN. The difficulty arises in the fact that the legislature of Idaho can not enforce it. They can not distribute this money for public roads under our constitution.

Mr. FULTON. I am perfectly willing, as far as I am concerned, to strike out "roads."

Mr. HEYBURN. And let it be for schools.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. I was in another place, suggesting items concerning the preparation of an appropriation bill for a few moments, and I did not hear the amendment read. I should like to have it read again.

I will say to the Senator from Idaho that it is my opinion that it is entirely in the option of the State whether it is to be used for roads or not.

Mr. HEYBURN. No; it is not.

Mr. WARREN. Let us have it read so that we may know.

Mr. TELLER. I wish that the amendment may be again read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will again read the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. WARREN. As I caught the reading, it is entirely with the legislature of the State to determine what proportion, if any, of the money shall be appropriated for roads.

Mr. HEYBURN. I did not catch that from the reading of it, and I would be very glad if the Senator from Wyoming would point out wherein power or discretion is left to the legislature to appropriate all of it for public schools. I would favor the amendment—

Mr. WARREN. Let the Secretary read it again, if there is any doubt about it in the mind of the Senator.

Mr. HEYBURN. It says "shall."

Mr. FULTON. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Idaho to the fact that none of this money can be paid to the State unless Congress says so. If Congress says it can be paid to the State for a certain purpose or purposes, the constitution of Idaho does not affect it at all.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Will the Senator from Idaho allow me?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I make this suggestion to the Senator from Idaho: Would it not be possible for the legislature to divide the fund between the roads and schools in such a way that a proportionate amount should be given to the schools and roads, the schools receiving an amount in proportion to the school lands in the reserve?

Mr. HEYBURN. I will answer that by asking that that particular portion of the amendment be read, so that I can see whether the language would bear it out or not.

Mr. WARREN. I should like to have the language again read, and if the Senator thinks there is anything in the Idaho constitution that is obnoxious to it I should be glad to have it noted. I am quite sure it provides that so much money placed to the credit of the States by the Congress can be used as their legislatures may designate; that is, that it may all go for roads or all go for schools, or be divided. That is the way I understand the language.

Mr. HEYBURN. Let it be read, and I will call attention to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the part of the amendment requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Shall be paid at the end thereof by the Secretary of the Treasury to the State or Territory in which said reserve is situated, to be expended as the State or Territorial legislature may prescribe, for the benefit of the public schools and public roads of the county or counties in which the forest reserve is situated.

Mr. HEYBURN. I understand the question is raised as to whether that would leave it within the power of the legislature to so segregate this fund and apply that portion of it realized from the use of the school sections to the school fund and then, at its discretion, apply the remaining portion of the assignment of the fund to the roads. If it is susceptible of that construction, it would not be objectionable, but in connection with it, in order that the Senate may understand the point I make, I will call attention to that provision of the constitution of Idaho which is found in Article IX, section 3:

The public school fund of the State shall forever remain inviolate and intact; the interest thereon only shall be expended in the maintenance of the schools of the State, and shall be distributed among the several counties and school districts of the State in such manner as may be prescribed by law.

Now, this is the part:

No part of this fund, principal or interest, shall ever be transferred to any other fund, or used or appropriated, except as herein provided.

Now, that is an arbitrary provision in our constitution regulating the income from the school lands.

Mr. WARREN. The language is "this fund." What fund is alluded to there?

Mr. HEYBURN. The school fund. I think the Senator will understand the language when I have fully presented the thought.

Mr. WARREN. Very well.

Mr. HEYBURN. Another provision which I read the other day, and which I will read again if necessary, provides that any income from these lands shall constitute the public school fund.

Mr. WARREN. From what lands?

Mr. HEYBURN. The 16's and 36's.

Mr. WARREN. This proposed amendment does not allude to 16's and 36's in any manner. It is 25 per cent of all the receipts for all purposes from all of the public lands within the forest reserves.

Mr. HEYBURN. In view of the admitted fact that there are between eight and nine hundred thousand acres of 16's and 36's in the State of Idaho alone that are included within the forest reserve, I think that answers the suggestion.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. The Government does not pretend to grant grazing privileges on the school sections or to collect rent for them if, incidentally, herds go on there. That is one thing. But the Government is not presumed to exercise any control over the school sections. This is Government land and Congress need not give one dollar of this to the State unless it sees fit so to do. Now, if Congress concludes to make a donation of that land, does the Senator from Idaho pretend to say the State can not accept it? If his State can not, ours can, and I trust he will not defeat the interests of other States.

Mr. HEYBURN. Of course there is no reason why the interests of Oregon and those of Idaho should clash in this regard. I am not advised as to the provision of Oregon's constitution. I am not advised as to what constitutes their school fund. Their constitution was made half a century ago or thereabouts, and the public school system of the United States at that time was comparatively in its infancy. But this is an absolute grant to the State. It is a mere play on words to say that the Government does not lease the school sections. It leases an entire tract of millions of acres, which includes these sections physically. They are not fenced or segregated. They are used as a part of an entire tract. It is the merest play on words to say that the Government does not lease the school lands or that it does not cut timber from them. As a matter of fact it does both. It sells timber from the school sections and it grazes the school sections; it charges for doing it, and it collects this revenue.

I know of no reason why Idaho should be placed under the wheels of this Juggernaut here and the provisions of her constitution disregarded and nullified merely for the convenience of the consideration of the provisions of this bill as they apply to some other State. We are making laws here, and we are bound to respect the rights of the States. We have no right to disregard them, and if we undertake to do it it is a nullity, and it adds confusion to the situation for Congress to assume to legislate where it has no power to legislate.

We have time enough to consider this matter. There is nothing more important. That we should, in utter disregard of the constitution of any State in the Union, undertake to provide that the State lands should be used under the direction and the administration of this Bureau, and that the proceeds should be applied in a manner directly contrary to the provisions of the Constitution, seem to me to be so unreasonable that it ought not to receive a moment's consideration. Are you going to ask Idaho to go into the United States courts to contest this question? It will be compelled to do it. Idaho is not going to sit supinely by and see this vast fund that is provided for educational purposes diverted to the making of roads for the convenience of the Forest Service. It will not do it, and Congress only confuses the situation by attempting to provide that it shall.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. DIXON. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Idaho that even though his argument is borne out by the facts—which I can not possibly conceive to be the case—if Congress is willing to give Idaho one-quarter of the proceeds from the sale of timber within her forest reserves in lieu of the proceeds from one-eighteenth, which it has received from the forest reserves—

Mr. HEYBURN. Of the forest reserve receipts it now receives one-tenth.

Mr. DIXON. I can not conceive under what theory the State of Idaho should object to receiving 25 per cent in place of 10 per cent. I am certain the State which I have the honor to represent in part has no such conscientious scruples, and if it would ease the mind of the Senator from Idaho we could eliminate the State of Idaho from this provision.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think upon more mature consideration the Senator from Montana would not make such a proposition. It is not that this is not a fair proportion of the proceeds. It is a question as to directing arbitrarily how it shall be applied. I am not opposing the setting apart of 25 per cent of the proceeds derived from the use of these lands. I merely do not want Congress to undertake to say that the school fund, or any part of it, not even 10 cents of it, shall be diverted from the purposes to which it is to be applied under the constitution; that is all.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. May I ask the Senator from Idaho what his State is doing with the 10 per cent which it has been receiving under the law worded exactly like this proposed amendment?

Mr. HEYBURN. It is in the treasury of the State.

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator mean that it is unexpended?

Mr. HEYBURN. It is a part of the fund of the treasury of the State.

Mr. WARREN. That is begging the question.

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not think so.

Mr. WARREN. I want the Senator to answer, if he will, whether the State has received that money and made any use of it.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think I am safe in saying that the money is yet in the fund and has not been disposed of, because it is my impression that the legislature has not been in session since it was received. If I am mistaken in that, I think my colleague probably could correct me, because he was present at the session of the last legislature.

Mr. WARREN. Very well, I will ask the Senator's colleague.

Mr. HEYBURN. But I think it was received after the adjournment of the legislature.

Mr. WARREN. I ask the Senator's colleague, then, what has become of the 10 per cent that has been paid to Idaho heretofore under the law?

Mr. BORAH rose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to his colleague?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. I am not informed as to what has been done any further than that it has been received by the State. As to the distribution of it I am not informed, because I do not know the details.

Mr. WARREN. Has the Senator heard of any difficulty his State has had in reference to the money due it from the sale of forest products or rental of forest lands, or has his State or legislature had any such difficulty?

Mr. BORAH. Idaho has never had any difficulty in receiving any money which has been tendered to it. It has been perfectly easy as far as it has received it.

Mr. WARREN. I want to say, if the Senator will pardon me—

Mr. BORAH. If the Senator will yield just a moment, I agree with my colleague in the interpretation which he places upon the constitution of the State, but it does seem that the proper interpretation of the amendment does not go to the extent of compelling the legislature to distribute any portion of the fund to the roads. I think the language of the amendment is that it is within the discretion of the legislature to utilize it for the purpose which the constitution suggested it should be utilized.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, just a moment further. I wish to say that as to the constitution of Idaho there can be no dispute between the Senator and myself, because it is the constitution of his State; but I will say to the Senator that the constitution of Idaho is almost identical—word for word—with the constitutions of four or five other States that came in just before or soon after Idaho. They have had no difficulty with this 10 per cent and would have none with the 25 per cent.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I was, of course, sure that my colleague and I would not differ as to the interpretation of the constitutional provision. I desired that there should be such an expression here upon the floor during the consideration of this amendment as would leave it clear hereafter that Congress did not intend that the legislature of Idaho should be prevented from applying this fund entirely to school purposes. If the amendment is adopted with that understanding, and that is the interpretation that members supporting the amendment place upon it, then it will leave us less embarrassed than it otherwise would.

But, Mr. President, the object in putting that provision in the constitution (and I will say I participated in that act) was drawn from an object lesson in another State in the United States where a million dollars of the school fund had been diverted from one fund to another, loaned by the State officers from the school fund to a fund that was more convenient for political purposes, and that State to-day, after more than twenty years, has not been able to recover back into the school fund that more than a million dollars which was diverted. It was the intention of the legislature of Idaho that not one cent of the principal, interest, or income from the forests should ever be diverted from the school fund.

Now, under another provision of our laws we lease these school lands in Idaho, and the income from leasing them must go into the school fund. Our supreme court has held that not only the principal, but the income, from whatever source, must become a part of the principle to be used for public school purposes, and that it can not be diverted under any circumstances.

Mr. NEWLANDS. May I ask the Senator from Idaho a question?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do not understand that the Senator from Idaho objects to the gift of this 25 per cent to the various States, but he objects to any limitation as to its application, and he desires that the entire money shall go to the school fund rather than that any part of it should go to the county-road fund.

Now, I will ask the Senator, if he insists upon it that under the constitution of that State the moneys received from the land grants to the State shall go into the school fund, whether this provision has any relation whatever to the lands granted to the State? As I understand it, wherever the United States collects anything from grazing on the school lands belonging to a State it turns over the entire sum to the State, and that money, of course, goes into the school fund under the constitution.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator is mistaken in his understanding.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Do I understand that the United States does not turn over to the State whatever moneys it receives from grazing upon State lands?

Mr. HEYBURN. It turns over the per cent provided by existing law, or that may be provided by this bill. I can relieve the situation now, if the Senator will permit me.

Mr. NEWLANDS. May I ask the Senator whether the United States does claim the right to collect moneys for grazing upon the State lands?

Mr. HEYBURN. It is exercising it. I do not know what its claim is.

Mr. President, I am in favor of this amendment requiring 25 per cent of the income from these lands to be paid into the State treasury on the principle that if we get this, although it is not all that we are entitled to, it is that much gained against this system; and I do not intend to so oppose the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon as to make it obnoxious to the Senate or that a point of order may be raised against it. I merely want an understanding, such as I think we have about arrived at, that the legislature of the State will be free to use this money for school purposes.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, there are two or three considerations which naturally suggest themselves to anyone in regard to this matter, viewed from a general standpoint. One is as to the propriety of voting 25 per cent of the revenues of the Government from a certain source to certain States and Territories, and the other is as to our power to make any such disposition of the public revenues. If I understand correctly, this fund, the 25 per cent thus intended to be disposed of, is a part of the revenues of the Government.

Mr. HEYBURN. No.

Mr. BACON. Did I understand the Senator to say "no"?

Mr. HEYBURN. To the extent that these reserves include lands that do not belong to the Government only are they proposing to devote this fund and pay that portion that represents the State's lands into the State treasury.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will permit me, I hardly think the Senator from Idaho wants to be on record as saying that school sections, which are only about 5 per cent of the area of forest reserves, represent this proposed 25 per cent of forest earnings, because the school sections are 16 and 36—two sections out of thirty-six—or one-eighteenth, which is a little over 5 per cent.

Mr. BACON. Of course we have not had the amendment printed, and I had to gather the purport of it from reading it.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator permit me a moment further?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. I want to say to the Senator in just as few words as I can, that the public lands are, of course, free from taxation. As a new country settles up, it is very hard for the settlers to provide schools and pay expenses where the broad area is owned by the Government, free of taxes. We always expect that settlement will soon follow. Now, here comes a new policy—

Mr. BACON. Does the Senator desire to interrupt me for the purpose of an argument? I have not yet even stated my proposition.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator wants to make an argument and does not want the information first, it is perfectly agreeable to me not to interrupt the Senator.

Mr. BACON. Not at all; I desire to have the information.

Mr. WARREN. I was going to give the information.

Mr. BACON. I do not desire the Senator now to discuss it, because I desire to do that myself.

Mr. WARREN. I do not propose to discuss it, but I propose to give some information.

Mr. BACON. I should be very happy to receive it.

Mr. WARREN. The forest reserves are reserves, presumably, for all time. Therefore settlement upon them practically stops. There may be a few exceptions. So, on the face of the proposition, there should be some contribution from the United States for the settlers. This amendment is an exact duplicate of the law as it now stands, enacted three or four years ago, setting apart 10 per cent. That has been thought to be too little by some, and hence 25 per cent is now proposed in the exact language of the existing law. It is not establishing a new policy, but it is enlarging the scope of it from 10 to 25 per cent, in lieu of the taxation that would be received if the reserves were open to settlement.

I thank the Senator.

Mr. BACON. I should like the Senator to say before he resumes his seat, if I did not correctly understand the statement made during the debate in the last few days, that these forest reserves are open to settlement.

Mr. WARREN. So far as the parts that are applicable to agriculture, which necessarily are but small as compared with the entire acreage.

Mr. BACON. That is a matter, however, not definitely determined. To what extent would that go? Anything that may be said to be adapted to farming purposes is open to settlement?

Mr. WARREN. No; it must be more valuable for agriculture than for other purposes. If it is heavily timbered it is not open to settlement.

Mr. BACON. I do not know what the language of the law is. That is a different statement from what I understood the Senator formerly to make.

Mr. President, I called for the reading of the amendment in order that I might see if the provision was limited to school sections. I do not so understand it.

Mr. WARREN. No; it has no reference to them.

Mr. BACON. And it is unlimited.

Mr. FLINT, Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. FLINT. I wish merely to remind the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from Idaho, who do not seem to be clear on the subject, that as far as the school sections are concerned in the forest reserves, if the State elects, it may accept an income from them. They have an income now, regardless of this 25 per cent; and it is simply a question whether the State desires to take the income under the plan which the Government has outlined.

Mr. BACON. I am very much obliged to the Senator, but I do not see that that gives any additional information upon the particular point we are now considering, and that is the question either of the propriety of the devotion of this portion of the income to the States or the legality of it. The amendment relates to all the income from forest reserves. It does not even say net income, but all the income. Here we are devoting millions of dollars in this bill—there is one single item here of over $3,000,000—to the care and preservation of these forests, and now 25 per cent of the gross return of that is to be devoted to the particular States in which the forest reserves may be located.

I do not think, Mr. President, that that is a proper thing to do. I do not think the revenues derived from the forest reserves any more belong to the States in which they are situated than they belong to the States in which they are not situated, all of which, as I have said heretofore, contributed to the acquisition of them.

Mr. WARREN. May I interrupt the Senator for a moment?

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will turn his eye on the District of Columbia, he will recall that the United States Government pays one-half of the expenses of the District of Columbia, because, as I understand the reason of it, it has so much property here that is not taxed by the District government. In that way it contributes to the expense of the government of this District.

Now, take half of a State and throw it into a forest reserve; it is so much not subject to taxation. Hence this proposition of paying the State some portion of the income, so that the Government may pay a part toward the education of the youth of the State and the care and support of the State government.

That is as to the equity and propriety of it. Now, as to the amount, that is a matter of judgment.

Mr. BACON. There is no analogy between conditions in the District of Columbia and conditions affecting forest reserves. There is no possible comparison between the two, no analogy between the two, and without stopping to discuss these differences, I want to confine myself closely to this particular proposition.

If there is a hardship in the fact that too much of the territory of a State is set apart as a forest reserve, the remedy is not, in my opinion, in giving to that State a part of the property that belongs to the States in common, but it is in correcting the law setting apart these vast territories within a State if they do an injustice to the State. That is the remedy.

Mr. President, it has seemed to me that so far as the propriety of it is concerned the argument is very plain and very simple that these forests are the common property of the entire country and that all the States are entitled to the equal enjoyment of whatever may be derived therefrom. But, aside from that, where is the law which justifies it?

But, before proceeding to that discussion, Congress has not been indifferent to the equities which the States may have as to the public lands within their borders. I believe 5 per cent is now given to the States out of the proceeds of the sales of public lands. I doubt very much the legality of it unless it is stipulated in the act when the States are admitted to the Union. Of course, it is a proper thing to do and a legal thing to do if that is a part of the act under which the State came into the Union; but when there is no such stipulation, and when there is property in a State which belongs to all the States in common, what right has Congress to say that a particular State shall have more interest in it than any other State? What is the distinction between revenues derived from forest reserves and from the sale of public lands and revenues derived from any other source? Suppose the Senator from New York were to introduce a bill that one-fourth of all the revenues derived from customs duties in each State should be given to the State in which the money was paid. Well, it would be very vastly to the interest of the State of New York to have that done, because very much more than half of all, probably two-thirds, of the revenues which come to the Government by reason of customs duties—

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. BACON. In a moment. Two-thirds of all the revenues which come to the Government from customs come from the port of New York. What possible reason can there be, in law I am speaking of now, which would enable Congress to devote a portion of the public revenues derived from that source to the unequal enjoyment of a part of the country any more than revenues derived from any other source? Now, I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Georgia upon what theory he can justify the payment of one-half of the taxes in this District by the Federal Government.

Mr. BACON. The Senator insists that I shall go back to that. I do not think there is any analogy between the two.

Mr. CARTER. Then I will ask the Senator another question—

Mr. BACON. The Senator has not permitted me to answer that one.

Mr. CARTER. The Senator disclaims an analogy—

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. CARTER. Therefore I desire to propound another question, which will be direct. Was it not the implied understanding when each new State was created that in due course of time, under the operation of the then existing land laws, the country would be settled up and the titles pass to private ownership and become subject to taxation?

Mr. BACON. I think so, and I think that understanding ought to be now carried out.

Mr. CARTER. Very well.

Mr. BACON. I am in favor of that; but I am not in favor of doing a wrong because another wrong has been done.

Mr. CARTER. But, Mr. President, the Federal Government now electing, for general public purposes, to depart from the ancient and well-settled policy so far as to take, through an act of Congress for instance, one-third of a State out of the taxable area, should not some compensation be allowed to municipalities, counties, and States thus injuriously and forever to be affected in their taxable wealth?

Mr. BACON. Now, Mr. President, the Senator says the Government elects to do so and so. What constitutes the Government? The law-making power; and the very power that can set apart this 25 per cent for the purpose of correcting what the Senator says is a wrong done by the same power can correct the wrong by undoing the original wrong; which is what ought to be done.

Mr. CARTER. Then, Mr. President, as soon as the Government elects to depart from its forest policy and to restore the public domain to settlement the 25 per cent will, of course, cease.

Mr. BACON. Well, Mr. President, if we have no legal right to give the 25 per cent, it can not be justified on the ground that we have done something else which has done injustice to the particular States in which the forests are situated. The very same power which can do what the Senator says will be an act of justice to the different States to compensate them for the wrong done can undo the wrong.

Mr. President, I entirely agree with what I have heard Senators discussing here for the past few days as to the great injustice done to certain States in setting apart these vast tracts, such large portions of the territory of the State as forest reserves, and in that way practically excluding them from settlement and development and subjection consequently to State taxation. I entirely agree with them, and I am ready to join with them in the correction of that wrong. When that wrong is corrected, not only will justice be done to the States, but justice will be done to the entire country, from the fact that in the settlement of these lands, in the sale of these lands, there will be a fund which will go into the Public Treasury of which the entire country will get the benefit; and then the State itself will get the benefit in the settlement of the lands, in the development of property, and in the entire property within the State being subjected to State taxation. In that way wrong is corrected and justice is done to all.

But to say, Mr. President, that the same power which has the right and authority to correct the wrong shall let the wrong stand and then shall do an illegal act as compensation for it, it seems to me is without possibility of defense.

Mr. President, there are ways in which this can be done, as I have suggested, and it is not too late to do it now. We have a bill before us; but by what possible argument can it be defended—

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. FLINT. I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia to please point out a plan as to how the suggestion he makes can be carried out.

Mr. BACON. By simply withdrawing them; by simply doing away with all regulations which set them apart as forest reserves and throwing them open to settlement.

Mr. FLINT. And abandoning the entire forest-reserve policy which the Government has entered upon?

Mr. BACON. Very well, so far as it may be necessary. It may not be necessary to do it all at one time, because it could not all be settled at one time. If we were to do so, we could contract the area; we could throw open enough to settlement so that there could be the gradual and proper development of the State, the gradual and proper settlement by home makers; so that what is now a forest shall be converted into farms and so that what is now public property may be converted into private property subject to State taxation. That is the way in which it can be done; and we have got the very bill now before us in which we can make such provision.

Mr. FLINT. I simply wish to state to the Senator from Georgia that a large part of this land is not suitable for agricultural purposes anyway, even though the timber was cut from the land. It is mountainous land covered with timber.

Mr. BACON. For what purpose is it good, then?

Mr. FLINT. The sole purpose for which it could be used is for timber; and the system now inaugurated by the present Forestry Service is to cut the timber in such a way that the land would be reforested and would remain a forest forever.

Mr. BACON. Very well. Then I understand, so far as relates to the land covered with timber, the State has no injustice done to it by the fact that it is set apart for a forest reserve, because, if the forest were not there, according to the statement of the Senator from California, it could not be used by home makers.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Georgia will be glad to know that it is conceded that between six and seven millions of acres set aside for forest reserves in Idaho alone have no trees on them and are adapted to other purposes.

Mr. BACON. Very well. Undoubtedly so far as that wrong is concerned, it ought to be righted because it is a wrong. Now, Mr. President—

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I wish to state to the Senator from Georgia what is already familiar to him, that in the States of Georgia, South Carolina, and North Carolina there is a movement to-day to put the Appalachian forests into the ownership and control of the National Government. I recently attended a great meeting of various boards of trade of Georgia at Atlanta, and I there heard the governor of the State of Georgia insist upon it that it was the duty of the United States to acquire the Appalachian forests, because they were the source of quite a number of navigable streams in that region, and that the preservation of the forests there would mean the development of those rivers for the purposes of navigation; that at present—

Mr. BACON. I yielded for an interruption by the Senator, if he will let me remind him of it.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I understood the Senator to yield to me, and I think the Senator is—

Mr. BACON. I did not desire to be taken off the floor, Mr. President.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President—

Mr. NEWLANDS. I wish to say—

Mr. FLINT. I can not hear the colloquy which is going on between the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. BACON. That is not at all astonishing, in view of the other colloquies which are going on all over the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The two Senators will please suspend until there is order in the Chamber.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Georgia yielded to an interruption.

Mr. BACON. I yielded to an interruption, and for any suggestion, but not for an elaborate speech.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do not wish to make a speech, but I wish to make a statement regarding the Senator's own State and the States adjoining it. A certain position is taken by the governor of the great State of Georgia in regard to this matter, a position which seems to be sustained by public sentiment in the Senator's own State. If the Senator objects to my fully presenting that, of course I will withhold it until the Senator gets through with his remarks.

Mr. BACON. I think the Senator has quite fully presented it.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I have not finished it as yet. I was interrupted by the Senator, and do not wish, of course, to be discourteous to the Senator or to insist upon going on.

Mr. BACON. I certainly do not desire to be discourteous to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I recognize, of course, the Senator's right to the floor; and if the Senator does not wish me to go on, I will wait until some other time.

Mr. BACON. I do not object to the Senator making any statement of fact which he wishes to, but certainly the Senator recognizes the difference between an interruption in which he makes a suggestion and one in which he makes a speech.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I am much interested in this colloquy, but we can not hear it at all on this side on account of the noise in the Chamber.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, if the Senator from Nevada will proceed, let him go ahead if he wishes to, and I will resume when he gets through. I would prefer, however, to finish.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I certainly feel some delicacy in reference to proceeding when evidently the Senator from Georgia is unwilling that I should proceed.

Mr. BACON. I think I understood the suggestion of the Senator thoroughly, and I suppose every Senator here understands the suggestion without his repeating it, and that is, that the necessity for forest reserves is recognized in order to preserve the streams, and, as some contend, in order to secure a proper amount of rainfall. We all understand that, and, with proper restrictions, I am in favor of the suggestion which has been made with reference to the Appalachian range; but, Mr. President, that does not come up on this question at all.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I understood I had the floor, and yielded to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON].

Mr. BACON. I beg the Senator's pardon; I had the floor. The Senator from Idaho had yielded the floor, and I took it in my own right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair recognized the Senator from Georgia in his own right, and the Senator from Georgia has the floor.

Mr. HEYBURN. I had not yielded the floor except to the Senator from Georgia for an interruption.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator resumed his seat and the Chair understood him to yield the floor.

Mr. HEYBURN. I resumed my seat because of the length of the interruption.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. TELLER. Just a moment. It does not seem to me that it is a very valuable privilege for a Senator to have the floor in the confusion which prevails in this Chamber.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is trying his best to have less confusion.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield to a question?

Mr. HEYBURN. If the Chair will pardon me—I do not want to be persistent—I offered an amendment, and I was addressing myself to it. The Senator from Georgia, among others, asked leave to interrupt, and I granted it as of course. The interruption became somewhat lengthy, and I resumed my seat. I am not at all inclined to be persistent about it, and I yield to the Senator from Georgia, but I should like to have my rights recognized in the matter.

Mr. BACON. No, Mr. President, I did not interrupt the Senator, and I did not address the Senator. I addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair recognized the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], and the Senator from Georgia is entitled to the floor.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, the question I wish to put to the Senator is this: I understand him practically as opposing the creation of forest reserves in the great West out of lands that now belong to the National Government. I should like to ask him how he reconciles that view with the policy now urged by the South and by the Senator's own State of the acquisition of property now in private ownership with a view to the creation of forest reserves in aid of navigation?

Mr. BACON. I did not catch the Senator's question.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I said I understood the Senator to be opposed to the creation of forest reserves in the great West, their creation out of lands now belonging to the United States Government, which means simply the reservation and not the purchase of those lands. Now I ask him how he reconciles his opposition to that policy with the policy which his own State sustains, as I understand, of the National Government acquiring large areas of land now in private ownership for the purpose of creating forests with a view to the promotion and aid of navigation?

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, the question is very easily answered by the fact that the Senator does not correctly state my position. I am not opposed to the setting apart of forest reserves, but I am opposed to the setting apart of forest reserves in such degree as is complained of here by the Senators in whose States those forest reserves have been set apart, as I understand, to the extent in some cases of almost a third of a State. Am I correct in that?

Mr. HEYBURN. More than a third of the State, Mr. President.

Mr. BACON. More than a third. That is what I am opposed to. I am not opposed to the setting apart as forest reserves of proper areas of territory included in which are timber lands, and I have never taken any such position. I am simply expressing myself as being in accord with the position which Senators have expressed here against the abuse of setting apart forest reserves to the extent of more than a third of the State of Idaho, for instance, thus practically withdrawing the land from settlement and practically debarring it from proper development.

SUSPENSION OF COMMODITY CLAUSE, INTERSTATE-COMMERCE LAW.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia will suspend for a moment. The hour of 12 o'clock has arrived. Under the unanimous consent agreement, that closes the morning hour and the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (S. R. 74) suspending the commodity clause of the present interstate-commerce law.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, I ask that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from West Virginia asks that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 19158) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, the same reasoning which would support this amendment would support an amendment giving to the States 25 per cent of the sales of public lands. The fact that this is forestry land does not take it out of the rule, and, without consuming the time of the Senate, the same argument, while there may be some stronger reasons in one case than in the other, generally would support any proposition for the setting aside of the revenues derived from any particular source in any particular State to the uses of that State and to the exclusion of other States having equal right in that property, but in which the revenue does not happen to be collected.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I may have misunderstood the Senator from Georgia, but I certainly understood him to urge that the public lands of the West, now dedicated as national forests, should be opened up to settlement. Whilst he objected, of course, to such portions of the land as were not suited for forests being reserved as forests, he also indicated that the remaining lands which were forests should be gradually opened up to settlement and put into private ownership, and I understood his contention to be that in this way these lands, gradually drifting into private ownership, would be subject to taxation, would swell the revenues of the State, and would enable the State, the counties, and the municipalities to discharge all the functions of government. That is what I understood the Senator's position to be, and I could not reconcile it with the view taken by the Senator's State, by the people of the adjoining States, and by the people of the entire South that a new policy should be inaugurated in the United States, not simply the policy of reserving as national forests lands now belonging to the Government, but the policy of purchasing lands now in private ownership with a view to dedicating them forever to forestry, the power being claimed under that grant of power in the Constitution to regulate interstate and foreign commerce, the existence of forests being absolutely essential to the control of the volume of the streams and the rivers, and therefore being absolutely essential to the promotion of navigation and thus of interstate and foreign commerce.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I desire to say that I have not said anything which would indicate that I was opposed to the reservation of a proper amount of land as forest reserves, and the Senator, in spite of my disclaimer, continues to make an argument upon the assumption that I had so stated. I can only say that I congratulate the Senator upon the skill with which he knocks down a man of his own creation.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I was only stating, Mr. President, my understanding of the Senator's remarks and the reason of my interruption whilst the Senator was speaking. I accept, of course, the Senator's explanation.

The question before the Senate now, however, is not whether too much land has been taken for these forest reserves, but the question is, assuming that certain lands must be taken and ought to be taken for reserves and ought to be reserved as such for all time, whether these vast areas in individual States shall be kept entirely free from taxation as the property of the National Government, or whether the National Government, recognizing the obligation of the State to govern every inch of the land within its boundaries, to furnish the courts, furnish the methods of criminal prosecutions, furnish the roads, and furnish the schools, should be aided by the National Government in that work, either by a subjection of the lands themselves to local taxation, or by a surrender to the State and to the municipalities for public purposes of a certain proportion of the revenues derived from these lands protected by the State Government.

Now, I wish to state that it has been the custom of the Government from the earliest days to deal freely with these public lands in the interest of the nation or in the interest of an individual State, if it thought that the interests of an individual State would be advanced by its action. Grants of public lands have been made without consideration to the various States. Swamp lands within the forest States have been granted to those States without consideration. Has any State in this Union, an interior State without swamp lands, objected to such grant? And yet they were grants not for the benefit of the General Government, not shared by every State in the Union, but grants for the benefit of the particular State in which the lands were located.

When the United States has granted school lands, the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections of every one of the public-land States, did the States outside of the public domain object upon the ground that those lands were the property of the nation; that the nation could only part with them for a valuable consideration, and that the valuable consideration received should be expended in the general expenses of the Government, applicable to every part of the nation and every State in the Union?

On the contrary, the public-spirited policy has been pursued of aiding the cause of education of the individual States by the grant of the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections. And so it is with reference to the forest reserves. Already we have upon the statute books a grant to these States of 10 per cent of the income received from the forest reserves and income received from the people of those States for timber and for grazing. So it is a simple question as to whether that amount should be increased; whether 10 per cent of the gross revenue is sufficient to compensate the States for the loss of the taxation which they would be enabled to levy if these lands were in private ownership. I do not understand that anyone objects to the proportion. No one who knows anything about the struggles of those Western States to maintain an efficient school organization, to maintain a judicial organization, to maintain a sufficient organization for the prosecution of criminals and an efficient organization for the construction of good roads over the vast territory sparsely settled, certainly has objected to giving to the people of each individual State 25 per cent of the revenue derived from these lands, derived from the local people who pay for this grazing and who pay for this timber.

No one would certainly object, it seems to me, to that as a fair proportion in lieu of taxation.

I am sure if these lands were subjected to taxation under the ordinary rate that prevails in that region, of from 2½ to 3 per cent, those States would absorb the entire present receipts, instead of only 25 per cent of them; and so the question, it seems to me, comes simply to this: It is not one of power, not one of public policy, but simply one of just proportion; and I am sure there is no man from the West who will say that 25 per cent of these gross receipts is too much.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, the State of Idaho had, in addition to the 16's and 36's, by virtue of the admission act, in round figures, 700,000 acres of land granted to that State in lieu of its surrender of swamp, overflowed, and saline land. It has of 16's and 36's—I have just made the computation—more than a million acres within the forest reserves, and 700,000 acres of land granted to it in lieu of its surrender of the swamp and saline lands.

Mr. President, the value of this land fixed by the admission act would be $10,668,000. That is the minimum, but they are worth more than that on the market any day they are offered. They will average more than that, because a large portion of these lands are timber lands, as fine timber lands as ever existed, and the State is continually selling these lands, or lands of similar character, lying outside of the reserves, under the provisions of the constitution, for from $10 to $70 an acre at public auction. So that it will not be considered that I am dealing with a small or unimportant question when I speak for the protection of the State's rights and the State's interest in these lands. I repeat, for conciseness, under the minimum price fixed by the admission bill and by the constitution those lands are worth $10,668,000. At public auction to-day under the method provided for their sale by the States they are worth twice that much money.

The school lands alone in the State of Idaho are the resource behind the education of the people of that State to-day and forever. They are sufficient to maintain the public school system and the university system and the other school systems for all time. And for a representative from that State to sit silent while this body or any other legislative body encroaches upon the right of the State to those lands would be to fail in the performance of a public duty.

It has been repeated time and again on this floor that these lands belong to all the people of the United States. So they do. But they must come to Idaho to get their property. They can not take that inheritance out of the geography of that State by any process. We welcome them. But nonresident ownership of land is the bane of any country upon earth. That land should be owned simply for the pride of title and allowed to remain unproductive and noncontributive in any State is against the very foundations of our Government. We want no absentee landlordism in Idaho or in the Western States any more than you desire it here.

I desire to meet explicitly the statement that these lands belong to all the people of the country. By that challenge, come and get them and become citizens and assume the responsibilities and duties of citizenship that appertain to that land, and assume it in Idaho, and we will have no complaint. Every private owner there can turn his farm into a forest reserve or a game reserve if he wants to, but he will pay taxes on it and perform the duties of citizenship.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] a few days ago was extolling the beauties of game reserves and deploring the diminishing quantity of game in the country. One herd of cattle that graze upon our plains is of more benefit and is more desirable than all the buffaloes that ever ranged upon the plains of the West. The idea of standing up here and comparing the attributes of that barbarous period of this country, when it was controlled by the Indians and ranged by the game, with the civilization which has succeeded seems to me to be absolutely without rhyme or reason. We will trade our Indians for the five Yankees or the enterprising Southerner or the American citizen, wherever he may come from, and we will trade a hundred Indians for every one such who comes, and we will trade all the elk and spotted deer and the buffalo and game of every kind—a thousand head of them—for one little herd of blooded stock. We will trade all the sweeping scope of the prairies and plains and forests for inclosed and improved homes. That is what we want. We send back to the challenge—"come and get your land; it is yours; but bring with it the responsibility of citizenship and the contribution to the wealth of the State where the land is." That is a complete answer to all this talk which has been made here as to the rights of the people of the East in the land within the States of the West.

In this morning's Washington Post there is an editorial upon that subject. It says that the elements in Congress are divided on the preservation of the forests. They are not. We want to preserve for use—

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. I know the Senator is favorable to the pending amendment. Has the Senator any objection to the Senate taking a vote on the amendment and then proceeding with his argument?

Mr. HEYBURN. I have no objection to a vote on the amendment with the understanding that I shall thereafter proceed. I have a pending amendment. The amendment really pending is my own. But I yield to the Senator from Oregon, and I will yield to a vote on the amendment with the understanding that I shall resume the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. FULTON]. Those in favor of the amendment will say "aye."

Mr. BACON. I make the point of order that the amendment proposes general legislation.

Mr. FULTON. I think it is too late.

Mr. BACON. No. I addressed the Chair before the Chair announced the result.

Mr. WARREN. I rise to the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming will state his point of order.

Mr. WARREN. Is the Chair considering the point of order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is considering it now.

Mr. WARREN. I want to say, as to the point of order, that the committee have not raised it. The committee, believing that it was simply a reproduction, so far as legislation is concerned, treated it as if it was simply an increase of an appropriation, and so the amendment is in order.

Mr. KEAN. It changes existing law.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to say a few words, Mr. President. With the exception of an increase from 10 to 25 per cent, the amendment follows exactly the provisions of existing law. Under the existing law 10 per cent of the proceeds derived from forest reserves is paid to the respective States for the purposes indicated in the amendment. The only change in existing law is to increase it from 10 to 25 per cent.

Mr. WARREN. Which is not general legislation.

Mr. NELSON. On that account it is not general legislation.

Mr. BACON. I withdraw the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia withdraws the point of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Will the Senator from Idaho yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Before the Senator leaves the proposition of game, the Senator is aware of the fact that this bill puts the Government in the business of supplying and transporting game in these forests.

Mr. HEYBURN. They have a force of men in Idaho for the express purpose of killing game. They are equipped by the Government, and they report the number of animals of various kinds which they have killed. But I am not inclined to deal at this time with the small questions that go to the administration of the Forestry Service, because the time is brief in which to conclude the consideration of this bill. Being, perhaps unfortunately, in the position of having opened the discussion on this measure, in view of the number of replies which have been made to the remarks which I made, it is only my intention to gather them up as briefly and succinctly as possible in order that my remarks may not seem to have been successfully controverted.

Mr. TELLER. I want to ask the Senator from Idaho a question.

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. He has referred to the fact that the forest reserve employees have been killing game. Do they do that without reference to the State law or under the State law?

Mr. HEYBURN. If I should make the assertion here that there is or is likely to be some controversy between the Forestry Service and the State government, I should perhaps be met with contradiction. I am not sufficiently advised to take up that question. It is sufficient to say that they have professional hunters in Idaho—game killers.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to say, for the benefit of those who have not looked into it, that the Supreme Court has declared that the game belongs to the State and is absolutely under its control. The State may make an open or closed season. It has gone to the extent of saying that the State may prohibit the export from the State.

Mr. DIXON. I want to ask the Senator from Idaho if it is not a matter of fact that the animals killed in the forest reserves are stock-destroying animals, like wolves and coyotes, which are killed when the rangers have nothing else to do; and if last year they did not kill nearly 50,000 wolves and coyotes within the forest reserves? They are not the game animals that the Senator's remarks might indicate.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have seen the report of these game killers, and I have noticed the character of the animals they are killing, and I do not undertake to criticize the fact of the killing of these animals. I only mentioned incidentally the fact that the Government was engaged in that sort of business.

I desire to call attention to the editorial in the Washington Post of this morning, in order that some erroneous views therein expressed may be clearly stated and controverted. It said:

The members of the Senate seem to be widely divided upon the question of the preservation of the forests as an important issue in the present and future of this country.

There is no difference of opinion, so far as I am advised, in the Senate or elsewhere among intelligent, thinking people as to the necessity and wisdom of preserving the forests any more than there is as to the necessity and the wisdom of preserving the water sources of the country or the farm lands of the country or the purity of the atmosphere or any other thing that tends to the general prosperity. The question in the Senate is as to the manner of doing it and not to the fact of doing it. There are no people in the United States who are more zealous in their desire to preserve the forests than are the people who live in the States where the forests grow, and there are no people in the United States who are as capable of knowing how best to preserve them as the people who live in the States where the forests grow. Those States were not settled by the overflow of either the insane asylums or the institutions for the feeble-minded. They were settled by those of your citizens who had energy enough to go out into the world to make new homes for themselves, and they represent the very highest grade and degree of the energy and manhood of the East. The drones do not go West. We are not troubled with the inefficient and those incapable of understanding the problems of life. We have a live, intelligent citizenship with a conscience behind it, just as much in favor of self-government as are the people of the East; and we are not asking to govern the East. We are asking the privilege of governing ourselves, and we are asking it not only for those who are there, but we are asking it for those of you who may go there and claim your own, about which you have had so much to say. When you reach that land we will stand with you for an equal participation in the government of the country in which you live.

Mr. President, this editorial further states that the difference of opinion is geographical. That is true in regard to every question which arises in this or any other legislative body. It is for that reason that representative government draws equally from all sections of the country. If all the members of this body were drawn from one State, they might on many questions be able to dispose of matters before them with entire impartiality, but that is not the principle upon which our Government rests.

This editorial further states:

It would seem, however, to any disinterested judge that the Western sentiment is narrowed to local needs and desires rather than inspired by a large, appreciative vision of the great value of the preservation of forest lands to the people of the whole country.

I think I have answered that proposition by saying that while these lands are the heritage of all the people, they can be obtained only by those who go where the lands are. The lands are fixed there permanently.

Mr. President, I have directed my remarks very largely to this question as it affects the State of Idaho, from which I come, but I do it merely as a text. That which is true of Idaho, or in relation to Idaho, is true of other States.

I have but a closing word to say, and that is in regard to the question of planting forests. I should like to see every State in the Union have a sufficient area of forests to meet every demand of that State, but I am opposed in principle to sequestering the lands in one State for the convenient use of another State. If they want forests in Nebraska, plant them there. If they want them in New York, plant them there. If they want in any State to plant forests and withdraw that much of the area of the State from contribution to the prosperity of the people, through the means of taxation, let them do it. But leave States like the State of Idaho free to develop and apply the natural resources of the State to the wealth and prosperity of that State. That is the basic principle upon which this Government rests and must rest.

They have created what they call "forest reserves" on open prairie and grazing lands in Idaho to the extent of about 7,000,000 acres. They admit it. There is no question about it. Fully one-third or more of the forest reserves in the State of Idaho have no timber upon them and never will have any timber upon them. All talk about reforestation in Idaho is silly. There is no sense or reason behind it. Why should you be planting forests in any State already 25 per cent timber land? Why not plant forests in places which have not forests?

The amendment I have offered is to prevent the Government from exporting timber from Idaho—not to prevent individuals who own land from sending timber from Idaho, but to prevent the Government from going into the lumber business in the State of Idaho in competition with private individuals at the expense of depleting the forests of Idaho. That is the amendment. The provision ought never to have been stricken out of the bill. The Senate in its wisdom of that hour incorporated it in the bill in the Fifty-eighth Congress, and it was the law, and was satisfactory to the people of Idaho. During my illness at the succeeding Congress, when I was unable to be present, it was stricken out. I merely ask to restore it, and I think in fairness I may ask that. Let the Government keep out of the lumber business in Idaho. Let it preserve the forests, if that is the mission of this Service. Let it cooperate with the State of Idaho, which puts as many fire-patrol people in the field during three months of the year as the Government does. Under the provisions of the law of that State—

Mr. CARTER. Would the Senator deprive the Government of the right to sell matured timber?

Mr. HEYBURN. I would not deprive the Government of the right to sell anything that it owns in the State of Idaho and ought to sell. I would deprive the Government of the right to go into business anywhere in competition with individual industrial enterprises.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. FLINT. The amendment simply limits the transactions of the Government as to Idaho. It will be just as much in the lumber business elsewhere. The sole object of the Senator would be to hamper the Government in that one State.

Mr. HEYBURN. I believe it has always been recognized as a sound principle in the Senate that the Senators who come here from a particular State are sent here because they are presumed to be able to represent the interests of that State as well as to participate in representing the entire Government, and I have never, since I have been a member of this body, undertaken to object to any measure proposed by any Senator with respect to the State he came from, if he presented it as a matter peculiarly interesting to the people of that State.

When the Senator from California has desired certain exceptions in favor of the State he represents upon this floor I have never interposed an objection, and never should.

Mr. FLINT. I am in entire accord with the views expressed by the Senator from Idaho on that matter, with the exception that it does not seem to me that the property of the Government or the income of the Government in any one State should be limited to that State. In other words, to parallel the proposition of the Senator from Idaho, as was stated by the Senator from Georgia this morning, it could be provided that all the customs receipts coming in at the port of New York should be expended in the State of New York. As a matter of fact, this is the income of the Government, and it is a general proposition, and it should be for the entire nation. In other words, the Forestry Service is a national project and not a local or State proposition.

Mr. HEYBURN. The word "project"—although I do not want to use a disrespectful word—covers more of those indefinable glittering generalities than any other word I have ever known to be used in this body. I think I treated of this the other day. It is this man's policy and that man's policy. I have little regard for those things which rest upon somebody's policy.

Here is something that probably will be interesting to the Senator from California. I have another editorial which I clipped from a paper, and in it it is suggested that it is a part of the policy of this Service to use the income from the forest reserves for the purpose of purchasing other forest reserves.

The management of the forest reserves which the Government already controls has been so able and careful that there is already a large surplus revenue, and it is proposed to apply it gradually to paying for the White Mountain and Appalachian forests.

In the first place there is no surplus revenue, but a deficit of about $1,300,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not understand the Senator to claim that that newspaper report is authentic, or that the Forest Service intends to follow the suggestions of the report.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The newspaper report certainly is authentic, because I cited yesterday bills now pending before Congress providing for that very thing, and I suppose, so far as the Bureau is concerned, the Senator will at least admit that Congress has the right to initiate legislation in regard to forest reserves.

Mr. SMOOT. I certainly do.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Whether this report comes from the Bureau of Forestry or not, it is a policy proposed to Congress that all the revenues of all the forest reserves be appropriated until 1918 for the purchase of land in the proposed Appalachian and White Mountain reserves.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I mentioned that only incidentally, because of the suggestions of the Senator from California.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. FLINT. I do not agree with the proposition of the Senator from Idaho that the Forest Service shall not have a policy, and we should criticize them for the reason that they have a policy. I think they should have a definite, fixed policy. It is an entirely different proposition whether Senators agree with that policy. As a matter of fact, I do agree with a great deal that has been done by the Forest Service in the management of forest reserves throughout the country, but I do not agree with the proposition as outlined by the Senator, if that is the policy of the Forest Service, that the income from the forest reserves in the West should be used for acquiring forest reserves in the East.

As a general proposition, I am in favor of taking as large a percentage of the proceeds of the forest reserves as is practicable and expending it in the States, just as we have to-day increased the amount from 10 per cent to 25 per cent; but while I agree generally to the policy of Mr. Pinchot in the management of the forest reserves, I want to say to the Senator from Idaho I do not subscribe to everything that is being done or every detail that is being carried out in the Forest Service. However, as a general proposition, I am in favor of what is being done.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, under the constitution or the admission act, 5 per cent of the proceeds from the sale of public lands in the State of Idaho go to the State for school purposes, in addition to the public lands that were granted; that is, 5 per cent of the proceeds of all the lands the Government sells in the State of Idaho goes to the State for that purpose. As an excuse for not selling public lands, or rather as a method of defeating that provision, they place the public lands in a forest reserve and do not sell them. They are starving the school fund of Idaho in that way. They are starving the reclamation fund of all the arid States by withdrawing this land from sale, because the reclamation fund is comprised entirely of money received from the sale of public lands.

So, with the reservation of 120,000,000 of acres of public lands from sale or settlement, of course the income of the Reclamation Service is at least threatened with that much loss. It is threatened with loss to the extent of the sales of the public lands that would have been made if they were not in a forest reserve. They destroy our 5 per cent school fund in addition to having taken possession of the school lands, because the lands not being sold the State does not receive the 5 per cent for them.

The most dangerous thing Congress can do, the most dangerous thing those who represent the older States can do, is to attempt to put on the bands and dwarf the growth of the Western States, because those States have a citizenship which if not capable to-day of defending their rights, will be, just as sure as the future comes. They are not going to remain mere vassals of the Eastern States. They are going to grow to be as great in population and wealth as the proudest and oldest State in the Union; and while you may embarrass them and cramp them for a short time they will rise up from under it.

There is no aristocracy of age among the States. The newest State was admitted with all the rights possessed by the oldest State. We have the territory and we will get the citizenship. We will drive these laws from the statute books that are placed there for the purpose of keeping the West down, for the purpose of making our States the breeding ground for your fancy animals and the camping ground for your tourists. We will drive these laws from the statute books. It is only a question of time. You can no more keep those people in this kind of bondage than your ancestors could be kept in the bondage of European institutions.

I have heard here for a week little but citations of conditions that exist in Europe. Every precedent that has been stated has been a European precedent—the forest reserves and policy of Germany, France, England, Russia, and Austria. We care just as little for them to-day and for their ideas of government as our ancestors cared for them. Senators whose ancestors took up arms against the policies of Europe, disagreeing with the monarchical institutions represented by the Forestry Service, stand up here and cite us to the magnificent game preserves of Europe, to the magnificent solitudes of the kings' forests in Europe.

We want an American policy based upon the principle that every citizen, whether he live in the Rocky Mountains or within the borders of New England or in any other portion of the country, has the same rights. We do not intend that our country shall be made the plaything either in economics or in politics. We do not intend that our country shall afford only the opportunity for tours in Pullman cars for the purpose of camping and shooting animals. We do not intend that it shall be used as the subject of magic-lantern slides to illustrate the beauties of untamed nature.

The State of Idaho has more square miles in area than all of the New England States combined, with 5,000 square miles to spare. She has a larger percentage of arable and tillable land than any State or any two States in that group of States. Idaho has more acres of land capable of being cultivated and converted into homes than has the State of Pennsylvania.

There is that magnificent State with its millions of population that would have been a forest reserve if these gentlemen could have had their way. William Penn and those who came with him would have been the lord proprietors of Penn's Woods. But those old pioneers knew how to gain their liberty and their freedom from this kind of control, and I can promise the Senate of the United States that the people of those States will know how to throw off this kind of shackle and to attain their full growth, and take the high place which they are entitled to take, and which because of the God-given gift they are in a position to claim and to hold.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I intend to consume but a few moments of the time of the Senate. On Thursday last the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] addressed the Senate at the closing hours of the day's session. I do not see him in the Chamber now. He was here a few moments since. I wanted to call his attention, if I could, to some things he said which I think were probably said in the enthusiasm of making his speech. I read from the RECORD what I did not observe until yesterday, this very remarkable statement, which I am going to challenge, and I am going to inquire of the Senator from Iowa his authority for the statement. Amongst other things the Senator said:

There has never been in the history of human society as completely organized a crime against the human race as the destruction of the American forests in Pennsylvania, in New York, in Michigan, in Wisconsin, in Minnesota; and to make the crime all the more ignoble, it was based upon greed and avarice and the love of money, which we are taught is the root of all evil. So it has proved in that vast public domain. It was despoiled by the spoilers who violate the land laws of the United States, and the witnesses still stand there in the burned trunks of great trees, in this pathetic tangled mass of burned logs and vegetable matter scattered over square miles of territory that, if it had been administered with wisdom and patriotism, might to-day be the permanent source of a lumber supply to us and to our children's children.

The State of New York and the State of Pennsylvania never had any public lands, and I should like to know from the Senator, if it would not be offensive, what he means by saying:

There has never been in the history of human society as completely organized a crime against the human race as the destruction of the American forests in Pennsylvania, in New York, etc.

I know he included Pennsylvania and New York with Wisconsin, Minnesota, and Michigan.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. TELLER. I yield.

Mr. DOLLIVER. The observations which I made on Friday were made, as the Senator says, in the course of a running and only partially premeditated discussion. Of course I had no intention of saying that indictable offenses had been perpetrated in Pennsylvania and New York, but we had observed in the mountains of Pennsylvania very many evidences of a wanton destruction of the woods which are observable in other sections. I had in mind particularly the destruction of the forests in Michigan, Wisconsin, and the neighboring forested portions of the public domain. I had in mind the occupation of those lands by the pioneer sawmill people and lumbermen, who seemed to have got hold of them in many cases, notably in Michigan, I think, by means very similar to those which have proved distasteful to the Department of Justice in recent years.

I had in mind not particularly an organized conspiracy to violate law, but a wanton destruction of that great natural resource in those States. I repeat what I said, that if there had been wisdom enough in that day and generation, either in the States concerned or in the General Government, to provide for an orderly administration of those forests, we would not now be face to face with what appears to be a total failure of the lumber supply in that large section of the United States.

I do not believe the Senator in reality disagrees with the position I take when I comment upon the wanton destruction of those forests. The evidence stands there to-day. You can ride from one shore of the lake to the other across northern Michigan and northern Wisconsin and on every hand there is a monumental witness of the exact truth of what I tried to say on Friday.

Mr. TELLER. I will challenge both statements. I will challenge, first, that there has been any wanton destruction, and I will challenge the fact that there was any organized effort to secure these lands.

Mr. President, I only want to say a few words about the wanton destruction in Pennsylvania. I was born on the Pennsylvania line. I know all about the Pennsylvania timber, and I know all about the timber of the State of New York on that line. I called attention to it when I was on the floor not long since. There was a very rich timber country, and that country was opened up for settlement soon after the Revolutionary war. But in the immediate section from which I came there was no settlement until after the war of 1812 had closed.

Up to 1840 there was some very fine timber in that section. Practically up to that time there had been no timber exported from very many of the counties in the State of New York and not a great deal from many counties in the State of Pennsylvania. On the headwaters of the Susquehanna River and on the headwaters of the Allegheny there had been export of lumber down each of those rivers by rafts. The Allegheny River folks sent theirs to Pittsburg, Cincinnati, and New Orleans. Down the Susquehanna they sent theirs to the city of Philadelphia. There were seven or eight counties in each State that were timber counties, and from 1840, at least, I know something about that country and the conditions. To say that there was a wanton destruction of the timber is untrue. There was a destruction of timber for beneficial use.

From the headwaters of the Allegheny River, in the State of New York, as early as 1820, and even earlier than that, from 1815 to 1820, there departed every spring a large number of immigrants for the great West. I presume for many years a majority of the men who went from the East into the State of Ohio went down the Allegheny River on rafts. The lumbermen cut lumber, put it in the river, built rafts, and then the settlers went down on those rafts. There were no boats, no railroads, and no transportation except by rafts.

The lumber in those days would not bring more than five or six dollars a thousand after it was sawed. There was a better market for it in New Orleans and Cincinnati than there was up there, and therefore they sent it away. There was no wanton destruction of it.

I object to this, Mr. President, because I know just as well as I know I am living that when the Forest Service take up this question and issue a lot more of publications they will quote from the Senator from Iowa to show this great conspiracy. It will be a great card for them. The Senator from Iowa is a distinguished member of this body; he has been a distinguished Member of the House; he is in the public eye more than many of the rest of us are; and it will be a great card to say, "Here is the Senator from Iowa, who declares that this conspiracy exists and has existed."

Mr. President, I know something of the people. My father was a settler, and he cleared up a farm. My grandfather cleared up a farm, and all my neighbors cleared up farms. When I was 10 years old there was an immense number of farms that had only comparatively small clearings on them. Is anybody justified in saying that the men who cleared up those farms and made homes are guilty of a crime of such stupendous magnitude because they did not have the foresight to save their pine timber and did not wait forty or fifty years that it might be sold to somebody who came after them?

Mr. President, I remember the first sawmill which was built in the neighborhood in which I lived. It was run by a man who had been a captain in the war of 1812. You could go 12 miles one way and 8 miles another way before you found another mill, and if you took another direction you could go 20 miles before you found a mill. For twenty years there was not a board sawed at that mill which was used outside of the neighborhood in which it was sawed.

But, Mr. President, any quantity of good timber was piled in a heap and set on fire, because that was the only way you could make a settlement in that section of the country. By 1850 they had a pretty thriving settlement all over that part of the State.

Mr. President, I have great admiration for the men who went into the timber and made homes. They did it from the Atlantic Ocean clear up to the Pennsylvania line. They came from Massachusetts, Connecticut, eastern New York, and probably New Hampshire and Maine. They were not vandals; they were not robbers; they were not crime committers. In that section of the country where the Senator charges this crime was organized, particularly in New York and Pennsylvania, I will venture to say there are as good people as live in any country, and I will venture to say that many of the best people of the State of Iowa came from that part of the States of New York and Pennsylvania. In that timber country were raised governors of the State, Members of Congress, public men who have made their mark in the history of this country.

I have served with five Senators from the immediate neighborhood of which I speak. We have furnished from that neighborhood governors to the various Western States. If there has not been a governor in Iowa born in that part of the State I am greatly mistaken. I know Missouri has had one from the immediate neighborhood in which I was born. We furnished all the appliances of civilization. For many years we had a hundred school houses, where we had one sawmill. In later times in some parts of Pennsylvania lumber was exported, as I said, down the rivers; some of it was exported by teams to the canal and was sent down to New York City.

Mr. President, it may seem to be hardly worth while to go into a question of this kind, but I know the people who lived there to be as good as any people in the world. They have departed this life, most of them, but their sons and daughters are living there, those of them who have not gone West. Thousands of them have gone West, and they are the best people in the world.

Mr. President, I do not know so much about what they did in Michigan and Wisconsin, but I do know that until 1885 and afterwards there was no necessity for an organization to steal timber in the State of Michigan. Our laws enabled any man to walk into the land office and pay $1.25 per acre for the finest timber that ever grew. I knew a member of this body, who after the war deposited $5 in a land office and took out a patent for 4,000 acres of the finest timber that ever grew in the State of Michigan. Was there any crime in that, Mr. President? The Government of the United States had provided by law that under certain conditions men might take the title to the property. The Government wanted them to take the title to the property. It wanted them to put it to a beneficial use, and Michigan would not be the fine State it is if they had not done so.

The same may be said of Wisconsin. I found the other day a statement that Iowa cut 11,000,000 feet of lumber in one year. I wondered at it. It took me a little time to remember that right across the river from where I lived in Illinois was the town of Clinton, in the State of Iowa. That is one of the biggest lumber-producing sections of the West. But every log sawed there came from Minnesota or Wisconsin. They floated them down the river and sawed them in those great mills and distributed them throughout the State.

Mr. President, is there any reason to cry crime, organized robbery? Those people paid for their land and they had a title under the law.

I have been complaining that misrepresentations were made here. It has been largely, I think, because the conditions were not understood. The greater part of Michigan timber was taken in strict accordance with the law and paid for under the provisions of the law.

I do not know very much about actual affairs in the State of Michigan. I have traveled through it quite extensively, and wherever I went I found a class of people who could hardly be named as guilty of conspiracy against the Government when they did not need to do it under the law.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. TELLER. I do.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am very glad indeed that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] has questioned the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER]. So far as this statement concerns the State of Michigan I desire to say that while there may have been a wasteful policy in the beginning of our lumber operations, while millions of feet of timber may have been destroyed, by fire and otherwise, that should have been preserved and safeguarded for future use, yet, Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Colorado that there has been no conspiracy of destruction in the State of Michigan against our forests, and, furthermore, that the men who took up the land originally from the Government were among the highest types of our sturdy pioneers who blazed the way alone. When they took up this land they were poor, struggling woodsmen who tramped through the forests marking the trees, going often without food, and partially clothed. I know that one of the largest landowners in our State walked without a hat upon his head or a coat upon his back or anything to shelter him for days and for weeks in these forests, carefully selecting his lands under strict regulation of law, borrowing money at high rate of interest, because he had faith in the future value of these timber lands.

I wish to take issue with the statement that there has been conspiracy to denude our forests, and I want to go one step further, and assert that Michigan's supremacy among the States is due, in large part, to the faith of her pioneers.

The Senator speaks of the desolation of a portion of our territory. I can not subscribe to his statements. Wherever forests have been removed a greater, grander, and more ennobling civilization has taken its place. Cities and towns and villages now stand where forests formerly marked the land. If the policy of isolation, advocated by the Senator from Idaho, had been applied to the State of Michigan there would be to-day forests in our State, the abode of wild animals, sheltering themselves in undisturbed supremacy, whereas now we have happy children by the thousands and hundreds of thousands attending schools upon every hillside, where enterprise and law and order reign supreme; where cities thrive and country life is ideal—a citizenship unsurpassed in any State of the Union now occupies every acre of our vast domain.

Mr. President, the land which has been called desolate is now covered with beautiful gardens and magnificent orchards. The very best fruit raised anywhere in the world is now raised where this timber once grew, while commerce and trade and industry thrive everywhere.

I want to say further—it may surprise the Senator from Colorado—that in one portion of our State where forests grew in abundance, where trees were large and valuable, where the forests were depleted, perhaps too quickly, there has come to the surface, as a result of industrial necessity, a product of nature more valuable than the forests which formerly covered the soil. Through the rich Saginaw Valley, its broad acres under the homes of the people and beneath the foundations of their buildings, coal has been developed in abundance so rich and so valuable as to make the value of the forests seem almost infinitesimal.

No, Mr. President, proud cities are our inheritance; good citizenship is our pride. Progressive, happy, prosperous people now busily inhabit the territory where forests once grew in silent solemnity. I do not think that the pioneer or lumberman is to be blamed or to be criticised; I think indeed he is to be praised, for out of it all has come a better condition for mankind, a greater pride in country, and resources of infinitely greater value to the generations yet to come. I candidly believe that the pioneer did our country a great service when he, alone and single-handed, waged his battle with unpropitious elements for home, for schools, for churches, and if he profited by his labor the rewards are rightfully his, as the pains and penalties of solitude and loneliness were his in the early days of his struggles and privations. No, Mr. President, as I said in the beginning, there may have been waste and loss which should have been avoided, but the pioneer lumberman was not a conspirator, but a man of faith and courage worthy of emulation.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I am obliged to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH]. I suppose that is the condition of Michigan from what I have seen of it; and from what I know it is the condition in Wisconsin. I know I have been through it, and I have seen the land from which the timber was cut off, where at present there are farms. I can not rid myself of the idea that a home on a piece of land is infinitely better than a piece of unbroken timber. I remember that from the section of New York where we would be led to believe, if we took the Senator literally, that there was vandalism which would be a disgrace to the nation—there came men who rose to high positions in the State and in the nation; and I remember that when the great civil war broke out there was not in any part of the United States—I will not except any—a greater proportion of the people who went into the Army than from that section where the timber had been cleared.

Mr. President, I want to say to the Forest Reserve Service that they shall not quote the remarks of the Senator from New York [Mr. DEWEY] as applying to that part of New York or Pennsylvania; and I am glad the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] has put in his protest against its applying to Michigan. I have known from the State of Wisconsin some very eminent men who sat in this Chamber and who held other positions in public life. I believe that 90 per cent of the lands taken in the States of Michigan and Wisconsin were taken under the law and in strict accordance with provisions of law. There was no temptation for a man to commit the crime of perjury. We did not have anybody in the Land Office, Mr. President, telling them they should do something different from what the law required. It was supposed in those days that it was the law of the land, and not the rules and regulations of the Departments which governed.

I have heard a great deal about Mr. Pinchot, and I have thought it was exceedingly fortunate that there was no Pinchot who arose in western New York in those days to persuade that great State to turn that section of the country into a solitude for the protection of birds and the protection of game. One would have thought the other day when we heard the Senator from New York talk about it that the birds had disappeared from that State. He said they would have disappeared from the State but for the Audubon Society. Why, sir, there is not any part of the American continent which has more bird life than the farming country in Cattaraugus, Chautauqua, Steuben, and Chemung, and on the other side of the line in Pennsylvania, Erie, Warren, McKean, Bradford, and so on clear across the State. There is a great American college in Warren County, Pa., right over the line, where the stumps were when I was a boy. Now I suppose they have disappeared. There is a civilization there that ought to encourage people in every part of the country, for in those two States, I believe, is the highest type of American manhood that can be found on the continent. None better can be found anywhere.

This [exhibiting] is what we are receiving day by day. Hundreds of pages of that kind of stuff have been sent out by this Forest Service uncontradicted and unquestioned, because nobody has an opportunity to deny it. Who can fight the United States? There is a series of detractions, misrepresentations, and unsupported conclusions as to conditions.

There has been no destruction of forests in the great Northwest except occasionally by fire. There has not been, in my judgment, any wanton destruction of timber anywhere in the United States. When we were in a Territorial organization in Colorado we lost a large amount of timber by fire. Later, after we inaugurated our State government, an attempt was made by the State to take care of our forests to some extent, not as much, perhaps, as there should have been. The Government of the United States did not wait until the forest reserves were provided for.

In 1882, 1883, and 1884 the Interior Department had its agents in the woods all over the country looking after the timber. A modest—a very small—appropriation was made, it is true; but you could see upon the trees notices, "Be careful of fire. When you leave your camp put the fires out." The records of the office show that a large number of fires were put out at a very small expense compared with what it costs now to take care of forest reserves. It may be that they have advanced some. We did not know in those days that the Government of the United States had any business going into a State and building roads; we did not know that the Government of the United States had any business going into the woods and building fences, houses, and cabins; we did not know that the United States could put a fence around a spring in the woods where the cattle, the deer, and the game might want to go; but that is the condition now.

We have now before us a statement, which we have at last succeeded in getting, of which I have had a synopsis made, as to what the distinguished forest preserver desires we should give him two millions for. I am going to ask that it may be put in the RECORD, because the information it contains is scattered through many pages.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, permission to print the statement in the RECORD is granted.

Mr. TELLER. Take the Territory of Arizona. It will be seen that two-thirds of Arizona has not got a tree on it. It has some valuable timber, I know, but much of the Territory has no timber on it. I find here 191 miles of drift fences in Arizona. That is to prevent cattle from drifting away when they have been put off the reservation. I find of pasture fences there are 85 miles. So there are pretty nearly 300 miles of fences there.

Then take Arkansas. The Government wants to put 24 miles of pasture fences in Arkansas. In California the Government has 213 miles of pasture fences. I suppose those who are familiar with the cattle business will know what is meant by "drift fences." They are to prevent cattle from straying and going off. Colorado has 196 miles of drift fences; Idaho, 20 miles; Montana, 16 miles. Summing them up, Mr. President, this estimate provides for 2,046 miles of fencing, and the expense amounts to $259,721.

There is also an estimate for telephone lines. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] told us about the people who are sent out there with their cockades, and so forth. They must have telephones, and this estimate, which the committee were cruel enough not to give in full, but only gave half of it, is for 5,445 miles of telephones, costing $327,198.

Then comes the estimate for trails. In our section of the country we have made our own trails. It is not a timber country, like Pennsylvania and New York. You can ride a horse through any forest reserve in almost any direction you choose without let or hindrance; but these people want 9,983 miles of trails, and they are to cost the small sum of $602,280.

These lords of the wilderness must have cabins in which to live. The average man who goes into the woods can build a cabin which will not cost more than $25, and half the time cabins will not cost that much. The estimate here is from four to five hundred dollars each for these cabins, and here are 763 cabins estimated for. Of course I realize that the answer will be that this is a great extent of country, and it is. These cabins will cost $400,515.

Then they must have barns in which to keep their horses and their stock; and so I suppose the Government is going into the stock business. Seven hundred and twenty-three barns are estimated for at a cost of $59,188.

Then come bridges. One hundred and eighteen bridges are estimated for at a cost of $29,455.

Then they make fire lines. I do not suppose anybody here knows what a "fire line" is unless he happens to live in the West. A fire line is made by scraping up the leaves and making a path, so that when the fire reaches that point it will stop. There are of fire lines 197 miles and of storehouses 3,611. Next come roads.

Will somebody tell me what right inside the State of Colorado the Government of the United States has to build a road? Heretofore it was never thought necessary that the Government should build roads to protect the public lands. That is part of the business of the people who live there and of the State; but now when we build them, as the Senator from Idaho has said, the Government takes possession of them and tells our people how and when they can travel over them; and when they drive their stock across there they are liable to be arrested by a forest ranger.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Will it interrupt the Senator if I ask him a question?

Mr. TELLER. Not at all.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I have seen the estimate the Senator holds in his hand, and I think, if I am not mistaken, the exact total amounts to $2,000,000.

Mr. TELLER. That is what it is.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I want to suggest to the Senator that it is a question in my mind as to whether the $2,000,000 was fixed first and the estimates furnished afterwards, or whether the estimates were furnished first up to $2,000,000. It is very singular that in all these thousands of miles of telephone lines and hundreds of miles of road and thousands of miles of fences an estimate should be furnished which should work up exactly to the point of an even $2,000,000. It occurs to me that the Forester had in his mind about how much money he wanted to spend and then drew an estimate as to what he could spend it for.

Mr. TELLER. I have not any doubt but that that is the fact.

I spoke about inclosing springs. Here is an estimate of $971 for inclosing four springs. In the forest reserves they ought to inclose four springs for $10. But why should they inclose the springs? Why should we pay for putting a fence around a spring?

Here is another item, water supply and piping—for 9 miles of piping, $15,000, and an additional sum of $260. It does not say how much piping is required; but the total amount for piping is $19,210.

Here is another estimate of $3,801 for boats; but whether for one boat or two boats or a hundred boats nobody knows. That is the way the money goes on these forest reservations.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] says if he had his way he would double the amount. He would grant all of this, I suppose, because the committee granted only about a quarter of it. So I suppose there will only be a quarter of these cabins provided for. Instead, I suppose, of 763 cabins, there will only be one-fourth of that number.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Do I understand the Senator to contend that it is not necessary for the preservation of these forests to construct any cabins or any barns or any fences?

Mr. TELLER. Well, I would not say that. I know that you can hardly travel through that mountain country without finding cabins that would afford these people shelter from the storms. The miners and prospectors have built cabins. What is more, I know and I will now state it, though I never have before, that when the forest ranger finds a poor prospector in a cabin he says, "This is the property of the United States; I am its representative; and you will either pay rent here or you will get out;" and then he charges him all the way from $3 to $25.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield further to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. TELLER. I yield for a question.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I assume that the Senator will admit that if we are to look after the forests it will be necessary for foresters to live somewhere within the boundaries of the forest—

Mr. TELLER. Well, Mr. President—

Mr. NEWLANDS. If the Senator will permit me, I will just continue my question—and that it will be necessary for them to have cabins, it will be necessary for them to have barns, in some cases it will be necessary to have fences, and in some cases it will be necessary to have bridges. I will ask the Senator whether he regards $550 on the average an excessive amount to be allowed for a cabin in which the foresters live?

Mr. TELLER. I have just said that I regard it as an excessive amount.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Or $75 for a barn? Does the Senator regard that as an excessive amount?

Mr. TELLER. I have said I regarded it as excessive. A cabin built in the woods for a ranger without a family $500! Why, there are hundreds of men living in the forest, or there were before this system was inaugurated, prospecting and trying to make homes, living in houses that did not cost a hundred dollars, and raising their families there. The average cabin found through the woods would not cost $25 instead of $500.

The United States is a great, lordly landlord; and, of course, it can do things in a great way, but it is a landlord after all. One of the greatest writers on the rights of men declared not long ago that the tenant was the slave of the landlord. While that is not technically correct, yet it is practically so. The man who has command of my means of living is my boss. For a hundred years or more the policy has been to put farmers on these lands and not tenants.

I do not want to keep the Senate long, but remembering what the Senator from Iowa has said and believing that his remarks would be published by the thousands and tens of thousands, I thought it was proper to call his attention and the attention of the Senate to the matters of which I am speaking.

There was a great English lawyer and statesman who said he did not know how to draft an indictment against a whole community. It seems to me the Senator from Iowa can draft an indictment against States and the people thereof pretty easily; and I think, if I may say it without being offensive, without any justification whatever.

If the frauds were as claimed, I would not defend them; but on the floor of the Senate a year ago the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] demonstrated the absolute absurdity and falsehood of the repeated charge of fraud on the part of the settler. He showed by the records of the office itself that it was not true. It is easy to shout "fraud" and say that the public lands are being stolen. There is not one acre out of ten thousand of all the great area that has gone into farms in the West that has ever been gotten fraudulently. We never heard of any frauds in the country until this new system came up, the system of changing laws that Congress had made and that had been enforced for many years, and putting in their place the will and wisdom of some official here, drawing a salary, perhaps, of $1,200 or $1,500 a year, and then getting more than he was earning.

Mr. President, I have had some experience with the land business. I have had experience in the Land Office and in the Senate. Congress was called upon to pass a law and to compel the Department of the Interior to observe the law laid down by the Supreme Court for more than a hundred years and in more than fifty cases, the doctrine being that on a controversy between monuments and calls of a patent, the monuments should control and not the calls. The Department undertook to say that the calls should control. I made a brief and sent it to the Department, not having any particular case. They continued to hold that the calls should control, although one call out of a hundred is rarely ever right, while the monuments could not be wrong. So when I went down to the Committee on Mines and Mining the chairman said to me with some astonishment: "Why, Senator, that is the law." I said, "It has been the law, and so declared by the courts for more than a hundred years, but you can not get it executed in the Department of the Interior to-day." So we passed the bill, but it was months after it passed, and only when there was a threat made to the Department that a Senatorial investigation would be made, that they complied with the law and held thereafter that the monument should be the first thing and the call should be a secondary affair.

You need not wonder that we complain when, as I said the other day, a man has spent a hundred thousand dollars, on a mine and some sheep herder—a man who does not know a mine when he sees it—tells him "You have got to go into court to prove that you have put $500 on this mine." These things are irritating; they are vexatious to the people; they hinder development; and that is what they are intended to hinder. They do not want anybody in a forest reserve; they do not intend to have anybody there if they can prevent it, and while they will professedly follow the law and shout about their anxiety to make homes for the people, they will make it impossible by their regulations that any man shall make a home there if he is a self-respecting American citizen. He must get down on his knees to an understrapper, or he must put his hand in his pocket and pay—which is not an unusual thing—for the protection the law ought to give him and is supposed to give him without the payment of a cent.

Mr. President, I have spent a good deal of time on this matter; I have talked a good deal about it, and I have no doubt that I have wearied the Senate. But this is very important to our people. The question is whether we are to take all the land in Colorado that is susceptible of cultivation and occupation, or whether we are only to take three-fourths of it or one-half of it. The Supreme Court of the United States has said more than once that the Government of the United States holds its lands as a proprietor and holds them for sale or disposition, in trust for the people of the United States. It does not own them in the sense that I own my farm in Colorado, for which I have a patent. It holds them as a trust reposed in the Government of the United States for the benefit of the people of all parts of the country.

Sometimes our Eastern friends think that we have got some special interest in this matter. I can go to the best farming country in Colorado and can find men there from every State of the Union, and I might almost say from all the isles in the sea. The Englishman, the Scotchman, the German, the Irishman, the Scandinavian are there in numbers. They are taking advantage of what somebody calls the "bounty of the Government," but which is not the bounty of the Government, for when they became citizens—and they have to do so before they can take the land—they became a party in interest. It was a part of their inheritance by law.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, I disclaim at the outset any purpose to get into a debate with my honored friend the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] about things which happened in Pennsylvania or New York so long ago. I need not add that I will agree with him that a great many good and great men were nurtured in those communities; and I will say further that out of the gifts of that section to the leadership of public opinion and practical affairs in the United States there was no better contribution than the Senator himself, whose home in western New York I have had an opportunity to visit. The thing that irritates me is that in the debate which is going on here should be mixed up with such controverted questions as the Senator has brought in here to-day.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator let me remind him that he brought it in? I did not.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Yes.

Mr. TELLER. And if it was left uncontradicted somebody might have believed that I subscribed to it.

Mr. DOLLIVER. A statement of mine as to the maladministration of the natural resources of Pennsylvania and New York was not liable to be misunderstood in the Senate. The substantial truth of what I said is admitted in both of those States. I have myself within a year been invited to a congress convened in western New York for the purpose of discussing the very questions which I have raised here, and in Pennsylvania it is a fixed part of the policy of the State to correct as far as possible the errors and blunders of past generations.

My honored friend from Michigan interposed an unnecessary defense, as I thought, of the people of Michigan, and it is only necessary for me to say that the State of Michigan is now engaged in an elaborate legislative effort to reforest the waste lands of Michigan, and that the recognition of the fact that they were the subjects of spoliation on a vast scale is universal in the State of Michigan to-day. Of course it is true that cities have been built in northern Michigan. The city of Saginaw, owing to extraordinary and providential good fortune, found other resources than in the wasted timber land. It found salt under the ground. It found coal and other resources. But it still remains true that the passenger passing along the borders of Michigan goes for scores, I may say for more than a hundred, miles at a time through a wilderness that is not only unbroken, but from the nature of the surroundings is likely to be a permanent wilderness unless the State of Michigan should succeed in reforesting the State lands that have been stripped of their natural resources.

I did hint that there were troubles incident to the settlement of those States in the disposition of forest lands. I do not intend to go into particulars, but almost anybody who will study the history of the separation of the Government from its timbered domain in those States will find abundant evidence that land frauds are not confined to the Pacific coast or to the Rocky Mountain region, and one of the fine evidences of the higher moral level of our times, compared with other generations, is the fact that this scheme of obtaining possession of public lands which did not even create a criticism fifty or sixty years ago is to-day obnoxious to the good conscience of the community throughout the United States, and not at all times without interest to the grand jury. I do not intend to discuss that question.

Many of those who thus accumulated vast fortunes are still doing business in those States, although many of them now live in other cities, going back in beautiful reminiscences over frontier periods when for $1.25 an acre men acquired vast and unnumbered thousands of acres of the best timber lands in the world. If I should be called upon to give evidence of a conspiracy or to indict whole communities, nothing further would be necessary than to cite the statute of the United States which enabled a single man or a single corporation to take $1.25 an acre and go into the best forests that ever existed in the world and buy them outright in vast aggregated areas, to become the foundations for unheard-of fortunes. It illustrates better that there are in the progress of communities blunders made by nations and by States which are more stupendous than crimes committed by individuals. But I did not rise to discuss that question.

I desire to direct the attention of the Senate for a moment or two to a proposed amendment to the bill which appears to me to be unnecessary and against the public interest. It is proposed in the bill that a very small sum of money shall be used in the Department of Agriculture in giving publicity to questions and to problems connected with the science of forestry, and an amendment is pending here to strike that out. It is claimed in the House that the Division of Forestry is using public money to buy space in newspapers and magazines for the purpose of exploiting its work. If that were true, it would be a subject for fair criticism, but the trouble about that proposition is that it is not true, and it may be safely laid down as a challenge without any qualification that no man can show that $1 has ever been expended by the Forestry Bureau in purchasing space in newspapers or in hiring magazines or other publications to print any official matter originating in the Department.

It has been said also, by way of criticism, that the Division of Forestry uses its department of publication to exploit itself, to give renown to its officials, and to give a certain advertisement to its work. There is no truth in that either. Not a line has ever been published by the Department of Agriculture through the Division of Forestry which tended even by inference to advertise or exploit any individual connected with that work. What, then, is this amendment aimed at? It is aimed at a custom which the Division of Forestry has adopted to popularize the work it is doing. Some say it is a strange thing that a bureau of the Government should seek publicity for the work and to give circulation to the results of scientific researches conducted by the Division of Forestry. On the contrary, it is a very common proceeding in practically all the Departments of the Government. So far as I am concerned, I wish it were very much more common.

This Government conducts the greatest printing establishment there ever was in the world, but, without undertaking to criticize it, everybody perceives that a vast part of its work has practically been lost, so far as the public is concerned. The Evening Star the other day printed a statement in respect to what becomes of the printing which the Government does. It interested me very greatly, because I had always thought that a good deal of the printing that was being done failed to accomplish its purpose. This newspaper article says:

Over 700,000 volumes have the past year been reclaimed from the 300 carloads of "junk," accumulated through departmental and library clean-ups, and many tons of the useless books have been sent to the L-street warehouse to await condemnation. Formerly the upper floors of the old Printing Office building were loaded with huge piles of this miscellaneous rubbish, but now those volumes suitable for preservation, distribution, or sale are carefully filed in huge stacks in the seven-story annex to the old building.

It goes on to suggest some methods of their distribution. Not only is it true that hundreds of tons of the official publications of the Government go to waste in the Departments here, in our warehouses, and in our storehouses, but it is also true that a large part of them goes to waste after they reach the custody of members of the Senate and the House of Representatives. There is no library in a town where a Senator or Representative makes his home that is not to-day cluttered up with a vast mass of publications, printed at great expense, intended to convey information to the public, and yet falling entirely short of its purpose, because the publication is put out in a form unsuitable for popular distribution.

As against that a custom has grown up to popularize the work of various Departments. For example: For a long time we have been printing by the ton consular reports. They contain valuable matter. They contain matter of vast importance to the trade and commerce of the American people. But nobody had an opportunity to read them, and it was practically an ineffective use of the public funds until a bright man appeared in the Department of Commerce and Labor and said to his chief: "These consular reports ought to be put before the people." So, by a very little expenditure of money—a few hundred dollars—the consular reports made to the State Department are condensed, rubbish and undesirable matter eliminated from them, and they are put in a literary form and in an attractive form so as to grip the attention of readers; and practically every day from the Department of Commerce and Labor go out those consular reports in a condensed and readable form to millions of interested readers all over the United States. I do not believe that anybody—

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I should like to ask a question for information. In just what form are they sent out?

Mr. DOLLIVER. They are sent out as printed slips, to be released on a certain day.

Not only is that true, but the Department of Agriculture from the beginning, because it has had to deal with subjects the people are interested in, has tried to get the results of its researches before the public in some form more effective than the annual reports of the Department, and so Congress has very cheerfully and very wisely, in my judgment, authorized a Division of Publications, which takes the result of scientific research in all the bureaus of the Department of Agriculture and prints it in the form of agricultural bulletins. These bulletins cover a vast variety of subjects, and when bound together constitute a library of practical knowledge almost unapproached in the contemporary scientific literature of our day. And yet, vast as that expense is, anybody can see that it reaches only an insignificant fraction of the 80,000,000 people who ought to have the benefit of the information.

The Bureau of Forestry, instead of reserving information as to the results of its researches to these bulletins of the Department of Agriculture, has adopted, under the law as it now exists, a very simple and a very cheap method of giving the public the benefit of its researches. It has people on its rolls in other capacities who give a little attention to condensing in a readable form the scientific results of the experiments made by the Bureau and other matter suitable for publication and sending it out to the newspapers of the United States. The result is that the bulletins of the Forestry Division of the Department of Agriculture, instead of reaching a few thousand interested specialists on the subject, are to-day read by unnumbered millions of people all over the United States practically without any expense to the Government. Yet here comes this opposition to the Forestry Bureau, taking the form which I certainly think it ought not to take, of striking out that clause which gives to the Forester the right to take a few hundred dollars and pay the expense of collecting this information and putting it in literary and readable form.

But somebody says this is mere exploitation of the work of the Department. That is not true. It is a publication of the results of researches made by the Department of Agriculture in matters connected with the science of forestry.

Another man says you have no right to use the frank of the Government in sending out those articles. The Post-Office Department says you have. Another man rises and says you have no right to use the frank of the Government in returning to the Department the newspaper which contains the evidence that the matter has been published as sent out. The question was debated here the other day. But, fortunately, the Department of Agriculture submitted that exact question to the Post-Office Department, and their letter is on file stating that under the law it is entirely proper and within the limitations of the statute to furnish the frank of the Department for the return to the Department of marked newspapers containing these matters which refer to the official business of the Department.

Mr. KEAN. Has the Senator that letter of the Department?

Mr. DOLLIVER. I have.

Mr. KEAN. I should like to have it read.

Mr. DOLLIVER. The acting chairman of the committee hands me the letter of Postmaster-General Payne, under date of May 5, 1903, in which he says to the Secretary of Agriculture:

In reply to your communications of the 18th and 21st instants, I have the honor to inform you that it is perfectly proper, under section 3 of the act of July 15, 1884 (chap. 234, 1 Supp.), for you to furnish publishers with penalty envelopes addressed to your Department, to be used by them in transmitting through the mails, free of postage, copies of their publications, for which no charge is made when such publications contain official information necessary to your Department.

Mr. GALLINGER. What is the date of the act referred to?

Mr. DOLLIVER. The act of July 15, 1884.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. If it will not interrupt the Senator—

Mr. DOLLIVER. It will not interrupt me, but it will seriously disturb my time.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I will reply in my own time.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I am afraid, if I recollect correctly the order, that I have but a minute more.

I have here, Mr. President, the publications that were sent out during the month of March—every one of them. They are on subjects of universal interest to the American people. They are the results of the scientific researches made by the Department of Agriculture in this matter. It would cost multiplied thousands of dollars to print them as bulletins and circulate them. And yet it is proposed here, out of this general irritation about what has happened in respect to the forest reservations of the country, to take away from the Department the right to serve unnumbered millions of readers all over the United States because it is supposed to irritate and hurt the feelings of some one.

It appears to me that these publications could not be made more effective than through the public press of the United States. They are gladly received, because they are well prepared, put not only in good literary form, but in good newspaper form, so as to attract the attention of readers. I have before me a letter directed to the Department from one of the great publishers of the country thanking the Department for furnishing these valuable and instructive articles in respect to the work of the Forestry Division. After all, the work is educational. Nobody can be impressed with that more completely than by sitting for a few days in the Senate of the United States and listening to this debate, the character of these criticisms, and so forth. All these things indicate that there is needed in the United States a vast store of definite information about what the Department of Agriculture has in view; and I know of no better way of communicating it than through the readers of the daily press of the United States. These articles are not offensive. They do not undertake to retort to criticisms made. On the contrary, the Department of Agriculture stands ready to welcome all these criticisms, and to discuss with Senators and Members of the House all these controverted matters, and the desire of the Department to give a permanent foundation to the work of forestry in the United States, a foundation that will not be disturbed in the future as it has been in the past by short-sighted criticisms coming from any point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore rapped with his gavel.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I did not intend to say anything in regard to this amendment, as I spoke of it the other day; but it seems to be intimated that because one objects to an amendment of this sort the objection is factious and without ground.

Mr. President, I undertake to say that no other Department of this Government has assumed or now assumes to ask for the permission which is asked for by the Department of Agriculture through its Forestry Service. There has been an instance in this Congress since I have been here when a bureau or Department of the Government did ask for this very thing, and I think Senators will remember how, when the Panama Canal Commission asked for an appropriation to pay for a publicity agent, we all resented it. When it was proposed to put upon the pay roll men who were to act as publicity agents for educating, if you please, the people of the United States to the benefits of the Panama Canal, it was very promptly disposed of in the Senate and in the other House as well.

Mr. DEPEW. Will the Senator yield to me just for a question?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Certainly.

Mr. DEPEW. Would the Senator abolish the appropriation for the Agricultural Department under which they send these bulletins to farmers all over the country?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Not at all. That is what I am in favor of. But what I am against is paying a man to prepare magazine articles and newspaper articles for the purpose of educating the people up to the glories of this Department. The Senator from Iowa says he wants to educate the people up to what the Department of Agriculture means to do. I do not know whether the Senator knows what the Department of Forestry means to do. I can tell him what its avowed purpose is. Its avowed purpose is to engraft upon the policy of this country the German system of forestry, acknowledged to be the best in the world. What does that mean? When it reaches its perfection we shall have upon the pay rolls of the Forestry Service an army of 117,000 men. I ask the Senate of the United States if they want to pay for educating the people of this nation to an army of 117,000 men, men not under the civil service, but under the control and charge of one single bureau chief of this Government. It is an unheard-of thing for a bureau chief or the head of a Department to come before Congress and ask for an appropriation for the purpose of preparing magazine and newspaper articles. By all means give the widest publicity to the affairs of the Bureau, but do it in an orderly way, do it in a proper way, do it in the way that other Departments and bureaus do.

Mr. President, this amendment, as I understand it, is not before the Senate. If I understand the parliamentary situation, the question is on the amendment of the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. WARREN. No.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is not pending.

Mr. WARREN. That is not pending?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The committee amendment was passed over, and is entitled first to consideration.

Mr. HOPKINS. Before the Senator from Wyoming takes his seat, I desire to call his attention to the fact that in Panama they do publish a weekly magazine, and it is paid for out of the money appropriated for canal purposes. It has been very useful. On the line of thought the Senator has suggested, that ultimately there may be 117,000 people engaged in this business, I wish to ask him whether, if that is so, it is not important that we should know all about it by the kind of publication that is sought to be given to us under this provision?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Can the Senator imagine a publication issued by a bureau, or a magazine article prepared under the control of the chief that will not color in some degree at least the work and represent the desires of that Department? I consider that altogether different, Mr. President.

Mr. HOPKINS. I do not agree with the Senator that simply because he is at the head of a department he is not going to present facts to them. I think it is a violent presumption to assume that this chief, or any other, would give anything but the plain facts. I think the publications we have been having from the Agricultural Department support my contention. As was stated by the Senator from Iowa, we have publications there upon almost every subject that interests the farmers.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. And to those I have no earthly objection.

Mr. HOPKINS. Just one word. I have never heard up to this time that any of those publications are colored in the interest of the man putting them out.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I have never; and I welcome those publications. Let the Forestry Bureau proceed on the same basis.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. May I call the Senator's attention to the fact that in the closing hours of the last session we appropriated $125,000 of the people's money for the purpose of distributing a book upon the horse among the farmers of this country to educate the farmers on the subject of horse diseases and the care of horses, and no person was heard in objection to that appropriation, which was very small compared with this expenditure?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is far from the question.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. We educated them on the horse. Can we not educate them on trees?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is far from the question; but I ask the Senator from Iowa if he will hand me the reply of the Postmaster-General on that point in regard to the franking proposition? I have just a word to say on that point.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, before he comments on that I should like to read to him the law as it is to-day:

That any Department or officer authorized to use the penalty envelope may inclose them with return address to any person or persons from or through whom official information is desired, the same to be used only to cover such official information and indorsements relating thereto.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is it exactly.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is the law.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is the law, and this is for a very different purpose. These penalty envelopes are for the purpose of returning to the Department a copy of the matter that is published in the newspapers, which matter is sent out from the Department itself. Now, reverting to what the Senator from Iowa read, the Postmaster-General says in answer:

It is perfectly proper * * * for you to furnish publishers with penalty envelopes addressed to your Department, to be used by them in transmitting through the mails, free of postage, copies of their publications for which no charge is made, when such publications contain official information necessary to your Department.

Is it official information necessary to the Department to return the very information that has been sent out from the Department?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Certainly.

Mr. NEWLANDS. As I understand it, Mr. Pinchot has testified that the purpose was to substitute for the bulletin, which went out to only 10,000 people, the general press of the country by communicating to the people through the press the substance of the information in the bulletins in a condensed form. The Secretary of Agriculture says that he allowed the experiment to be made, so as to ascertain whether it would be effective in increasing the circulation of this information among the people.

Now, I ask whether in that connection it would not be important that the Agricultural Department should receive in return the printed slip of the newspaper printing this information in order to ascertain whether it was a more efficient method of publication than the limited method of bulletin publication?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is about as fair as two-thirds of the arguments or two-thirds of the appropriations in this bill. There is no—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, in looking over the hearings, I found that Mr. Pinchot and the Secretary of Agriculture had presented their views upon this question to the committee, and that Mr. Pinchot had denied fully and explicitly that this press matter contained anything but such information regarding the work of the Department as it was desirable that the public should know.

We all know that this Department is largely a Department of education and of information. The Department itself does not conduct farms except in an educational way. It has experimental farms for that purpose, and it issues bulletins regarding the work upon those farms. It has been the custom to issue 10,000 bulletins. Now, we have 80,000,000 of people in the United States. If the Department is organized for information, is it desirable that that information should go to 10,000 people or to 80,000,000 people?

Mr. Pinchot devised this method, and the Secretary of Agriculture said he permitted it as an experiment, and the results thus far have been satisfactory, for they have demonstrated that this information, instead of going to only 10,000 people through the instrumentality of the bulletin, reached in one single case newspapers with 23,000,000 copies in circulation, and the matter was presumably read by a very much larger number of people. Yet all that was done by simply having a small force, costing not more than from five to seven thousand dollars, engaged in collating the information obtained by the Forestry Service, condensing it and putting it in readable form, putting it in these press bulletins instead of the pamphlet bulletins, and issuing it to the press of the country.

I ask whether there is anything to be condemned in that practice? What is it that the American people are demanding of all else to-day? Publicity, publicity in the affairs of our railroads, publicity in the transactions of great combinations of capital, publicity regarding the Panama Canal, publicity regarding the operations of the Government everywhere, publicity regarding the transactions of our consular service, the needs of our foreign commerce, the requirements of interstate commerce. Everywhere publicity is required. How is it best secured? By the old system of pamphlet distribution, the pamphlet reaching only 10,000 people and perhaps not read by them, or by this modern method corresponding with the spirit of the times by which this information is distributed to papers with a circulation of 23,000,000 copies through the press of the country?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Of course the Senator does not want to be misunderstood as to Secretary Wilson's position on this matter. So far as I have seen, Secretary Wilson has nowhere said that this experiment was satisfactory. This is what Secretary Wilson said, if I may be allowed the same time that I gave the Senator—

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (reading):

Secretary WILSON. There are a few words that might be said in regard to this matter. This work is wholly done by the Bureau of Forestry. In consulting with Mr. Pinchot about it he made the same argument to me that he makes now to the committee, and I was willing to have the experiment tried; but it has not gone beyond his Bureau. The reason for that is that his Bureau is entirely new.

That is all the Secretary says. He gives neither his approval or disapproval. He simply says this is the only Bureau in which it has been tried.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do not recall what I said upon that subject. If I said that the Secretary of Agriculture approved of this method, it is very clear I was mistaken in that statement. But that does not weaken the force of Mr. Pinchot's presentation of the matter, that instead of having a paltry circulation of 10,000 by bulletins you have a circulation of 23,000,000.

Allusion has been made to the publications of the Panama Canal service. It is true that when it was presented and one of the Commissioners was selected simply because he was a press man familiar with the methods of the press, familiar with the methods by which news was distributed, the Senate registered its disapproval. So far as my individual judgment was concerned, my judgment did not concur with that of the Senate regarding that matter. I recognized the value of publicity above all other things in such a gigantic enterprise as that of the Panama Canal; and although we prevented the appointment of a commissioner for that particular purpose, yet the work of publication still goes on. A paper is published at Panama by the Government for circulation among the Government employees; its information is given to every newspaper in the country; and by that means the press of the country is kept familiar with every step in the progress of that great movement. And amongst the employees themselves a pride in the work, an esprit de corps, and a rivalry and competition in producing results have been accomplished that have been of inestimable value to the work of that service.

In this very bill with reference to the Agricultural Department we provide for the dissemination and distribution of the information which is secured by this Department, and this is but a branch of that system. Here we have this provision put in by the House for the first time:

Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be paid or used for the purpose of paying for, in whole or in part, the preparation of any newspaper or magazine article.

It says "the preparation," although that newspaper or magazine article might be of the greatest value in giving information to the country.

Now, what is the amendment proposed by the Senate committee? It is simply that the word "publication" shall be substituted for "preparation," and that nothing shall be paid for publication. We have the honor of Mr. Pinchot for the statement that never a dollar has been paid for publication, and that circulation amongst 23,000,000 readers has been secured by the newspapers disseminating this valuable information at the expense of a paltry sum of $5,000 or $7,000 in securing capable men to collate and condense and give out the information collected by the Department.

It seems to me that our action should not be confined simply to substituting the word "publication" for "preparation," but that we should strike out the entire proviso and leave this bureau like all the other bureaus of the Department, with the right to make publications as it sees fit regarding the giving of this public information, leaving the method and the proportion of the expense to be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.

Mr. FULTON. Does the Senator know of any other Department, and if so I would be glad to have him name it, which is exercising the privilege sought here?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do not know, but I would be very glad to see them all adopt it, for if we could get in circulation instead of 10,000 copies by bulletins 23,000,000 copies by the newspapers, and at a trifling expense, I would gladly substitute it.

Mr. FULTON. I observe the Secretary of Agriculture says that it is not the practice in his Department except that he has permitted it to be exercised by this particular Bureau.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Nevada has expired.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President—

Mr. FULTON. I supposed I had the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon had the floor with the consent of the Senator from Nevada. The Senator from Massachusetts has the floor in his own right.

Mr. FULTON. If I had the floor, I should gladly yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator is very kind. I should like to answer the Senator's question.

Mr. FULTON. All right.

Mr. LODGE. This habit of publication is certainly not uncommon in the Geological Survey. Within a very short time the Geological Survey published the results of its investigations on the subject of noncombustible materials of construction at the time of the Collinwood schoolhouse fire in Ohio and the Boyertown (Pa.) theater fire, and they were printed by newspapers throughout the country, and were of very great value undoubtedly in the work of construction. I understand that the Geological Survey has given a great deal of material in that way to the press.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. LODGE. I do.

Mr. FULTON. I ask the Senator if that was not prepared in a form of a bulletin such, for instance, as the Department of Agriculture is constantly preparing on different subjects, which are, of course, at the service of anyone who wishes to see them?

Mr. LODGE. The two cases I referred to were certainly given to the press.

Mr. FULTON. The bulletins may be given to the press?

Mr. LODGE. Yes; the bulletins may be given to the press, but these were given directly to the press of the United States. It seems to me that there could be no better way of distributing information and probably get a larger circulation and be a much more inexpensive method of giving out information which is of general interest to all the people of the country on subjects which come within the province of the Geological Survey and the province of the Bureau of Forestry.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I should like to ask if the Senator believes it would be a wise provision to provide a pay roll for a corps of magazine or newspaper writers?

Mr. LODGE. No; I did not know that that had been suggested by anybody, but I think it is perfectly proper to have men in the Department where there is material of general public interest to prepare it and put it in shape so that it can be used by the newspaper press, if they desire to use it. I think it reaches a much larger number than the bulletins and would be in the long run much less expensive to the United States.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I do not know nor will I undertake to charge that this Bureau has abused the privilege which it seems to have exercised heretofore under the permission of the Secretary of Agriculture. I do not undertake to say that this particular Bureau would abuse the privilege were it accorded them by legislative act, but it does seem to me that it is a very dangerous departure, a very dangerous innovation—for it is an innovation—so far as I understand the workings of the several Departments, to imply (and that is what this provision does as it is proposed to be amended by the committee) give to a bureau or a Department—it is a bureau here—the right to employ at the expense of the Government persons to prepare matter especially for newspaper publication.

The mere matter of preparing bulletins that are for general distribution, and can be had by any person who calls for them, is one thing. I refer to giving the results of experiments and giving the results of special investigations along special lines. There is no objection to that; great benefit has resulted from it. But it is proposed now to authorize and to maintain a special corps of employees to prepare matter for the daily press; not only to give the results of special investigations or experiments, but without limitation to glorify and exploit the work of a particular Department and a particular official.

Senators will say it does not so provide, but there is no limitation in that respect. The temptation of any Department official to indulge in that character of advertisement is too strong always to be resisted. I do not know but what this special officer or special Bureau would resist it, but we do know that all men would not be able to resist the temptation.

I say it is a dangerous innovation. I remember very well when it was discovered that the Panama Commission had on its pay roll one whose duty it was especially to exploit through the newspapers the working of that Commission. It was thought to be a dangerous innovation, a dangerous precedent, and it was discountenanced. I think we ought not to enter upon such a policy. If the right be accorded this Bureau, you must accord every bureau the right, you must accord every Department the right; and the first thing we know, every official will have his own special correspondent, whose duty it is to exploit and glorify the particular work. Let them confine the publications to the mere matter of recording the results of experiments, of investigations, and let them be on file, open to everybody alike, accessible to all newspapers and to all citizens. That is as far, it seems to me, as the Government should go.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Oregon, in my judgment, is laboring under a misapprehension. In the first place, in the organic law that established the Agricultural Department the following language was used:

To acquire and diffuse among the people of the United States useful information on subjects connected with agriculture in the most general and comprehensive sense of that word.

There is what is expected of the Department of Agriculture, and the Department of Agriculture has proceeded and is proceeding under the organic act creating it to publish and diffuse such information as it sees proper.

Mr. FULTON. Will the Senator allow me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. Does not the Senator think there is a very great difference between recording simply the results of an experiment or an investigation and publishing it in the form of bulletins and preparing an especial newspaper article in readable form and in attractive newspaper form detailing and exalting the work the Department is doing? One is a newspaper article designed to attract attention. The other is a mere plain statement of the results of an investigation.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, this bogie-man assumption of what is going to be done, or what the Forestry Service is going to do, and what act it is going to commit that is reprehensible, we will take care of in the future when we reach it. What is before the Senate now is a proviso in an act to authorize printing—not an act to authorize printing and diffusion of knowledge. That the Department already has. It is within its rights; it is acting under its rights; it is sending out "useful information" in such form as it may see fit—whether as bulletins, newspaper items, or newspaper or magazine articles—and no question is made against it; but in this bill as it comes from the other House—as the result of an amendment evidently put in on the floor by somebody who was afraid of a shadow—there is this proviso:

Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be paid or used for the purpose of paying for in whole or in part the preparation of any newspaper or magazine article.

Now, the plain intent, as it appears to me, was to provide only that the Department should not pay for any articles that were intended to be inserted in newspapers or magazines. They went a little further in the House and proposed also to cut out "preparation" of them; but if you take the language as it appears here, the Department would perhaps have no right to issue bulletins any part of which might later be used by newspapers or magazines. Hence this amendment offered by my colleague [Mr. CLARK of Wyoming] ought not to prevail. The Department has had the right and has been acting under its right in sending out this information as it saw fit. The House sends us a provision which we propose only to temper down sufficiently so that in the future when these articles are prepared they may be used by the newspapers, if the newspapers wish to use them, free of cost to the Department.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, it has been conceded that under the provisions of the law the Agricultural Department and other Departments of the Government may issue books, pamphlets, and other publications respecting their work. It therefore, of course, is conceded that some person within those Departments may prepare those books, those pamphlets, or those reports; and if a book or pamphlet, a chapter of it. But if this is conceded, the whole case is conceded.

What difference in principle is there in preparing an article for a magazine or a newspaper, on the one hand, or a chapter in a book, upon the other hand? There is no difference in principle, but there is a difference in results. One is not effective and the other is not effective for the purposes for which both are done. In the language of the law, both are done for the purpose of diffusing knowledge.

On the last day of the last session we appropriated unanimously $125,000 of the people's money to distribute among the farmers of this country a book upon the diseases of the horse, for the avowed purpose, using the language of the committee and of the Senator who reported the resolution, of educating the farmers of this country upon the care of the horse. No person objected to that. And if a book on the horse, of course a book on trees is permissible. But a book is worthless compared with the effectiveness of the same matter in a newspaper or a magazine. So that this reductio ad absurdum shows that while there is absolutely no difference in principle, there is infinite difference in effect, and, therefore, no point to the proposition that this Department should not be allowed to put out among the people information concerning forestry, how to take care of our forests, and, in general, how to contribute to that great general movement, which is to-day the largest domestic movement we have—the conservation of our natural resources.

If Senators concede that the Department has a right to print and the Government to distribute a book which will not be effective, it certainly must be admitted that it can publish magazine and newspaper articles which will be effective.

What is the purpose of putting it in type? It is to reach the people; and when one method does not reach the people, why do Senators not complain of that, and when another method does reach the people, why do Senators complain of that?

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK], to whom I, in common with all Senators, always listen with the keenest possible interest, because he is always as earnest as he is informed, spoke about an imaginary 117,000 men. That, of course, is method of speech with which we are becoming familiar—that if we employ one man for this or that purpose now, we may employ a million hereafter. That is attractive at first blush, but nonsense on analysis. Since I have learned that we only have about 2,000 men now employed in the Forest Service, on which the Senator bases his estimates of 117,000 men, I am reminded of Falstaff's famous story of his combat, where eleven men in buckram grew out of one; and even that one, as we know from Shakespeare, did not really exist. But suppose we have in the future, ten years, twenty years, or a hundred years from now, because the Senator will not say that a less time will suffice to create these 117,000 preservers of our natural resources—suppose that was in immediate contemplation, what would be the saving to this country?

Mr. President, eight years ago, if I am not mistaken—and if I am, Senators who live in the region can tell me—there was a dreadful forest fire in the State of Washington, one of the kind with which Senators from the West and from various other sections are familiar. That one fire destroyed in two weeks $12,000,000 worth of stumpage, the property of the people of the United States. That much was found and ascertained and admitted, as well as many millions more estimated. There was another fire, I believe, when within nearly the same space of time $50,000,000 worth of property was consumed.

Mr. President, since this Forestry Service has been established, in all the forest reserves of this entire Republic only $76,000 worth of property was destroyed last year; and last year when this question was up I was informed by a Senator from the West that for the last five years the West had been free from smoke.

Mr. President, this is only said with reference to the attack of the Senator from Wyoming upon the work of this Bureau, upon the ground that it is going to create sometime in the indefinite future an enormous army of what? Of property preservers; and I have shown by these signal illustrations that exist within our own present contemporaneous knowledge that even if we had them to-day, nevertheless the fire that has occurred in a single part of the country would pay their salaries for fifty years to come. So that even if we were living a hundred years hence, and even if this army of property preservers were upon the ground now, nevertheless our present experience shows that it would be the highest possible economy.

Mr. President, something has been said about the sending out of this matter. I have shown that there is absolutely no difference in principle between this and a book, except that in practice this is effective and the other is not. The Washington correspondents, men trained to the work, who take this matter, know absolutely all about its source. There is nothing surreptitious; there is not even the element of "the bribery of flattery" in the thing; no man is paid for it; but instead of giving it out in the form of a book, which nobody reads, they give it out in the form of short newspaper notices, which everybody reads.

I make bold to say, Mr. President, that if there is one subject of a material and immediate nature upon which the American people need to be educated and want to be educated it is the question of the preservation and care of our forests.

Do Senators imagine for a moment that the newspapers would print this merely to fill space? No; their space is too valuable. The newspapers print it because it is the kind of matter which their readers want to read, and their readers want to read it because their readers want to know it, and they ought to know it.

I doubt if there is a man upon this floor or in this country who will not immediately admit, when the question is presented, that one of the gravest mistakes we, as a people, have made has been the wanton destruction of our great natural wealth; and that first and foremost in that great march of ruthless destruction has been the slaughtering of our forests, not alone in the West, where every man who has traveled there has seen entire mountains denuded of trees belonging to you and to me and to all the people by men who sawed them into lumber and put the proceeds into their pockets. They have also been destroyed in other sections by reason of the want of education. I know a State—I have in mind now two of them—where the black walnut that formerly covered its hills and its valleys, and even in some instances its plains, has absolutely disappeared, with the result not only of the destruction of their timber supply, but with the gravest possible consequences to their agriculture itself. That is what causes our droughts. That is why our streams are not running bank full and even all the time, but sometimes in torrential flood and at other times dry, so that you may use them for paths.

So, Mr. President, if there is one subject upon which people need to be educated it is this; and if there is one way which is effective it is the modern way of printing this information in a newspaper or magazine, which no man can say differs in principle from the publication of a book, which Senators themselves admit is perfectly proper.

For some time I have been impressed, as I think the whole country has been impressed, with the fact that of all the Departments of this Government, the one that has created more wealth, that has added more to the resources of this people than any other Department—yes, than all the other Departments put together—is the Agricultural Department, at the head of which is Mr. James Wilson, of Iowa, untiring, resourceful, vigilant, and inventive in finding methods to rid the land of agricultural pests that destroy the crops, and of creating methods that provide new crops for the people. And Secretary Wilson's work is crowned by the splendid services of Forester Pinchot acting under his great chief.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. WARREN. I move to lay the pending amendment on the table, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will first be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 25, line 11, the committee propose to strike out the word "preparation" and insert the word "publication," so as to make the proviso read:

Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be paid or used for the purpose of paying for, in whole or in part, the publication of any newspaper or magazine article.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] to lay the amendment on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to be inserted at the end of line 12, page 25.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 25, after line 12, it is proposed to insert:

Nor shall any article be prepared or published by any officer or employee of the Government of the United States, directly or indirectly, advocating legislation or an increase of an appropriation by Congress, except in the form of estimates and reports required by law; and any officer or employee violating the terms of this proviso shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be fined not more than $500 for each offense.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Let that amendment be again stated, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again stated.

The Secretary again read the amendment of Mr. CARTER.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the course of this debate—

Mr. WARREN. I will say to the Senator that I shall make the point of order on the amendment, but will withhold it for the present. I say this in order that he may know what I intend to do.

Mr. CARTER. Perhaps the chairman of the committee will withhold his point of order—

Mr. WARREN. I do withhold it, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. CARTER (continuing). Finally and fully when hearing the persuasive reasons for the adoption of this amendment. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, the course of this debate has indicated that certain Senators believe that the appropriation here being made will be used for the purpose of swelling the appropriation of next year; will be used for a propaganda looking to the employment of new forces and the expenditure of additional sums of money—a propaganda, too, conducted at the expense of the United States. I am one of those who believe that the officers of this Government acting through the Executive Departments are charged with the execution of the law, and not the advocacy of the increase of their own compensation or the employment of additional force. I think it would be little short of a scandal to permit a corps of correspondents to be installed anywhere at the expense of the United States for the purpose of advocating the loot of the Treasury of the United States. Many of these appropriations called for from time to time are needless and unnecessary, and therefore constitute a certain form of public plunder. The executive officer should be confined directly to that which his oath calls upon him to do—to execute the law. Instead of that, unhappily, in this country there has grown up a habit, Mr. President, of executive officers, paid by the United States for the dedication of their whole time to the public service, engaging in a widespread propaganda looking to the increase of force, the increase of pay, the increase of appropriations for every purpose that may be suggested to the executive mind as desirable, if not useful.

The Constitution and the law contemplate the submission of estimates and communications to Congress in a regular and orderly fashion. Under the Constitution the President may address us on the state of the Union, or in detail relating to it. Under the law the Secretary of the Treasury is required to furnish estimates of the sums needed for the public service. In addition to these two regular manners of reaching the ear of Congress, we have the great, enlightened public press of the country, not financially interested in a direct sense, but impelled only by the public good to advocate such measures as seem to be inclined to conduce to the public welfare. But, in addition to that, we have grown to be the victims of a vicious system, under which the men on the pay roll of the country, using the time of the public, likewise begin to importune Congress for a change of law, for an increase of appropriations, and for an additional loot on the Public Treasury; and it is that class of vicious tendency I seek by this amendment to check and forestall.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I will have no differences with the Senator upon what he wishes to reach, but in my judgment this is neither the time nor place to reach it. I do not know why we should legislate in that way in this particular place and at this particular time on an appropriation for the Forestry Service. It casts an unwarranted shadow of suspicion upon the Forestry Bureau.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the Senator will observe that the clause containing the amendment just voted down is as follows:

Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be paid or used for the purpose of paying for, in whole or in part, the preparation or publication of any newspaper or magazine article.

Senators believed that it was wrong for the Government to pay for the preparation of such matter. I do not so think, because I think that any knowledge within the legitimate scope of Government officers should be diffused amongst the people.

Mr. WARREN. If I may interrupt the Senator, when he obtained the floor I was about to offer an amendment to cover the same ground. Possibly had I offered it and had it been read, the Senator would have been satisfied with it. I want to say that my views on this question should not be judged entirely upon the motion made to lay the amendment on the table. I only did so to offer something in its place.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President the suggestion of the Senator was that this amendment at this place was not germane. It must be put in at some place and at some time if we desire to properly guard the Public Treasury.

Mr. WARREN. My objection to that is that it is general legislation that ought to be embraced in a separate measure and framed so as to apply to all appropriation bills.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, it is only a clause protecting an appropriation from improper use. I am perfectly willing to make the amendment apply to this specific appropriation; but I think, upon reflection, the Senator will readily realize that if the amendment is a good restraint to apply to this appropriation, it should be extended along the entire line of Government appropriations.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator withhold action upon his amendment until I may offer the amendment to this paragraph, which I intend to offer on behalf of the committee?

Mr. CARTER. I will for that purpose. I supposed the amendment was completed.

Mr. WARREN. I offer the proviso which I send to the desk in place of the proviso at the end of the paragraph which terminates in line 12, page 25.

Mr. CARTER. Does the Senator offer it as a substitute?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. I will withdraw my amendment for the time being, pending the perfection of the text.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 25 it is proposed to strike out the proviso beginning in line 9 and ending in line 12 and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be paid or used for the purpose of paying for, in whole or in part, the preparation or publication of any newspaper or magazine article, but this shall not prevent the giving out to all persons without discrimination, including newspaper and magazine writers and publishers, of any facts or official information of value to the public.

Mr. WARREN. I know of no objection that anybody can make to that amendment.

Mr. CARTER. I have no objection to that substitute.

Mr. GALLINGER. I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire proposes an amendment to the amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the proposed amendment the following:

And provided further, That no official frank shall be used by said Service for the return of newspapers in which matter sent out from the Bureau has been printed.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] is one of those experienced Senators who know whether an amendment like that is in order or not. It seems to me that it is not in order on this bill to amend the franking privilege law or to change the franking privilege in any way. If the Bureau has that right now, then it is a change to take away that right. I think I shall have to make the point of order against the amendment on the ground that it is legislation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is the Senator's point of order?

Mr. WARREN. The point of order is that it proposes to change existing law and is general legislation.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, "a change in existing law" does not apply to the Senate. I think it is no more general legislation than what the Senator proposes in his own amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, a few moments ago when I started to make a remark my time expired. I will make it now.

The proposed amendment does not change existing law, but it serves notice upon this and every other Department that they must no longer violate the existing law; and if the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] will allow me, as he has the specific ruling of the Post-Office Department upon this very thing, I will read it. The ruling of the Post-Office Department under the law is quoted by the Bureau of Forestry as justifying the practice. I should like the attention of Senators to this proposition. The ruling of the Post-Office Department, under Postmaster-General Payne, upon which it is sought to justify the principle of having returned to the Bureau copies of the material sent out to newspapers, is as follows:

It is perfectly proper for you to furnish publishers with penalty envelopes addressed to your Department, to be used by them in transmitting through the mails, free of postage, copies of their publications for which no charge is made when such publications contain official information necessary to your Department.

The only information they send back is a copy of the article or the information already furnished by the Department to that particular newspaper, I suppose for the purpose of finding out whether or not the newspaper to whom they sent the article had complied with their request for publication or had published it without their request.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. In other words, if the Senator will permit me, to find out whether the information has been effective and has accomplished its purpose. I will ask the Senator, if it is lawful, in the first place, to send information out, is it not lawful, in the second place, to find out whether the information has done its work?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Certainly not; no more than the Senator has the right, in corresponding with one of his constituents on public matters, to send a franked envelope to bring the reply back, although it may involve official business.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator will withdraw that analogy after he thinks a moment, because the law does not give any of us the right to have any matter returned under frank; and in this instance the law does give a right to have it returned under frank.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Let me ask the Senator this question: Does he think that the return of an article in hac verbis, which has been sent out by the Bureau to correspondents, contains official information necessary to the Department?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator asks me a question, and I will answer it at once. In my judgment, emphatically yes; because the information necessary to the Department, above all other things, is whether or not the information originally sent out has done its work. How could a Department know whether it was accomplishing what under the law it proposed to accomplish unless it had precisely that information? They are the perfect parts of one syllogism.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, in the first place, there is a misapprehension abroad in regard to the character of these articles. I raised the question as to the use of this frank on Saturday, and I believe I raised it in reference to articles that did not purport to be official, that had no official stamp whatever, not signed by any official of the Government of the United States—articles in the shape of editorials or matter to go into the local columns of the newspapers, and there was not anything about them to indicate that they were official; and the one that was handed over to me by a newspaper publisher did not claim to be official. It was for articles written in the interest of the Service along various lines and published, some of them as editorials in order to save the editors writing editorials themselves, and others being published in the news columns, that the franks were sent; so that they do not come within a mile of the provisions of the act of Congress upon which Senators have relied.

Mr. WARREN. The law is as follows:

It shall be lawful for all officers of the United States Government, not including Members of Congress, and the Smithsonian Institute, the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, and the Bureau of the American Republics, established in Washington, to transmit through the mail, free of postage, any letters, packages, or other matters relating exclusively to the business of the Government of the United States (or of such institution, Home, or Bureau): Provided, That every such letter or package to entitle it to pass free shall bear over the words "Official business" an indorsement showing also the name of the Department, and, if from a bureau or office (or officer), the names of the Department and bureau or office (or officer), as the case may be, whence transmitted (with a statement of the penalty for their misuse). And if any person shall make use of any such official envelope to avoid the payment of postage on his private letter, package, or other matter in the mail, the person so offending shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and subject to a fine of $300, to be prosecuted in any court of competent jurisdiction.

Then follows section 2:

2. * * * Any Department or officer authorized to use the penalty envelope may inclose them with return address to any person or persons from or through whom official information is desired, the same to be used only to cover such official information and indorsements relating thereto. * * *

3. * * * This act shall not extend or apply to * * * officers who receive a fixed allowance as compensation for their services, including expenses of postage. * * *

It seems to me, Mr. President, that the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire to the amendment proposed by me is clearly general legislation.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, if I am within the rule, I would call attention to an item or two here in the report of this Department for 1907 which will probably throw some light on this question. I read from page 290:

Publication of results, forest investigations:

Salaries—
Preparation of articles	$1,800.00
Editorial review	1,268.67
Distribution	1,300.00
Proof reading, etc.	1,600.00
Printing, bulletins, circulars, etc.	41,516.96
	$47,485.63

Educational addresses, etc.:

Salaries	1,508.74
Travel and other expenses	1,169.97
	2,678.71

That is in connection with "educational addresses." Those are the classes of items we are considering.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WARREN. I assume there will be no objection to the amendment, and I ask that it may be again read.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let it be again read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 25, strike out the proviso in lines 9, 10, 11, and 12, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be paid or used for the purpose of paying for in whole or part the preparation or publication of any newspaper or magazine article, but this shall not prevent the giving out to all persons without discrimination, including newspapers, magazine writers, and publishers, of any facts or official information of value to the public.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment which has been stated.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DIXON. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Montana offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 25, strike out the paragraph beginning in line 16 and ending in line 21 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

And there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000,000, to be expended as the Secretary of Agriculture may direct for the construction and maintenance of roads, trails, bridges, fire lanes, telephone lines, cabins, fences, and other permanent improvements necessary for the proper and economical administration, protection, and development of the national forests.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, the purpose of this amendment is twofold. The first is to increase the appropriation from $500,000 to $1,000,000 in accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture. In his letter transmitting his estimates for the current year the Secretary asked for $2,000,000 for the purpose of permanent improvements on the forest reserves. The committee has cut that to 25 per cent of the estimate. The amendment proposes to make it 50 per cent of the estimate as made by Secretary Wilson.

The other part of the amendment is to meet the objection of one or two Senators who seem to have some conscientious scruples arising over the fact that the appropriation did not specify with particularity the purposes for which it was to be used. This amendment sets forth that it is for the permanent construction of roads, bridges, fences, telephone lines, fire lanes, foresters' cabins, etc.

The present appropriation of $500,000 is for the construction of permanent improvements on a territory composed of mountain ranges and woods of over 260,000 square miles, an area of country as long as from Washington to Chicago and as wide as from here to Albany, N. Y.

There has been some criticisms running all through this debate because of the fact that the forest reserves are not productive institutions at this time. If the Chief Forester, Mr. Pinchot, were so disposed he could to-morrow make the national forests yield a revenue of 20 per cent. But in order to do so, he would have to sacrifice the timber which is not at this time ready for market purposes. All this appropriation gives him is the bare sum of less than $2 per 640 acres of mountainous forest reserves. If the appropriation in its present form was applied to the State of Massachusetts—and I have here the figures taken from the official record—and if Massachusetts, with an area of 8,315 square miles, was all in forest reserves, a rough mountainous country, it would give that area of country the magnificent sum of $16,000 to open up roads and bridges and trails and build telephone lines, and for the permanent improvement of the State of Massachusetts so as to make that mountainous woodland country a productive proposition on a business basis.

I take the great State of New Hampshire. By the present appropriation, based on a pro rata share, if the great State of New Hampshire was all in a national forest, mountainous as most of it is, the Congress would be giving the Secretary of Agriculture $18,000 to open up nearly 10,000 square miles of mountain woodland so as to make it productive and get your matured timber ready for the market.

Within the national forests—260,000 square miles—there are to-day nearly 400,000,000 feet of standing timber. At a valuation of $2 a thousand the present value of the national forests for the timber alone is over $700,000,000, and yet we give the Secretary of Agriculture, to open up that country permanently, containing over $700,000,000 worth of timber, one-fourteenth of 1 per cent of the value of the timber alone. For fire protection, for the payment of premiums on fire insurance on your house or business block you pay from 1 to 2 per cent every year. To meet not only the expenses necessary to protect that vast area against forest fires, but for the permanent opening up of this great country, you give him only one-fourteenth of 1 per cent of the value of the timber alone.

No Senator in this Chamber who, in good faith, is in favor of giving Mr. Pinchot, as head of the Forest Reserve System, an opportunity on the square to show what he can do, can find any fault with the proposition to increase this appropriation to 50 per cent of what the Secretary of Agriculture has asked for. I do not think it is necessary to longer direct the attention of the Senate to what I believe to be the great and important feature of forever settling this annual discussion here, pro and con, about national forests. Do not let us hamper the National Forester in the administration of the national forests by denying him the necessary appropriations and then come into Congress and criticize him because he has not accomplished what you say he should have accomplished.

The extra appropriation called for in this amendment is only one-half of the cost of maintaining one of the great battle ships of the Navy for a period of twelve months. I did not vote for the increased appropriation for four great battle ships because I thought it was the better part of wisdom for the National Congress to devote some of the national revenue to the purpose of developing the internal affairs of this great Republic.

I sincerely hope the amendment will prevail.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I wish to say a word in order that the Senate may know the attitude of the Committee on Agriculture as to this or similar amendments which increase appropriations. That committee is a conservative body. We took under consideration this bill of nearly $12,000,000, and after several days' careful labor reported it to the Senate with a total addition of only one hundred and thirty-three thousand and odd dollars, as compared with what the bill represented as it came from the House. I think that record has hardly been equalled in late years—that so large a House bill, representing so much money, should receive so little increase in a Senate committee. It was the intention of the committee to bring in a bill to which no one could take exception.

It was our belief that we could bring in a bill which would pass in a few hours at the most, possibly in an hour or two, without opposition, but we have been disappointed and have encountered fierce opposition extending over nearly a week's time, and the end is not yet. Therefore, it seems to me, we had better appeal direct to the Senate.

A point of order of course, will not lie against the amendment, because it was estimated for; and since there has been so much talk here and such diverse opinions expressed, I am willing that the Senate shall vote on the amendment without opposition or advice from the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. Dixon] [Putting the question.] By the sound the "ayes" have it.

Mr. HEYBURN. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays are asked for. Is there a second? In the opinion of the Chair there is not a sufficient number up. The yeas and nays are refused.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is agreed to.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Let the amendment be again stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has already been agreed to.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I know that, but I want the amendment reported as a guide for future action.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 25 strike out the paragraph beginning in line 16 and ending in line 21 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

And there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000,000, to be expended as the Secretary of Agriculture may direct for the construction and maintenance of roads, trails, bridges, fire lanes, telephone lines, cabins, fences, and other permanent improvements necessary for the proper and economical administration, protection, and development of the national forests.

Mr. HEYBURN, Mr. BACON, and Mr. FULTON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, it seems to me a most astonishing thing that the Senate should be ready to add $500,000 to this already objectionable provision of the bill. Giving the committee the credit for the conservatism expressed by the acting chairman of the committee, in which they asked for an appropriation of only $500,000, that, upon the single statement made to the Senate by the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. Dixon], the Senate should, with such loud acclaim, double the appropriation recommended by the committee, is indeed astonishing. There can be no reasonable defense of the original sum reported, $500,000, for building roads and telephone and telegraph lines through a country which is never to be inhabited at all, according to the declarations of those who have favored the measure—through a country that is always to remain a solitude. That you are going to equip it with streets and roads and bridges and telephone and telegraph lines seems so absurd, so beyond all bounds of reason, that I can not understand why the Senate should throw $500,000 in addition to the $500,000 already proposed for such a measure as this.

If you want to make this measure or this system, or whatever you may call it, more obnoxious and to emphasize this controversy in every recurring Congress, just pursue this policy. You can make it so obnoxious that it will fall of its own weight. I ask for a division.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It is whether a motion to reconsider the last vote would be in order at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It would not. A separate vote can be demanded on the amendment in the Senate.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have asked for a division.

Mr. BACON. At the time the yeas and nays were called for on that motion—

Mr. BEVERIDGE. They were denied.

Mr. BACON. They were called for at a time when we did not know what the motion was. I addressed the Chair with a view of asking what was the amendment on which the yeas and nays were called for. I am certain that many Senators—and that is true of myself—did not respond on the proposition with respect to the yeas and nays because we did not know what the amendment was. I addressed the Chair, but failed to get recognition before the Chair announced that a sufficient number had not voted to sustain the call for the yeas and nays. I do not know whether a motion to reconsider is necessary where there is simply a call for a show of hands. But I think the Senate would be willing, if it understood the proposition, to go upon record with respect to the yeas and nays. I should like in such way as the Chair may designate as the proper way to reach it for the Senate to again have the opportunity to be recorded as to the yeas and nays on the question of agreeing to the amendment to increase the appropriation from $500,000 to $1,000,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho demanded the yeas and nays. The Chair will again put the question. Is there a second?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BACON. I understand the question is on the adoption of the amendment proposing to increase the appropriation from $500,000 to $1,000,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], who is detained from the Senate by illness. So I withhold my vote.

Mr. ELKINS (when his name was called.) I am paired with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY].

Mr. FOSTER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. FULTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS], who is absent from the Chamber. My colleague [Mr. BOURNE] is also absent. I transfer my pair to him and will vote, I vote "yea."

Mr. MARTIN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. WARNER]. He not being present, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. PILES. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. ANKENY] is ill and is unable to be present in the Chamber to-day.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I have been requested to announce that my colleague [Mr. MILTON] is paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT]. I make this announcement to stand for all other votes on the pending bill.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] and would be compelled to withdraw my vote. I suggest to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] that we, perhaps, could effect an exchange of pairs, so that both could vote, if that is satisfactory to him.

Mr. MARTIN. It is entirely agreeable to me.

Mr. WARREN. I will ask if the Senator from Virginia is paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM]?

Mr. MARTIN. I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM]. I vote "nay."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CLAPP. My pair is absent. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MARTIN. My colleague [Mr. DANIEL] is unavoidably absent from the city. He has a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH].

Mr. MONEY. My colleague [Mr. McLAURIN] is absent, sick, but he is on his way to the Senate to vote. I regret that he is not present.

Mr. STONE. The senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY] has been called from the Senate by official business, and he desired me to state that if present he would vote for this amendment.

The result was announced, yeas 36, nays 23, as follows:

YEAS—36.

So Mr. Dixon's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. I hope I may be pardoned for saying that if I made a mistake in the vote I cast I was following the arguments, as I understood them, of some of the gentlemen who voted on the other side.

Mr. FULTON. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 23, line 18, it is proposed to strike out all that portion of the bill beginning with the words "and hereafter" and including the word "situated" in line 23, on the same page, as follows—

Mr. FULTON. It should be "and hereafter" on line 18, page 23.

Mr. WARREN. The word "hereafter" is not in the bill under consideration.

Mr. FULTON. I thought it was in. Let the Secretary strike out the words "and hereafter" and say after the words "and the."

Mr. WARREN. I should like to hear the amendment reported, but before it is read I should like to state that I understand that the word "hereafter" was disagreed to when we passed over that portion at an earlier date.

The SECRETARY. On page 23, line 18, after the word "Forests," it is proposed to strike out the following words:

And the Secretary of Agriculture may, in his discretion, permit timber and other forest products cut or removed from the national forests, except the Black Hills National Forest in South Dakota, to be exported from the State, Territory, or the district of Alaska in which said forests are respectively situated.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, the language proposed to be stricken out implies that the Secretary of Agriculture may, in his discretion, prevent timber and other forest products from the national forests being removed from the State or Territory in which the forest is situated.

I do not think that any good reason can be given why a person purchasing from the Government 10,000,000 feet of standing timber with the privilege of cutting it and manufacturing it, we will say, should not be permitted to let that timber seek any market, whether foreign or in some other State of the Union. While this does not specifically provide that the Secretary may prevent it, yet impliedly it does so, because it says he may permit it to be exported out of the State in which the forest is situated. I confess I can not understand why there should be any such provision, and I would be glad to have it explained.

Mr. WARREN rose.

Mr. FULTON. Without yielding the floor, I should like to have the Senator explain it.

Mr. WARREN. The Secretary of Agriculture under the law undoubtedly has charge of these forests and may cut and remove timber, or not. There happens to be one State, a very large State, which has within its boundaries but a part of one forest reserve. I allude to South Dakota. It is a treeless country except on the extreme west, where a very small area of timber, a part in Wyoming and a part in South Dakota, exists. There are large mining operations in the Black Hills of South Dakota distinct from all other mining operations, a long distance away from all other mines and a long distance away from every other forest. In order to protect the miners, who delve under ground and do this mining work, it is necessary to have a great many posts, poles, and so forth, to brace up the mines. In this small forest reserve there is considered to be sufficient for that purpose and not much to spare for any other purpose.

In the meantime a sort of parasite—

Mr. FULTON. I hope the Senator will not take all my time.

Mr. WARREN. I will yield my time to the Senator gladly if I use his.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can not do that.

Mr. WARREN. Yes; I can take the floor, and the Senator can interrupt me. But, as I was about to say, a disease, a parasite, got into that growing timber in that small forest reserve. Under ordinary circumstances it would all, or nearly all, have been cut and swept away to cure the disease in the timber. But at the suggestion of Senators and Members of the House from South Dakota there was this inhibition put into the law.

Now, in order to get it in, it was necessary before the exception to insert the premises that the Secretary of Agriculture may in his discretion, and so forth. To strike out the language which the Senator suggests does not change the relation in any way, shape, or fashion except as to South Dakota, but it does affect this one small reservation in South Dakota, the timber on which is so badly needed for the purposes for which I have stated.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, then why not make a provision for that one State? How can the Senator contend that this does not apply to every State?

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will undertake, as I have done, to construct its indifferent language, because I wanted to meet his views, I think he will come to the same conclusion that I did, and that in order to get this South Dakota exception in it is necessary to say "the Secretary of Agriculture may, in his discretion," and so forth. But he has the right to sell timber in forest reserves anyway, whether we give it to him in this act or not. But to strike it out, as the Senator would, from the wording of this paragraph he would leave the matter of South Dakota hanging in the air.

Mr. FULTON. It is very easy to make provision for South Dakota. Simply put in a provision saying that as to a certain forest reserve situated in the State of South Dakota the timber may not be exported from the State except by permission of the Secretary. That would cover it all.

Now, in my State we have 16,000,000 acres in a forest reserve. A vast amount of the timber is merchantable, matured timber at the present time. A party takes a contract, as they are doing there, from the Government to cut a certain amount. He ought to be permitted, in order to pay the Government the best stumpage price, to sell the timber wherever he can get the best market for it.

I think this ought to be stricken out, and then if it is desired to put in a provision protecting the State of South Dakota I shall not object to it.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. President, the provision which the Senator from Oregon seeks to amend has been in the appropriation bill for a number of years. It has a special application to the western part of the State of South Dakota. The reservation there, I think, is limited to something like 1,000,000 acres. Very large mining operations are going on in that part of the State. It has within its borders, I think, the largest mining plant in the world—the Homestake mining plant. A great deal of this timber is needed for the mining interest in that section and for domestic purposes in that section.

Mr. FULTON. May I ask the Senator from South Dakota a question?

Mr. GAMBLE. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. Does not the Senator think it very easy to frame a provision protecting his State and not make it apply to all the States?

Mr. GAMBLE. I think by the provision here it is left within the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture. There has been no hardship to any State in the Union.

Mr. FULTON. Then the Senator must admit that under this provision the Secretary of Agriculture could prevent timber cut on forest lands in Oregon from being shipped out of the State. We have no local market for that timber at all.

Mr. GAMBLE. As I said, this applies especially to the State of South Dakota. The Secretary of Agriculture has never sought to exercise authority or to place any embargo upon the movement of timber from one section to another. There is a large population in the western part of the State, and very large accessions are being made to it daily by the increase of population and by the extension of railways into that section. So it is a matter of the utmost importance that this limitation should be retained so that the limited amount of timber may not be exported, but that it may be kept for domestic purposes, and especially for the mining interests in that region of the State.

When I was necessarily absent from the Senate attending a hearing before a committee, the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] offered an amendment to strike out a later provision. It was my understanding, after conferring with Mr. Pinchot, that the proviso from line 24, on page 23, to the word "ten," line 4, page 24, is entirely satisfactory to the people in that region of the State as well as to my colleague, and I understand the amendment offered by the senior Senator from Minnesota was withdrawn.

Mr. WARREN. I have a letter from the Senator's colleague suggesting that the language be used which we have put in, and it has already been adopted.

Mr. GAMBLE. So I understand.

Mr. WARREN. And the Senator from Minnesota withdrew his proffered amendment.

Mr. GAMBLE. I supposed I was responding to the request of my colleague and the sentiment from that section of the State, that it met the concurrence and judgment of the committee, and the amendment proposed by the committee is entirely satisfactory.

Mr. WARREN. Exactly.

Mr. GAMBLE. I hope that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon will be voted down.

Mr. FULTON. Before the Senator takes his seat I ask him if he will be satisfied to insert after the words "national forests" the words "in the State of South Dakota," so as to read:

Hereafter the Secretary of Agriculture may, in his discretion, permit timber and other forest products cut or removed from the national forests in South Dakota, except the Black Hills National Forest, in South Dakota.

Then the provision would apply to South Dakota. No other State wants it.

Mr. GAMBLE. I do not believe that the amendment suggested, as modified, would correct the matter. I believe the law had better remain as it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. FULTON].

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed by the Secretary that an amendment in the last paragraph of the bill was not acted upon. It simply changes the total. The clerks can be authorized to do it.

Mr. WARREN. That is the usual practice. I ought to have asked, if I did not, that the clerks should have authority to change the total to correspond with the balance of the bill. I make that request now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request will be complied with. If there be no further amendment, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. CARTER. I offered an amendment, to come in at the end of line 12, page 25, which I subsequently withdrew. In connection with that amendment I desire to make a very brief statement before the bill is reported to the Senate.

In offering the amendment penalizing the use of Government time for the preparation and publication of articles advocating legislation or condemning legislation and advocating increased appropriations I desired to have that amendment apply to the entire public service. I think the system, which has grown up in certain quarters into an established custom, of executive officers employing time that should be devoted to official duty in condemning, through the public press or elsewhere, the legislation which Congress has enacted, or in advocating legislation which in the judgment of the executive officer Congress should enact, or advocating the employment of more force or the increase of compensation to those employed, should be discontinued.

I do not wish to renew the amendment as to this particular bill in view of the modifications made by the acting chairman of the committee in an amendment heretofore adopted, nor do I wish to renew the amendment as applied to this particular measure for another reason, to wit, that I have no desire whatever to reflect upon this particular service. I think the iniquitous practice has gone through the public service to a degree perfectly alarming to contemplate. Under our system of government we have a Representative in the other branch of the Legislature from every Congressional district of the country. In this Chamber each State is represented by two Senators. The avenues for gaining information and presenting the interests of the public service are thus widespread, and heretofore have been found adequate in every respect.

To supplement these legislative agencies by a continuous propaganda through executive officers is, I think, unfortunate and should be hereafter discontinued. If it is not discontinued, I think Congress will in the near future support some drastic measure intended to compel the discontinuance of that kind of propaganda.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the question on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole will be taken on the amendments in gross. The Chair hears none.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I call the attention of the Senator from Wyoming in charge of the bill to page 33, line 23, where I suggest an amendment by the insertion of the word "four" instead of "two," making the amendment $1,400 instead of $1,200.

Mr. WARREN. Inasmuch as there was a rise in the item on the line above, the acting chairman of the committee will not object to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 33, line 23, before the word "hundred," strike out "two" and insert "four," so as to read:

One assistant in document section, $1,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole. The amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

IMMIGRATION STATION AT BOSTON, MASS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 13851) providing for the purchase of a site and the erection of a new immigration station thereon at the city of Boston, Mass., which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. LODGE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. A similar bill was passed by the Senate early in the session. It is the same bill in substance.

The bill was read the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be erected, upon a site now owned by or to be ceded to or purchased by the Government for the purpose of establishing a new immigration station, suitable fireproof building or buildings in connection therewith, at the port of Boston, Mass., on the mainland or in the city of Boston.

SEC. 2. That the expenditure of the sum of $250,000 is hereby authorized for the purchase of ground for and the complete erection and furnishing of said building, which sum shall be paid from the "immigrant fund;" that the said building shall be erected in accordance with plans and specifications to be prepared by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department, and under the supervision of said Department.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. LODGE. The House has placed a limitation on the site which may compel the Government to buy land when Government land can be used perfectly well. I desire to strike out the last three lines of the first section of the bill and make it conform to the Philadelphia bill. The words are, "on the mainland or in the city of Boston."

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I desire to ask why this bill should be specially passed when we are to have an omnibus public-buildings bill.

Mr. LODGE. This is not a public-building bill in the ordinary sense. It is paid for from a special fund, the immigrant fund, and does not come under the head of public buildings. We have passed a bill for Philadelphia and it has become a law. This was recommended by the committees of both Houses, by the Immigration Commission, and by the Department. We passed a similar bill two or three months ago. The House has sent back the same bill with a limitation which I think ought to be removed. I thought it would save time to have it done, as the need of the building is very great.

Mr. STONE. Would not this item ordinarily go on the general bill?

Mr. LODGE. Under no circumstances.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the last line of section 1, on page 1, line 9, after the word "Massachusetts," strike out the words "on the mainland or in the city of Boston."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PENROSE. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the post-office appropriation bill.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to me to have a local bill passed relating to Wyoming?

Mr. PENROSE. After the appropriation bill is before the Senate, I will yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the post-office appropriation bill.

Mr. HALE. After the Senator gets up the appropriation bill, I will ask him to yield to me that I may present a conference report.

Mr. PENROSE. After the appropriation bill has been laid before the Senate, I will yield.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 18347) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes.

COMPANIES B, C, AND D, TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I wish to change the notice I gave with respect to the bill (S. 5729) to correct the records and authorize the reenlistment of certain noncommissioned officers and enlisted men belonging to Companies B, C, and D of the Twenty-fifth United States Infantry, namely, that I shall move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of it at the conclusion of the consideration of the post-office appropriation bill.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 20471) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 8, 12, 14, 15, 28, 36, 61, 71, 72, 73, 74, 100, 103, and 105.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 4, 6, 7, 11, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 31, 32, 33, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 68, 69, 70, 75, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 93, 94, 95, 96, 98, 99, 101, and 107, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "thirty million nine hundred and seventy-four thousand two hundred and twenty-five dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Hereafter all commissioned officers of the active list of the Navy shall receive the same pay and allowances according to rank and length of service, and the annual pay of each grade shall be as follows: For Admiral, thirteen thousand five hundred dollars; rear-admiral, first nine, eight thousand dollars; rear-admiral, second nine, or commodore, six thousand dollars; captain, four thousand dollars; commander, three thousand five hundred dollars; lieutenant-commander, three thousand dollars; lieutenant, two thousand four hundred dollars; lieutenant, junior grade, two thousand dollars; ensign, one thousand seven hundred dollars. There shall be allowed and paid to each commissioned officer below the rank of rear-admiral ten per cent of his current yearly pay for each term of five years' service in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps. The total amount of such increase for length of service shall in no case exceed forty per cent on the yearly pay of the grade as provided by law: Provided, That the annual pay of captain shall not exceed five thousand dollars per annum; of commander, four thousand five hundred dollars per annum; and of lieutenant-commander, four thousand dollars per annum. All officers on sea duty and all officers on shore duty beyond the continental limits of the United States shall while so serving receive ten per cent additional of their salaries and increase as above provided, and such increase shall commence from the date of reporting for duty on board ship or the date of sailing from the United States for shore duty beyond the seas or to join a ship in foreign waters. The pay of midshipmen shall hereafter be six hundred dollars per annum while at the Naval Academy, and fourteen hundred dollars per annum after graduation from the Naval Academy. The pay of all commissioned, warrant, and appointed officers and enlisted men of the Navy now on the retired list shall be based on the pay, as herein provided for, of commissioned, warrant, and appointed officers and enlisted men of corresponding rank and service on the active list; and all pay herein provided shall remain in force until changed by act of Congress. Nothing herein shall be construed so as to reduce the pay or allowances now authorized by law for any commissioned, warrant, or appointed officer or any enlisted man of the active or retired lists of the Navy, and all laws inconsistent with this provision are hereby repealed."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"The estimates for the support of the Navy shall hereafter show, under the head of 'Pay of the Navy,' the sums allowed for pay of officers belonging to the line, to the several departments of the staff, and to the retired list; the estimates to show under each head the amount allowed for pay proper, for increases due to longevity and foreign service, and for pay at sea rates to officers employed on shore; together with the total number of warrant and petty officers and seamen of the several grades and designations, including as to each class the amount allowed for pay proper and for longevity or service increases. #### AIDS TO NAVIGATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the junior Senator from Maine?

Mr. PENROSE. I will.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The annual light-house bill is on the Calendar. It contains no appropriation, but does contain limits of cost. It is necessary that it shall be an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill, and therefore it is necessary that it shall pass the Senate. I think it will take only a few minutes. Everything in it has been considered by the committee and everything agreed to. I ask unanimous consent that it may receive present consideration.

Mr. ELKINS. I ask if that unanimous consent will displace the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does not.

The Secretary read the bill (H. R. 20784) to authorize additional aids to navigation in the Light-House Establishment, and for other purposes, and there being no objection the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, I did not hear the provision read as to the Delaware River, nor did I hear whether there was a provision in the bill for the light at Greenville.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is.

Mr. PENROSE. I was going to make the same inquiry as that made by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN]. My attention has been called to the fact that the aids to navigation on the Delaware River might possibly have been overlooked in the other House, and that I should make the inquiry as to whether the Committee on Commerce provided for aids to navigation on the Delaware.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are four light-houses provided for on the Delaware.

Mr. KEAN. Aids to navigation on the Delaware River and also the light at Bayonne, N. J.?

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I think this bill had better go over. There seems to be some trouble about it. It is rather an unusual way to pass bills, and so I would suggest that it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would say, if he may be permitted, that this is not an unusual way to pass bills.

The provisions of this bill have to go on the sundry civil appropriation bill as an amendment, and it must pass the Senate promptly, because the Committee on Appropriations will report the sundry civil appropriation bill to-morrow. There is no use of offering any amendment to this bill, as it can not receive consideration again in the other House.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Maine means, I suppose, that if this bill is to be placed as an amendment on the sundry civil appropriation bill, it must pass in its present form.

Mr. PENROSE. I shall probably want to offer an amendment to the bill, Mr. President. I fear the aids to navigation on the Delaware have been overlooked, but if it would do just as well to pass the bill the first thing to-morrow morning it might be well to let it go over until the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN] and I can examine it.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the pressure upon the Committee on Appropriations from every part of the Senate is very great to hasten the consideration and report of the sundry civil appropriation bill. That is the one great appropriation bill left upon which there may be contests. The committee has been at work day and night and Sundays, and on the question as to what shall be put on for light-houses the committee is dependent on the passage of this bill. Any amendment that is made will send the bill back to the House, and the committee has learned that if it is sent back to the House no amendment which is put on here will be agreed to. Therefore Senators who want amendments put on, if successful here, would not get what they want in the end and the whole bill will practically fail. I hope Senators who want to amend the bill and send it back to the House will refrain, in order that the committee may incorporate the provisions of this bill into the sundry civil appropriation bill and report that bill early to-morrow.

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to ask the senior Senator from Maine whether this bill will be subject to amendment in his committee in case the aids to navigation in the Delaware River have been overlooked in the House.

Mr. KEAN. I will say to the Senator from Pennsylvania that I have looked at the bill since it has been read, and there is a provision for aids to navigation on the Delaware River. I am rather inclined to believe that we can not get anything more out of the House at this session, and I think we had better let the bill pass as it is, though it is not entirely satisfactory to me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are four items for the Delaware River in this bill.

Mr. KEAN. There is also provision for a light at Bayonne, N. J., of about $9,000, although it ought to be $75,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. PENROSE obtained the floor.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I ask that the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to me for a moment in order that I may give a notice.

Mr. PENROSE. I yield to the Senator for that purpose.

Mr. FULTON. Some days ago I gave notice that at the conclusion of the consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill I would move that the Senate consider the omnibus claims bill, which is House bill 15372. I recognize, of course, that the general appropriation bills have the right of way. Therefore, I wish now to give notice that at the conclusion of the consideration of the post-office appropriation bill I shall make that motion.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PENROSE. I ask the Senate to proceed with the consideration of the post-office appropriation bill.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 18347) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads with amendments.

Mr. PENROSE. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be first considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that the amendments of the committee first receive consideration. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads was, under the subhead "Office of the Postmaster-General," on page 2, line 15, before the word "inspectors," to strike out "fifty" and insert "seventy-two;" and in line 17, before the word "hundred," to strike out "seventy-two thousand seven" and insert "ninety-nine thousand one," so as to make the clause read:

For salaries of post-office inspectors: For salaries of 15 inspectors in charge of divisions, at $3,000 each; 10 inspectors, at $2,400 each; 15 inspectors, at $2,250 each; 15 inspectors, at $2,000 each; 10 inspectors, at $1,800 each; 130 inspectors, at $1,600 each; 110 inspectors, at $1,400; and 72 inspectors, at $1,200; in all, $599,150.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 12, before the word "at," to strike out "five" and insert "seven;" in line 14, before the word "in," to strike out "and two, at $600 each;" and in line 15, before the word "dollars," to strike out "ninety-six thousand six hundred and twenty" and insert "ninety-seven thousand one hundred," so as to make the clause read:

For compensation to clerks and laborers at division headquarters, fifteen, at $1,600 dollars each; nine, at $1,400 each; twenty-seven, at $1,200 each; eight, at $1,100 each; thirteen, at $1,000 each; seven, at $900 each; in all, $97,100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Office of the First Assistant Postmaster-General," on page 4, line 22, to increase the appropriation for compensation to postmasters from $26,250,000 to $26,254,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 22, to insert:

That hereafter the compensation paid to postmasters at Boston, Mass., and Philadelphia, Pa., shall be $3,000 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 2, before the word "at," to strike out "two" and insert "four;" in the same line, before the word "four," to insert "not exceeding;" in line 3, before the word "at," to strike out "thirty-two" and insert "thirty;" in line 4, before the word "three," to insert "not exceeding;" in the same line, before the word "two," to insert "not exceeding;" in line 6, before the word "two," to insert "not exceeding;" in the same line, before the word "one," to insert "not exceeding;" in line 8, before the word "one," to insert "not exceeding;" in line 9, before the word "one," to insert "not exceeding;" in line 10, before the word "one," to insert "not exceeding;" in line 12, before the word "one," to insert "not exceeding;" in line 13, before the word "one," to insert "not exceeding;" in line 15, before the word "one," to insert "not exceeding;" in line 16, before the word "one," to insert "not exceeding;" in line 18, before the word "one," to insert "not exceeding;" in line 19, before the word "one," to insert "not exceeding;" in line 20, before the word "nine," to insert "not exceeding;" in line 21, before the word "eight," to insert "not exceeding;" in line 22, before the word "seven," to insert "not exceeding;" and in line 23, after the word "dollars," to strike out "Provided, That hereafter a second assistant postmaster may be employed at the city of Chicago post-office at an annual compensation of $2,500," and insert "And provided further, That hereafter the compensation paid to assistant postmasters at Boston, Mass., and Philadelphia, Pa., shall be $4,000 per annum," so as to make the clause read:

For compensation to assistant postmasters at first and second class post-offices, 4, at not exceeding $4,000 each; 30, at not exceeding $3,000 each; 7, at not exceeding $2,500 each; 6, at not exceeding $2,000 each; 12, at not exceeding $1,900 each; 28, at not exceeding $1,800 each; 68, at not exceeding $1,700 each; 105, at not exceeding $1,600 each; 135, at not exceeding $1,500 each; 115, at not exceeding $1,400 each; 255, at not exceeding $1,300 each; 380, at not exceeding $1,200 each; 360, at not exceeding $1,100 each; 300, at not exceeding $1,000 each; 110, at not exceeding $900 each; 100, at not exceeding $800 each; and 60, at not exceeding $700 each; in all, $2,500,000. And provided further, That hereafter the compensation paid to assistant postmasters at Boston, Mass., and Philadelphia, Pa., shall be $4,000 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PENROSE. In order to make the bill comply with the latter part of the section, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, line 4, after the word "each," it is proposed to strike out "seven" and insert "six."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads was, on page 6, line 12, before the word "at," to strike out "eight" and insert "sixteen," so as to make the clause read:

Superintendents of delivery, superintendents of mails, superintendents of money order, and superintendents of registry, 16, at not exceeding $3,200 each.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, I call the Senator's attention to line 12, page 6. I do not remember this amendment being acted upon in committee. It provides for "superintendents of delivery, superintendents of mails, superintendents of money order, and superintendents of registry." The House fixed the number at eight and the Senate committee seems to have fixed it at sixteen. I do not remember the committee having acted upon that. We may have done so, but it escaped me.

Mr. PENROSE. That amendment was required on account of the increase of the salaries of the postmasters at Boston and Philadelphia. The superintendents had to be raised to this grade on that account.

Mr. CLAY. Does the number of superintendents have to be increased?

Mr. PENROSE. The number at this salary has to be increased. It is a necessary part of the amendment to the bill increasing the salaries at those two places.

Mr. CLAY. It escaped me in committee, I am frank to confess.

Mr. PENROSE. I think the reason it escaped the Senator was that the clerk of the committee was authorized to make the bill conform to the main amendment.

Mr. CLAY. I think that is correct.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I now call the attention of the Senator from Georgia to the amendment I am about to offer, which should have been put in by the committee, in line 17, on page 6, reducing the number of superintendents of delivery from twenty-three to fifteen. The number is reduced on account of the increase above, which will probably explain the matter to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. CLAY. I understand it now, though I did not before.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 6, line 17, after the word "mails," it is proposed to strike out "twenty-three" and insert "fifteen."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads was, on page 11, line 5, before the word "at," to strike out "two thousand nine hundred and fifty-four" and insert "five thousand six hundred and fifty-one," so as to make the clause read:

Assistant cashiers, assistant superintendents of delivery, assistant superintendents of mails, assistant superintendents of money order, assistant superintendents of registry, assistant superintendents of stations, bookkeepers, chief stamp clerks, clerks, finance clerks, foremen of crews, private secretaries, superintendents of carriers, superintendents of second-class matter, and superintendents of stations, 5,951, at not exceeding $1,200 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 6, to insert:

For the promotion of post-office clerks from the fifth to the sixth grade, $321,900.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PENROSE. In order to make the bill conform to the amendment in line 7, page 11, I offer the amendments which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 11, line 12, after the word "stations," it is proposed to strike out "six" and insert "three;" in the same line, after the word "thousand," to strike out "one" and insert "four;" and in line 13, after the word "ninety," to strike out "four" and insert "seven," so as to make the paragraph read:

Assistant superintendents of stations, clerks, private secretaries, superintendents of carriers, superintendents of second-class matter, and superintendents of stations, 3,497, at not exceeding $1,100 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads was, on page 12, line 5, before the word "million," to strike out "twenty-eight" and insert "twenty-nine;" and in line 6, before the word "dollars," to strike out "six hundred and eighty-one thousand five hundred," so as to read:

In all, $29,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 20, before the word "at," to strike out "five hundred and thirty" and insert "six hundred and sixty;" in line 21, before the word "hundred," to strike out "two" and insert "three;" in line 22, after the word "hundred," to insert "and twenty-five;" and in line

24, before the word "thousand," to strike out "five hundred and fifty-six" and insert "seven hundred and eleven," so as to make the clause read:

Watchmen, messengers, and laborers, 660, at $700 each; 325, at $800 each; and 125, at $500 each; in all, $711,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 9, to increase the appropriation for compensation to substitutes for clerks and employees at first and second class post-offices on vacation from $110,000 to $200,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, after line 9, to insert:

That after June 30, 1908, employees in first and second class post-offices and in other post-offices having city-delivery service shall be granted leave of absence with full pay for not exceeding thirty days in a fiscal year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, after line 22, to insert:

Whenever a postmaster certifies to the Department that owing to unusual conditions in his community he is unable to procure the services of efficient employees at the initial salary provided for post-office clerks and letter carriers, the Department may authorize, in its discretion, the appointment of clerks and letter carriers for that office at such higher rate of compensation within the grades prescribed by law as may be necessary in order to insure a proper conduct of the postal business.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 4, before the word "hundred," to strike out "four" and insert "six;" and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert "of which sum $29,000 shall be immediately available," so as to make the clause read:

For rent, light, and fuel for first, second, and third class post-offices, $3,600,000, of which sum $29,000 shall be immediately available: Provided, That there shall not be allowed for the use of any third-class post-office for rent a sum in excess of $500, nor more than $100 for fuel and light in any one year: And provided further, That the Postmaster-General may, in the disbursement of this appropriation, apply a part thereof to the purpose of leasing premises for the use of post-offices of the first, second, and third classes, at a reasonable annual rental, to be paid quarterly, for a term not exceeding ten years.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, after line 14, to insert:

To provide for the rent, equipment, and maintenance of Station H of the New York City post-office in the terminal building of the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad Company, including expenses incident to moving the station from the present quarters, $90,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 12, to reduce the appropriation for pay of letter carriers at offices already established, including substitutes for carriers absent without pay, etc., from $27,835,000 to $27,235,000.

Mr. CARTER. I move that the committee amendment in regard to that matter be disagreed to.

Mr. HOPKINS. I call the chairman's attention to the fact that that must be an error. I think it should read "seven," in line 12.

Mr. PENROSE. I join in the request that the committee amendment be disagreed to in line 12.

Mr. BURKETT. On what page?

Mr. PENROSE. Page 16. I also ask that the committee amendment in line 16, on page 16, be disagreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 16, line 16, it is proposed to increase the appropriation for pay of substitutes for letter carriers absent with pay, etc., from $1,300,000 to $1,800,000.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, before that amendment is disagreed to, I think we ought to have some explanation. I find the House provided for the pay of letter carriers at offices already established, including substitutes for carriers absent without pay, city delivery service, $27,835,000. The Senate amended that by cutting it down $600,000. The estimate—and this is one thing I have not been able thoroughly to understand—for this item for last year was $23,384,700, and the unexpended balance for that year was $112,124.18. The item itself is nearly $28,000,000, almost $5,000,000 more than the estimate. It strikes me, I will say to the Senator in charge of this bill, that that item ought to go in conference for the purpose of considering the difference between the amount we appropriate and the estimate made. I am aware of the fact, Mr. President, that the House increased the clerk hire about $1,850,000, and I have no objection to that; but I have not been able to understand how the item has been increased nearly $5,000,000 when the real amount resulting from the increase in salaries is only $1,850,000. I presume the committee reported the amendment simply in order that the matter might go into conference, with a view and purpose of seeing how it could be adjusted and arranged. But if this item is agreed to in the Senate, then there can be no conference over it. I know that the natural increase ought to be from 5 to 7 per cent, but if you take the growth of the service and add it to the $1,850,000, it is exceedingly difficult to know how the item has reached $5,000,000 more than the estimates made by the Department.

I think the Senator will agree with me that it would be better to let this item go into conference. I am not in favor of cutting out the item placed in the bill by the House for the purpose of increasing the carriers' salaries, but I am in favor of seeing whether that item can be reduced. I do not believe the growth of the service is equal to the amount proposed to be appropriated.

Mr. PENROSE. This amendment was put in for the purpose of getting another portion of the bill more completely before the conference. It was put in at my request; and subsequent inquiry has convinced me that it is not necessary to have it in the bill. No objection at any time has been made to the propriety of the original appropriation made by the House. The large increase is due to the enormous increase in this branch of the postal service. I repeat my request, that the Senate recede from its amendment and leave the bill as the House had it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, on page 16, line 16, after the word "million," to strike out "three" and insert "eight," so as to read:

For pay of substitutes for letter carriers absent with pay, and of auxiliary and temporary letter carriers at offices already established, $1,800,000.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 22, to increase the appropriation for horse-hire allowance and the rental of vehicles from $800,000 to $900,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 23, to reduce the appropriation for car-fare and bicycle allowance from $400,000 to $350,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 17, to insert:

For street car collection service, $10,900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 14, to reduce the appropriation for car fare for special-delivery messengers in emergency cases, from $12,000 to $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, after line 19, to insert:

Hereafter the provisions of section 3477 of the Revised Statutes shall not apply to payments for rent of post-office quarters made by postmasters to duly authorized agents of the lessors.

Mr. NELSON. I should like to inquire what is the purpose of the provision.

Mr. PENROSE. The amendment was put in at the special request of the Department. There are numerous cases where it is impossible for the Department to deal with the original lessor. He is absent from the country or is in a position where he is not at hand to sign the vouchers, and the Department requested that the postmasters should be permitted to pay the rent to the duly authorized attorney or real estate agent, or whoever might be authorized to collect the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads was, on page 18, line 12, after the word "therefor," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That no part of said sum shall be used to pay for the carrying in the mails any malt, vinous, or spirituous liquors, or intoxicating liquors of any kind, or any cocaine or derivative thereof.

Mr. CLAY. If I remember correctly, the proviso—

Provided, That no part of said sum shall be used to pay for the carrying in the mails any malt, vinous, or spirituous liquors, or intoxicating liquors of any kind, or any cocaine or derivative thereof—is found in the bill in four or five different places, and my recollection is that it was to be stricken out here and one general provision inserted in the bill to cover these provisos. I will say to the Senator I have not been able to find that general provision.

Mr. BURKETT. It is on the last page.

Mr. PENROSE. The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads was unanimous and fully as zealous as is the Senator from Georgia for this amendment, but it occurs so frequently in the bill that it was thought the purpose would be fulfilled by having it inserted once in a comprehensive form. If the Senator will complete his reading of the bill he will find it on page 42, at the end of the bill.

Mr. CLAY. One general provision?

Mr. PENROSE. One general provision.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 18, line 18, after the word "dollars," to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That no part of said sum shall be used to pay for the carrying in the mails any malt, vinous, or spirituous liquors, or intoxicating liquors of any kind, or any cocaine or derivative thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 23, to increase the appropriation for mail messenger service from $1,420,000 to $1,560,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, after line 5, to insert:

And the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized and directed to investigate and report to Congress not later than January 1, 1909, the feasibility and desirability of the Government purchasing or installing the equipment for pneumatic tube service, and thereafter operating the same in the cities where such service is now in operation, and also ascertain and report the approximate cost of purchase and likewise of installation and the cost of maintenance and operation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 20, after the word "Illinois," to insert the following further proviso:

Provided further, That the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized and directed to contract for regulation screen or other wagon service for the transportation of the mails between the Union Depot and the post-office in Denver, Colo., from July 1, 1908, and pay for the same out of the appropriation for such service.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, after line 15, to insert:

For rent, light, fuel, electric power, transportation of machinery, installation of plant, and incidental expenses pertaining to the establishment and maintenance of a subworkshop for the repair of mail equipment at Chicago, Ill., $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, line 1, after the word "dollars," to strike out the following provisos:

Provided, That no part of said sum shall be used to pay for the carrying in the mails any malt, vinous, or spirituous liquors, or intoxicating liquors of any kind, or any cocaine or derivative thereof: Provided further, That not exceeding six-sevenths of the amount ascertained pursuant to the weighing of the mail on any route in the year 1905 or in the year 1906 as the annual pay on such route for transporting the mail shall be paid out of the moneys hereby appropriated until such ascertainment shall have been readjusted in accordance with order of Postmaster-General Meyer, No. 412, or until it shall have been finally determined by law that the first recited ascertainments are binding upon the Government for the ensuing fiscal year, notwithstanding any error or wrong in the basis of such ascertainments.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, after line 15, to insert:

That the Postmaster-General be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to readjust annually the compensation to be paid for the transportation of mails on railroad routes from and after the 1st day of July, 1909, upon the conditions and at the rates provided by law, the average daily weight to be ascertained, in every case, by the actual weighing of the mails for thirty-five successive days, commencing on such date as the Postmaster-General may designate each year, after June 30, 1908, and the result to be stated and verified in such form and manner as the Postmaster-General may direct; and the whole number of days included in the weighing period shall be used as a divisor for obtaining the average daily weight. In connection with such weighing and readjustment, where there are two or more routes by which the mails may be dispatched between important points with equal facility and advantage to the mail service, the Postmaster-General may send such mails by either route, provided the allowance for the carriage of the same by the longer or more expensive route shall not exceed the cost of the carriage of an equal weight of mail between the same points by the shorter or less expensive route. And the Postmaster-General shall give the company carrying such mails advance notice of his intention to take their weights separately from the other mails of the route and readjust the compensation for the carriage of the same on the basis of their value on the shorter or less expensive route, and shall report weekly during the time of such weighing the weights of such mails to the company carrying them.

And out of the appropriation for inland mail transportation, the Postmaster-General is authorized hereafter to pay rental in Washington, D. C., in connection with the expenses of taking the weights of mails on railroad routes as provided by law.

Mr. NELSON. Against the matter just read, commencing in line 16, on page 21, and going down and including line 23, on page 22, I make the point of order that it is general legislation. It is an entire change of existing law. Under the present system of weighing the mails they are weighed only once in four years. This provides for an annual weighing. From the debates which occurred in the House of Representatives on this subject it appeared that this would increase the cost to the Government four or five million dollars a year if adopted.

I have the law before me. Under the present system the weighing is only once in four years. The pay is adjusted once in four years.

This paragraph, in addition, contains this provision, which is entirely new legislation, and it is because this whole paragraph is new legislation—it is general legislation.

In connection with such weighing and readjustment, where there are two or more routes by which the mails may be dispatched between important points with equal facility and advantage to the mail service, the Postmaster-General may send such mails by either route, provided the allowance for the carriage of the same by the longer or more expensive route shall not exceed the cost of the carriage of an equal weight of mail between the same points by the shorter or less expensive route.

That is entirely new. It is not in existing law. And so with respect to the next item.

And the Postmaster-General shall give the company carrying such mails advance notice of his intention to take their weights separately from the other mails of the route and readjust the compensation—

And so forth.

The whole paragraph is general legislation, and it is general legislation because it is new legislation. It provides a new scheme of weighing the mails.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, this amendment has been presented by the committee with the full approval of the Post-Office Department after a very careful consideration of the whole subject involved. The correspondence of the Department on this question is quite voluminous, and I will not now detain the Senate to consider it in detail.

With reference to the point of order, I suggest that the proviso to which the Senator from Minnesota takes exception is merely directory, in that it specifies the manner of ascertaining what is to be paid, and thus only relates to the manner of expending the appropriation. If the mails are to be weighed once in four years, that term will have something to do with the amount to be paid out. If the divisor is to be 7 instead of 6, that fact will have something to do with the determination of the part of the appropriation to be paid to the individual railroad company. We crystallize it into law, in so far as the computation is concerned, the requirement that seven days instead of six days shall be used as the divisor in determining the amount due the railroad company.

Some question has arisen as to the right of the Postmaster-General by regulation to correct any alleged misapplication of the public moneys by the use of the divisor 6 instead of the divisor 7 in computing the amount due the railroad company. This corrects and leaves beyond a question of doubt a matter which has been subject to administration for a long time, and is merely a construction of existing law.

If the Congress, in making an appropriation, can not specify the manner in which the amount to be paid to individuals is to be ascertained without being subject to the claim that it is general legislation, I submit that no direction can ever be made with reference to the payment of an appropriation or the ascertainment of the amount to be paid to any individual or company performing service.

I will, with the permission of the Senate, insert in the RECORD the letters from the Postmaster-General bearing upon the subject-matter of the proposed amendment.

The letters referred to are as follows:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., April 23, 1908.

Hon. BOIES PENROSE,

Chairman of Committee on Post-Offices and
Post-Roads, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Referring to the request to be advised with reference to the bill S. 6157, introduced by Senator CARTER, on March 16, 1908, "To provide for a uniform and simultaneous weighing of the mails on railroad routes, and an equitable adjustment of the compensation for the carriage of such mails," I have to state as follows:

The bill is identical, with one exception, with the revision made by the Department of a draft of a provision submitted by the House Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and with the changes hereinafter suggested meets with the approval of the Department provided the Congress sees fit to thereby increase the expenditures for transportation of the mails by railroad routes. The compensation for carrying the mails on each route is now adjusted upon a quadrennial weighing. Such adjustment continues without change in the rate of pay for the succeeding four years. Inasmuch as the country is growing rapidly and the weights of mails are therefore proportionately increasing, it is often insisted by railroad companies that if the rate of compensation is no more than adequate at the time of the weighing—and they claim that it is not—it becomes inadequate for the increased service performed before the next quadrennial weighing. An annual weighing would give a readjustment upon the annual increase of the weights of mails and would appear to be equitable and fair. It should, however, be borne in mind that such a provision would increase the gross amount paid for such transportation of the mails and would also add to the annual expense incident to the weighing of the mails. Under the present practice the routes are weighed once in every four years. The increase in the weight of mails occurring during a four-year period is not represented by increase in rate of compensation until the adjustment for the succeeding term, which adjustment continues for the next succeeding four years. Under the provisions of this bill the adjustment would continue for only one year, and the companies would receive the increased compensation each succeeding year for the increase in weight for each preceding year.

A careful estimate has been made as to the probable increase in the expense for the weighing of the mails—that is, for weighers, tabulators, etc. The following table will show the actual cost for the last four weighings by sections, the estimated cost for each of said sections for thirty-five days based upon the actual cost for the weighing period and the estimated cost by sections for one hundred and five days based upon the same rate.

Weighings.	Number of days.	Actual cost paid weighers, etc.	Estimated cost if weighing had lasted only 35 days.	Estimated cost if weighing had continued for 105 days.
Second section, 1901.....	84	$108,521.79	$45,217.55	$135,652.65
First section, 1904.....	70	$280,517.17	122,004.42	366,283.26
First section, 1905.....	91
Fourth section, 1906.....	105	296,726.66	98,908.89	296,726.66
Third section, 1907.....	105	689,799.21	196,599.73	589,799.21
Total.....			462,820.59	1,388,461.78

From the above it appears that the probable expense of a one hundred and five days' weighing—that is, ninety working days, as provided for by present law—would be $1,388,461.78. This covers the expense of weighing the mails throughout the entire country and covers a period of four years. It also appears that the cost of a thirty-five days' weighing for the entire country would be approximately $462,820.59, but for one year's weighing only. The cost, therefore, of the weighings for four years upon this basis would be four times this amount, or $1,851,282.36. Therefore the difference between these aggregates would be $462,820.58, and represents the increased cost for a period of four years if annual weighings upon the thirty-five days' basis were inaugurated, or an average increase per annum of $115,705.14.

As to the specific provisions of the bill, I have the following to say: In lines 9 and 10 provision is made for commencing the weighing the first Monday in March each year. It is believed in the Department that such a provision would be inadvisable. It has been customary to weigh the mails in the New England section, for instance, in the fall of the year, for the reason that it is believed to furnish a better average than a weighing at any other season. There are a few exceptional cases also, such as summer routes, where it becomes necessary to weigh at a different season than that during which other routes are weighed. Moreover, where the period is absolutely fixed by law there would be no discretion left in the Postmaster-General to extend a weighing to meet unusual and extraordinary emergencies that might arise in special localities. In lieu of this provision I would suggest the words following the word "days," in line 9, "at such time each year."

The bill further provides for the use of the whole number of days included in the weighing period as a divisor for obtaining the average daily weight. This will give legislative expression to the present practice of the Department based upon my order No. 412, of June 7, 1907.

The bill further provides for an equalization of cost of transportation where there are two or more routes by which the mails may be dispatched between important points with equal facility and advantage to the mail service. This will give legislative expression to the practice of the Department recently adopted.

The immediate administrative difficulty in administering such a law will be in the completion of the adjustments with the present limited force of the division of railway adjustments. It is apparent that so far as computations for adjustments and the work consequent thereto are concerned, there will be four times the amount of work that is now required. It will be impossible for the present force to complete that work within the time necessary to make proper payments to the railroad companies. It is believed, however, that this difficulty can be overcome until adequate provision is made in the legislative bill for additional force, if provision is made which will permit not only the tabulation to be done at Washington, but the employment of tabulators in assisting upon the computations and adjustments. In order to clearly provide for this work, it is suggested that the last paragraph of the proposed bill be modified by the insertion of the words "and compensation to tabulators and clerks employed in connection with the weighings for assistance in completing computations," after the word "Columbia" in line 21.

The provision, as changed by these suggestions, would read as follows:

"That the Postmaster-General be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to readjust annually the compensation to be paid for the transportation of the mails on railroad routes from and after the 1st day of July, 1909, upon the conditions and at the rates provided by law, the average daily weight to be ascertained, in every case, by the actual weighing of the mails for thirty-five successive days, at such time each year after June 30, 1908, and the result to be stated and verified in such form and manner as the Postmaster-General may direct; and the whole number of days included in the weighing period shall be used as a divisor for obtaining the average daily weight. In connection with such weighing and readjustment, where there are two or more routes by which the mails may be dispatched between important points with equal facility and advantage to the mail service, the Postmaster-General may send such mails by either route, provided the allowance for the carriage of the same by the longer or more expensive route shall not exceed the cost of the carriage of an equal weight of mail between the same points by the shorter or less expensive route. And the Postmaster-General shall give the company carrying such mails advance notice of his intention to take their weights separately from the other mails of the route and readjust the compensation for the carriage of the same on the basis of their value on the shorter or less expensive route, and shall report weekly during the time of such weighing the weights of such mails to the company carrying them.

"And out of the appropriation for inland mail transportation the Postmaster-General is authorized hereafter to pay rental in Washington, D. C., and compensation to tabulators and clerks employed in connection with the weighings for assistance in computing computations, in connection with the expenses of taking the weights of mails on railroad routes as provided by law."

Faithfully, yours,

G. V. L. MEYER.

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., April 28, 1908.

HON. BOIES PENROSE,
Chairman of Committee on Post-Offices and
Post Roads, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Referring further to the request to be advised in regard to bill S. 6157, introduced by Senator CARTER, on March 16, 1908, "to provide for a uniform and simultaneous weighing of the mails on railroad routes, and an equitable adjustment of the compensation for the carriage of such mails," and to my letter of the 23d instant, I wish to call more specific attention to the practice of the Department in regard to the equalization of cost of transportation where there are two or more routes by which the mails may be dispatched between important points with equal facility and advantage to the service, which the bill provides for as a matter of legislation, among others.

In my annual report for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1907, upon page 24, attention was called to this new feature of economy in readjustments, and I said as follows:

"The elements of expedition, efficiency, and economy are given consideration in arranging for the transportation of mails on railroads. Where through mails are concerned the Department often has the choice of competing routes. A competing route may be shorter than another; it may be more economical by reason of being a land-grant route; or it may perform important terminal or transfer functions which must otherwise be provided for by the Department. After the transportation of the mails has been established over a route and the train schedules remain satisfactory it is not advisable to divert mails merely because a competing route offers to make a satisfactory schedule. The facts that the transportation has been established over such route; that the company has furnished the necessary facilities for their carriage, and that railway postal clerks have been assigned to duty with reference to such mail routing are given due consideration; and if the company carrying the mails can furnish as advantageous service as the competing company it is not advisable to take the mails away from it. Where the Department has the opportunity of dispatching mails by competing routes, one of which is shorter or otherwise less expensive than the other, it appears to be but just to the Government—when such mails are allowed to remain with the longer or more expensive route—to reduce the compensation paid therefor by the amount which the Government would save if the mails in question were dispatched by the shorter or less expensive route.

"Accordingly, the policy has been inaugurated of effecting such a saving in cases of this character arising at the beginning of a contract term and has been applied in some prominent instances in the readjustments in the third contract section."

While it is impracticable at present to give an accurate statement of the amount of saving to the Government which will result for one contract term even, upon the application of this principle to the whole service, it may, nevertheless, be asserted with entire assurance that the economy will be very considerable. This will be apparent when it is remembered that there is a movement of large volumes of through mails between large commercial and postal centers of the country, as, for instance, between New York and Chicago, New York and Washington, Washington and Jacksonville, Chicago and St. Louis, St. Louis and Kansas City, Chicago and Union Pacific Transfer, Iowa, and the middle West centers and the Southwest and West. Specific figures can not be given, however, until weighings are had, the mails concerned segregated, and the weights ascertained and their values determined. The importance of such economy is indicated, however, by the facts in one case in the third contract section, where the Department secured the benefit of an equalization of the cost of transporting through mails between Chicago, Ill., and Union Pacific Transfer, Iowa. The computation has been completed and indicates the probable saving of approximately $20,000 a year. This is but one case, and it is believed that the Department's efforts in this direction will result in a large annual saving to the Government. While it is the purpose of the Department to continue this practice, the desirability of a specific direction by Congress to the same effect is recognized.

Faithfully, yours,

G. V. L. MEYER.

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., May 5, 1908.

HON. BOIES PENROSE,
Chairman of Committee on Post-Offices and
Post Roads, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Referring to the request of Senator CARTER that the committee be furnished with a statement of the increase in weights of mails carried by railroads over the entire country for the past four years, I have the honor to submit the following:

It is impracticable to furnish a statement of the increase in the average daily weights for the entire country for any one period of four years, inasmuch as the country is divided into four weighing sections, and the weighing of these succeed each other annually, thus making a weighing in any one section occur once only in four years, but not simultaneous with weighings in other sections. The increase in average daily weights at these several weighings will practically represent, however, the increase in the average daily weights for the entire country, providing the weighings were held simultaneously. The following statement will show these increases:

Section 1, weighed 1901, adjusted from July 1, 1901, to June 30, 1905: Increase in average daily weight shown by this weighing 908,436 pounds, or 28.66 per cent.

Section 2, weighed in 1900, adjusted from July 1, 1900, to June 30, 1904: Increase in average daily weight shown by this weighing 219,598 pounds, or 24.27 per cent.

Section 3, weighed in 1903, adjusted from July 1, 1903, to June 30, 1907: Increase in average daily weight shown by this weighing 559,798 pounds, or 11.97 per cent.

Section 4, weighed in 1902, adjusted from July 1, 1902, to June 30, 1906: Increase in average daily weight shown by this weighing 1,089,355 pounds, or 69.02 per cent.

Total increase in average daily weights for all sections 2,777,487 pounds, or 26.89 per cent.

This represents approximately the increase in the average daily weight of the mails for a period of four years.

Faithfully, yours,

G. V. L. MEYER.

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., April 15, 1908.

Hon. BOIES PENROSE,
Chairman of Committee on Post-Offices and
Post-Roads, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Your attention is respectfully invited to the recommendation made in my report for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1907, upon pages 23 and 24, as follows:

"The act of March 3, 1875 (18 Stat. L. 341), authorizes the payment of the expenses of weighing the mails from the appropriations for railroad transportation. The weighing is done in cars and at railroad stations by employees of the Department. The results are tabulated in the offices of the superintendents of railway mail service at division headquarters and are then certified to the Department, where the average daily weights are computed. For the purpose of securing the greatest economy and uniformity of method, it is desirable to have the tabulations made in the Department. I therefore recommend that Congress authorize the renting of suitable quarters in Washington to accommodate the special force of tabulators employed upon this work."

I therefore have the honor to recommend to your favorable consideration the enactment into law of the following provision, namely:

"And out of the appropriation for inland transportation by railroad routes the Postmaster-General is authorized hereafter to pay rental in Washington, D. C., in connection with the expenses of taking the weights of mails on railroad routes as provided by law."

This provision might properly be placed under the paragraph relating to inland transportation by railroad routes, following line 20, page 18, of the postal bill (H. R. 18347), as referred to your committee.

In further explanation of this recommendation, I have the honor to submit the following:

The country is divided into four contract sections and the mails are weighed as provided for by law not less frequently than once every four years. These weighings are ordered by the Second Assistant Postmaster-General through the division of railway adjustments, and are conducted by the railway mail service. Weighers are employed from available substitute railway postal clerks and others who are employed temporarily during the period. Besides those who actually weigh the mails, there are employed a certain number called "tabulators," who receive the weight cards from the clerks who weigh the mails, adjust all irregularities, and tabulate the weights that are so received daily by trains upon one sheet for each route, which, when completed, shows the total weights taken on and put off for the whole period of the weighing at each station upon the route. This weight circular is certified by the superintendent of railway mail service and is forwarded to the Department, division of railway adjustments. This last-named division has charge of the adjustments of pay, and the clerks, under the direction of the superintendent of railway adjustments, compute the average daily weights for each route, using therefor the weight circular above mentioned.

It will be apparent that the work of tabulation is essentially a part of the computation of the average daily weight and therefore of the division of railway adjustments. If these tabulations were done at Washington under the direction of the superintendent of that division, it would serve good administrative purposes. The force engaged upon the work could be better selected. They would work under one direction and according to a uniform method of procedure. Being employed at one place instead of two, three, or more, the incidental expenses would necessarily be less. Working under one direction and supervision, their services would be more efficient and more economically applied and the number employed would consequently be less. One special feature about the matter should be overlooked even if there was no economy to be attained—that is, that these steps, which are preliminary to the adjustment of railroad pay, a subject of such magnitude and importance, should be conducted with the greatest care in order that there may be no errors, mistakes, or wrong certifications. It is evident that this feature could be best accomplished by having these tabulations done at one point and under the direction of the division which makes and is responsible for the computations.

The expenses of the weighings are paid out of the appropriation for the transportation of the mails in accordance with continuing authority of law (act of March 3, 1875, ch. 128, 18 Stat. L. 341). There is no additional authority of law required to have the work done and paid for by the employment of tabulators at Washington. The only difficulty in the way is that there is no office room in the Department to provide for such additional clerks, and it would be necessary to rent quarters outside. It was for this purpose that the matter was brought to the attention of Congress in order that authority might be secured to rent such quarters. The payment for the same could be made under the act above referred to. The reason that it is necessary to have additional legislation to authorize such rental is because by the act of March 3, 1877 (19 Stat. L. 370) it is provided that no contract shall be made for the rent of any building or part of any building to be used for the purposes of the Government in the District of Columbia until an appropriation therefor shall have been made in terms by Congress.

It will be seen therefore that this recommendation does not involve any additional expenditure excepting what would be incident to the specific authority to rent quarters in Washington for the tabulators. It is now necessary to rent rooms at some division headquarters for this work. It is believed that upon the whole economy of expenditure would be obtained, as well as greater efficiency and better administration secured.

Faithfully, yours,

G. V. L. MEYER.

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., April 15, 1908.

Hon. BOIES PENROSE,
Chairman of Committee on Post-Offices and
Post-Roads, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Your attention is respectfully invited to the recommendation made in my report for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1907, upon page 25, the purpose of which was to secure consideration of needed legislation to enable the Department to readjust the rates of pay for railroad mail transportation in cases of the diversions of mails during a contract term. The reasons therefor are fully set forth on page 25 of my report and in the report of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, on page 144 of the Annual Report for the Post-Office Department. I have set forth in my report upon the page referred to the specific language of a proposed provision of law as follows:

"When, after a weighing of the mails for the purpose of readjusting the compensation for their transportation on a railroad route, mails are diverted therefrom, the Postmaster-General may, in his discretion, ascertain the effect of such diversion by a weighing of the mails so diverted for such number of successive working days as he may determine and have the weights stated and verified to him as in other cases, and readjust the compensation upon the routes affected accordingly: Provided, That no readjustment shall be made unless the diverted mails equal at least 10 per cent of the average daily weight on either of the routes affected."

This has been prepared in the office of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General by the officer who is charged with the duty of making adjustments and is believed to fully meet the requirements. It might properly be placed under the paragraph relating to inland transportation by railroad routes, following line 20, page 18, of the postal bill (H. R. 18347), as referred to your committee. I have the honor to recommend this to your favorable consideration.

Faithfully, yours,

G. V. L. MEYER.

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., May 9, 1908.

Hon. BOIES PENROSE,
Chairman of Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In examining the bill (H. R. 18347) reported by you with amendments to the Senate on the 7th instant, making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, etc., it is noted that on page 22, in lines 19 to 23, inclusive, provision is made for the rental of quarters in Washington, D. C., in connection with the expenses of taking the weights of mails on railroad routes.

In this connection I have the honor to call your attention to that part of my letter of the 23d ultimo in which I spoke particularly of the work of tabulation and the completion of the computations incident to the adjustments consequent upon annual weighings. The part referred to is as follows:

"The immediate administrative difficulty in administering such a law will be in the completion of the adjustments with the present limited force of the division of railway adjustments. It is apparent that so far as computations for adjustments and the work consequent thereto are concerned, there will be four times the amount of work that is now required. It will be impossible for the present force to complete that work within the time necessary to make proper payments to the railroad companies. It is believed, however, that this difficulty can be overcome until adequate provision is made in the legislative bill for additional force if provision is made which will permit not only the tabulation to be done at Washington, but the employment of tabulators in assisting upon the computations and adjustments. In order to clearly provide for this work, it is suggested that the last paragraph of the proposed bill be modified by the insertion of the words 'and compensation to tabulators and clerks employed in connection with the weighings for assistance in completing computations,' after the word 'Columbia,' in line 21."

The modified provision which the Department desired to be substituted for the lines reported on page 22, as above noted would, therefore, read as follows:

"And out of the appropriation for inland mail transportation, the Postmaster-General is authorized hereafter to pay rental in Washington, D. C., and compensation to tabulators and clerks employed in connection with the weighings for assistance in completing computations, in connection with the expenses of taking the weights of mails on railroad routes as provided by law."

I earnestly desire to impress upon you the importance of making this provision by the suggested modification. It would be impossible to complete the computations incident to annual weighings with the very limited force in the division of railway adjustments. If it is made clear, however, by this provision of law that the Department can employ the tabulators engaged in tabulating the weights upon the completion of the computations, which are under the direction of the superintendent of railway adjustments, there will be no difficulty in completing the work. I assume that it was an oversight in not changing this paragraph, and I am, therefore, sending this in the earnest hope that the substitution can be made on the floor of the Senate when the bill comes up for consideration.

Faithfully, yours,

G. V. L. MEYER.

Mr. BURKETT. I should like to ask the Senator a question before he sits down. The House provision, at the top of page 21, seems to be an attempt to straighten out the divisor proposition by providing that hereafter only six-sevenths of the amount shall be paid. Am I correct in my understanding that that is what the House attempted to do in that provision?

Mr. CARTER. That seems to have been the purpose of the bill as it passed the House.

Mr. BURKETT. Then I should like to ask the Senator another question. As I understand it, although I have not the law before me, the mails heretofore have been weighed for a hundred and five days, instead of thirty-five, once in four years.

Mr. CARTER. Once in four years.

Mr. BURKETT. That is as I understand it.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I wish, emphatically, to challenge the statement that this provision will add to the expense of the Government. It is true that the estimate for 1909 was several million dollars in excess of the amount expended for this purpose last year, but a revised estimate was subsequently made by the Department, and this item of $44,000,000 is identical with the amount appropriated for the last fiscal year for this purpose. So the amount is the same and no additional expense is incurred.

Mr. President, in this connection I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment, which is necessary to facilitate the work in the Department, but which does not add any further amount to the appropriation.

Mr. NELSON. I have made the point of order against this whole amendment that it is general legislation, and it is not disputed. It is general legislation, because it is an entire change of existing law on this subject. Under existing law and under existing practices the weighing, as has been the custom for over thirty years, I think, is done once in four years. This provides for a weighing annually, and then, in addition to that, it has a paragraph in reference to the carrying of the mail on one of two routes, and then a paragraph requiring notice of such weighing. The whole thing is entirely different, and it is not disputed and has not been disputed by anything that has been said that it differs from existing law. If it does, it is general legislation. I make the point of order that it is general legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania has a right to perfect the amendment pending the point of order.

Mr. PENROSE. I desire to perfect the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania offers an amendment to the amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 22, in the proposed amendment, strike out the last paragraph, being lines 19, 20, 21, 22, and 23, on page 22, and insert:

And out of the appropriation for inland mail transportation the Postmaster-General is authorized hereafter to pay rental in Washington, D. C., and compensation to tabulators and clerks employed in connection with the weighing, for assistants in completing computations in connection with the expenses of taking the weights of mails on railroad routes as provided by law.

Mr. NELSON. That is new legislation and general legislation. I make the same point of order as to that.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, a word on the point of order. The point that it changes existing law is not, of course, available under our rules. That is the House provision. Our rules say "general legislation." This legislation, as I understand, is simply a modification of existing law. There is no question that the appropriation is in order. There is no question that this bill makes provision for weighing the mail. Every post-office bill makes provision for weighing the mails. This is a mere change in the method of weighing the mails; that is, a change in the system to which the appropriation is incident. It seems to me that it hardly falls within the rule.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I simply desire to reiterate what the Senator from Massachusetts so concisely stated. It is an extraordinary proposition that in a large and complicated appropriation bill of this character phraseology may not be introduced indicating the method of expending the appropriation. If legislation were put in here revising the criminal code so far as it relates to postal matters or establishing a new bureau, the point of order of the Senator from Minnesota might well apply. But it is impossible for the Department to interpret the appropriation without the explanation as to how it shall be spent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been held several times in the Senate, when a matter like this has been submitted to it, that it was in order; that the appropriation itself being in order, the disposition of the appropriation is also in order. Therefore the Chair overrules the point of order.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the amendment. The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. On page 22, I move to strike out—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is it a committee amendment?

Mr. TALIAFERRO. No, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then it is not in order at this time.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. It is an amendment to a committee amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Oh, an amendment to a committee amendment. It is in order.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I move to strike out from line 12, down to and including line 18, on page 22.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the proposed amendment to the amendment of the committee.

The SECRETARY. On page 22 in the committee amendment it is proposed to strike out lines 12 to 18, inclusive, in the following words:

And the Postmaster-General shall give the company carrying such mails advance notice of his intention to take their weights separately from the other mails of the route and readjust the compensation for the carriage of the same on the basis of their value on the shorter or less expensive route, and shall report weekly during the time of such weighing the weights of such mails to the company carrying them.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Mr. President, I think that language must have gotten into the bill by some misapprehension or mistake, for I remember distinctly when the weighing question was being considered by the committee it was understood that it would all be done without any reference to the railroads; in other words, that the railroad companies should not know the period to be fixed by the Postmaster-General for weighing the mails. This appears to contemplate or to require the Postmaster-General to give notice to the railroads of his intention to weigh and to report weekly or daily, as the case may be, to the company as the weights are taken.

Mr. CARTER. I call the attention of the Senator from Florida to the particular portion of the bill to which I think, on reflection, he will realize his remarks apply. The part to which the discussion was directed will be found in lines 23 and 24, on page 21. The bill as originally framed provided that the weighing should commence on the 1st day of March. It was amended in committee so as to read: "Commencing on such date as the Postmaster-General may designate each year."

This provision applies to the date of commencing the work of weighing the mails, and the committee amended it in the particular to which I have referred. That portion to which the Senator's proposed amendment is directed has another view entirely. Where a given road is carrying the mail known as the "through mail" and the Department proposes to separate the weight of that through mail from the weight of the mail originating on the route, of course the road must have notice in order to have some one present representing the road, if it shall so elect.

The difficulty we sought to correct in the former amendment referred to does not apply to the portion of this particular amendment to which the Senator's motion is directed. I think upon reflection and a thorough examination of the bill the Senator will find that that is correct.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Mr. President, I remember that the question of notifying the railroads or fixing a date in the law was discussed along the line the Senator from Montana states, but I consider this provision in its place here just as objectionable as the provision that was ruled out by the committee where that notice appeared. I see no reason why the Government should be required by law to give notice to the railroad of the time when they intend to weigh the mails so as to ascertain the average weight of the mails as a basis for compensation to the railroads.

I hope that the amendment to strike out may prevail.

Mr. CARTER. I suggest to the Senator that if his amendment should prevail there would be no means provided by law to notify a given railroad company when the Department contemplated, by a system of weighing, taking a certain weight from that road and transferring it to another road, and when the compensation is reduced the road ought to know whether the reduction is greater than the tonnage or not. Of course, in ordinary fair dealing, when such a separation is made and a reduction is to inevitably follow, the Postmaster-General would in the absence, I assume, of any law, give the road an opportunity to test the weight. It is nothing more than giving the other party to a contract an opportunity to come and look at the scales to determine whether the weighing is properly conducted or not.

I assume that this right, as I said, would reside without this provision of law; and I can not well conceive that a Postmaster-General would deliberately attempt to reduce the amount of compensation due anybody without giving that person a right to see whether the reduction was reasonable or according to the weights.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. The Senator from Montana will recall that the committee specifically, and I think unanimously, decided that these weights should be taken without notice to the railroads.

Mr. CARTER. That was with reference to another subject entirely. The purpose of the committee in leaving the fixing of the date for the commencement of the weighing with the Postmaster-General, instead of fixing the date arbitrarily by law, was to prevent a railroad company, if perchance it felt so inclined, from packing the mails or increasing their weight by certain documents or trash of one kind and another sent through the mails at that particular time. It has been alleged that the mails were, to use the parlance of the streets, "stuffed" during the weighing period; and if the law fixed a date upon which the weighing was to commence and named the number of days it was to continue, of course an arrangement might be made to the great disadvantage of the Government in swelling the mails during that period of time.

So the committee amended the bill by providing that the weighing should commence on such a date as the Postmaster-General might designate. The railroad company will not be advised of the dates of the commencement of weighing, any more than a bank is advised of the date when a bank examiner is to call and examine the state of the bank.

Mr. ALDRICH. This is a very important amendment, and several Senators want to speak upon it. There are some matters of executive business that require attention. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. WARREN. I ask the Senator from Rhode Island to yield to me that I may have a small local bill passed, for which the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] kindly offered to yield whenever I might ask to take it up during the afternoon. It will take but a few moments and there will be no debate.

Mr. KEAN. I suppose it involves no appropriation of money?

Mr. ALDRICH. If there is to be no debate and no appropriation, I will yield.

Mr. WARREN. I do not know about the appropriation. I do not know of any.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. ALDRICH. I do.

RESURVEY OF LANDS IN WYOMING.

Mr. WARREN. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 6190) authorizing a resurvey of certain townships in the State of Wyoming.

The Secretary read the bill, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 2, line 18, after the word "inclusive," to insert "township 57 north, range 68 west; townships 54 to 56 north, ranges 80 and 81 west, inclusive," so as to make the section read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be made, in the manner now provided by law for the survey and resurvey of public lands, and from time to time as may be necessary, a resurvey of the following townships in the State of Wyoming: Townships 41 to 44 north, ranges 81 to 92 west, inclusive; townships 45 to 48 north, ranges 81 to 104 west, inclusive, except township 48 north, ranges 88 to 91 west, inclusive; townships 49 to 52 north, ranges 89 to 92 west, inclusive; townships 53 to 56 north, ranges 101 to 103 west, inclusive; townships 12 and 13 north, range 86 west; townships 12, 13, and 14 north, range 87 west; townships 12 to 16 north, ranges 88 to 104 west, inclusive; townships 17 to 24 north, ranges 97 to 100 west, inclusive; township 12 north, ranges 105 to 108 west, inclusive; townships 12 to 23 north, ranges 109 to 112 west, inclusive; township 24 north, range 111 west; township 24 north, range 114 west; townships 17 to 26 north, ranges 117 to 121 west, inclusive; township 57 north, range 68 west; townships 54 to 56 north, ranges 80 and 81 west, inclusive; all west of the sixth principal meridian.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 3, line 6, after the word "surveyors," to strike out the following: "and for each and every such iron post set for monuments on said resurveys by said deputy surveyors they shall receive, in full compensation therefor, the sum of $2, in addition to the regular rates of mileage stipulated in the contract, the cost of furnishing, delivering, and setting of the posts provided for by this act to be payable from the same appropriation from which the costs of the resurvey is paid;" and at the end of the bill to insert the following proviso:

Provided further, That where it is found that, at the time the resurvey is entered upon, more than half the lands in any township have been disposed of, by entry or otherwise, the resurvey in such township shall not be made; but this proviso shall not apply to lands within railroad land-grant limits.

So as to make the section read:

Sec. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, further authorized and directed to furnish to the deputy surveyors to whom contracts have been awarded by the surveyor-general for the resurvey of any of said townships, iron tubular posts 3 feet long, 2½ inches in diameter, with a 10-inch flare at the bottom, surmounted by a brass cap, for corner monuments, said posts to be furnished without cost to said deputy surveyors and delivered at the railroad station nearest to said contracts, there to be received by the said deputy surveyors: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall cause the applications of settlers upon other lands to be rejected, or cause to be increased the amount annually apportioned to the district of Wyoming, out of the appropriation for surveys and resurveys of public lands. And all rules and regulations of the Department of the Interior requiring petitions from all settlers on said lands asking for a resurvey and an agreement to abide by the result of the survey, so far as these lands are concerned, are hereby abrogated: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to impair the present bona fide rights or claims of any actual occupant of any of said lands so occupied to the amount of land to which, under the law, he is entitled: Provided further, That before any resurvey is ordered it shall be made to appear to the Secretary of the Interior that the former official survey of said lands is so inaccurate or obliterated as to make it necessary to resurvey the land, and only such parts of the land where the survey is so inaccurate or obliterated shall be resurveyed: Provided further, That where it is found that, at the time the resurvey is entered upon, more than half the lands in any township have been disposed of by entry or otherwise, the resurvey in such township shall not be made; but this proviso shall not apply to lands within railroad land-grant limits.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

WIDENING OF BENNING ROAD.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 4063, an act for the widening of Benning road, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, and to concur in the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. SIMS. I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, a second is considered as ordered, and the gentleman from Michigan has twenty minutes and the gentleman from Tennessee twenty minutes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I desire to occupy only a few moments. There are three amendments to this bill. The first is found on page 2, line 17, which authorizes the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, in their discretion, to direct the Columbia Railway Company to remove its tracks into the middle of the road whenever, in their discretion, it is necessary. This road is 45 feet wide on the south side of where the tracks now lie, and the Columbia Railroad Company owns 30 feet there in their own right. It is proposed by this bill to add 35 feet more on the north side, which will make the road when widened 110 feet.

The second amendment is a change of the words "authorized to be expended" to the word "approved." I think the House will remember that when this bill was passed this with four other bills were amended at the suggestion of a member of the Committee on Appropriations, and the word "appropriated" was stricken out and the words "authorized to be expended" were inserted. I will not take the time of the committee to read, but I would like to insert in the Record as a part of my remarks the opinion of the Auditor, Mr. Tweedale, suggesting the use of the word "appropriated" instead of the words "authorized to be expended."

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish the gentleman would read it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I will ask the Clerk to read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

EXECUTIVE OFFICE,
COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, April 7, 1908.

Hon. S. W. SMITH,
Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia,
House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: Pursuant to your oral request, received through the clerk of your committee this morning, the Commissioners have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of a communication from the Auditor of the District of Columbia setting forth the importance of including in certain street-extension bills the word "appropriated," which has been replaced therein by the phrase "authorized to be expended," and which is necessary to make the legislation effective.

Very respectfully,

HENRY B. F. MACFARLAND,
President Board of Commissioners District of Columbia.

OFFICE OF THE AUDITOR, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, March 24, 1908.

Hon. HENRY L. WEST,
Commissioner District of Columbia.

SIR: Your attention is respectfully invited to the action of the House of Representatives in its consideration of certain street extension bills, as noted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 23, 1908. The bills in question are as follows:

"H. R. 4063. For the widening of Benning road, and for other purposes.

"H. R. 16269. For the extension of Ninth street NW.

"H. R. 17303. For the extension of Girard street NW. from its western terminus to Fifteenth street NW.

"H. R. 17297. For the extension of New York avenue from its present terminus near Fourth street NE. to Bladensburg road."

These several bills as they were originally submitted by the Commissioners carried an appropriation out of the revenues of the District. They were amended, however, by having the word "appropriated" stricken out and the words "authorized to be expended" inserted in lieu thereof. The bills as so amended are therefore simply authorizations of expenditures from the District revenues without any appropriations being provided from which such expenditures may be made.

Laws carrying appropriations are strictly construed, due to a provision contained in the sundry civil act, approved June 30, 1906, being an extension of the provisions of legislation of similar purport contained in the deficiency act approved July 1, 1902. The legislation referred to is as follows:

"No act of Congress hereafter passed shall be construed to make an appropriation out of the Treasury of the United States or to authorize the execution of a contract involving the payment of money in excess of appropriations made by law, unless such act shall in specific terms declare an appropriation to be made or that a contract may be executed."

By public act No. 385, approved June 30, 1906, entitled "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes," the Commissioners of the District were authorized and directed to acquire by condemnation, or otherwise, for the purpose of providing reservations of the United States Government, certain parcels of ground in the District of Columbia on the line of Sixteenth street NW. In compliance with this direction, the Commissioners, through the corporation counsel, filed petitions in the supreme court of the District of Columbia to condemn the land necessary for such reservations. The cases, however, were thrown out of court on the ground that the law was unenforceable by reason of the failure of Congress to provide the necessary appropriations. Expenses aggregating about $450 were incurred in connection with these cases and for the payment of which it will be necessary to ask Congress for an appropriation in the general deficiency estimates.

Should the several street-extension bills herein referred to be enacted into law as now amended, they would be unenforceable by reason of the failure of the language as used in the amendments, to carry the necessary appropriations.

This matter is respectfully submitted for the consideration of the Commissioners, with a view of having the bills amended by providing the necessary appropriations, in order that they may be enforced if enacted into law.

Very respectfully,

A. TWEEDALE,
Auditor District of Columbia.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, the third amendment is the one amending section 860 of the code with reference to pool selling. In other words, the section is so amended as to forbid gambling at the Benning races. How much time have I used, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has consumed seven minutes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I demanded a second more for the purpose of yielding time to any gentleman on this side who might want to say anything than for any other purpose. My position is well known on this measure. It is not necessary for me to say anything further than that I am heartily in favor of the motion, because the amendments of the Senate do not change the effect of the law in any material sense. I think we ought to vote solidly for concurrence in the Senate amendments and forever end race-track gambling in the District of Columbia. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, upon Saturday the Committee on the District of Columbia brought in a bill for a model child-labor law, which passed this House. I stated at that time that in consideration of that indication of a purpose to do business in the direction of remedial legislation I would be willing to see several bills, not exceeding six in number, if they were meritorious, coming from that particular committee, pass the House without a call for the yeas and nays. This is one of the bills that I consider among the number of meritorious ones. I do not believe there will be any objection to the bill upon either side of the House. It does a great public service with regard to the railroad part of it, and it is in the interests of public morals with regard to the antigambling part of it. I had desired that a second should be called for, merely in order that my position might be explained, and my reason for not calling for the yeas and nays upon this particular bill might be understood.

I yield back the balance of my time to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, if no one else on this side desires to say anything, I do not care to occupy any further time.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I call for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan to suspend the rules and concur in the Senate amendments.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

CAPTAIN IN PHILIPPINE SCOUTS.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 652) to create the office of captain in the Philippine Scouts, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the office of captain in the Philippine Scouts is hereby created as a grade of rank in the military establishment. Such captains shall be selected from officers of the grade of first lieutenants in said scouts, and shall be given provisional appointments for periods of four years each, and no such appointments shall be continued for a second or subsequent period unless the officers' conduct shall have been satisfactory in every respect: Provided, That the number of officers provisionally appointed under the terms of this act shall not at any time exceed the number of companies of said native troops which may be formed by the President from time to time for service in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia demands a second. Under the rule a second is ordered, and the gentleman from Virginia is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Iowa to twenty minutes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, the bill is a very simple one and there is no necessity for much discussion. Under the law organizing the Philippine Scouts as part of the Regular Army, the lieutenants—first and second—are appointed from the noncommissioned officers of the Regular Army. I think that has been waived in some cases by appointing a very few Filipinos. Of that I am not positive, and only think so by a statement from the Secretary of War. The captains of the Philippine Scouts are appointed from the first lieutenants of the Regular Army, and while so acting have the pay of captain. Those lieutenants are not eligible to promotion in the scouts, but have promotion in the line of the Army, and whenever a first lieutenant becomes a captain he joins his company and another first lieutenant is detailed—as I understand the operation of it—to take his place in the scouts; and while acting with the scouts has the pay and allowances of a captain of the line. This, if passed, creates the office of captain of the Philippine Scouts, and will promote the first lieutenants up to the position of captain and fill in the second lieutenants and send to the command the first lieutenants now serving there as captains. It adds about fifty captains to the line by making the captains in place of first lieutenants direct. It is a bill that has been considered by Congress on several occasions. There is nothing in it but the one proposition of the captains—which provides a term of four years. In that respect I think it is wrong. I think it ought to be a regular permanent appointment if they serve, as they have in the Philippine Islands, for any length of time. But it creates for the present—for terms of four years—fifty additional captains, relieving that many regular first lieutenants to come back to their duties as officers of the line.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Did I understand the gentleman to say that it did not make an increase in the Regular Army?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I say it does make an increase of fifty, because it makes this office of captain permanent—appointments for periods of four years, but it is a permanent office.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Why do they appoint for the provisional period of four years?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Because that is what the bill provides for.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Why does the bill provide for it?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I suppose because they did not ask for a permanent regular appointment. These captains can never be appointed to major under the bill or under the law.

Mr. SLAYDEN. They are applying exactly the same process as in the Porto Rican regiment.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Of stealing into the Army.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Oh, that expression is hardly fair.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Of creeping in.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They will be kept on the rolls as captains probably as long as they live. They are not subject to retirement, however.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Are they going to put over their heads the same impenetrable roof as the Porto Ricans? They can not get promotion beyond a certain service.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It is not intended they should have a promotion beyond grade of captain. It is intended that majors and other officers above the grade of major shall be detailed from the Army, and the War Department detaching captains from the line of the Army creates a drain on the officers of the Army that the Army can not well stand.

I will ask in my time to have read the report, which sets out on the subject all there is to be said.

And while that is going to the desk I wish to say just a word in addition. There are bills now before the Committee on Military Affairs urging an increase of the officers of the Army by 680, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Young] says. That increase is not only asked for by the Department, but it is asked for by professors of schools, more largely from the South than from the North, saying that it is the best investment the Government can make to detail accomplished officers to teach in the different educational institutions of the country. I now ask that the report be read, and then I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 652) to create the office of captain in the Philippine Scouts, report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

This bill passed the Senate on February 13, 1908, and the report made thereon is hereto attached and made a part of this report.

[Senate Report No. 176, Sixtieth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 652) to create the office of captain in the Philippine Scouts, has considered the same carefully and now begs leave to report it back to the Senate favorably, recommending its passage without amendment.

A similar measure was favorably reported (S. Rept. No. 5330) and passed the Senate in the Fifty-ninth Congress.

The organization of Philippine Scouts was made by the President in pursuance of authority conferred by section 36 of the act of February 2, 1901. (31 Stat. L., 748.)

The reasons for the enactment of the legislation proposed in the pending bill are fully set forth in the report of the honorable Secretary of War for the year 1904, from which the following is quoted:

"The Philippine Scouts number now a little over 4,000. Half of these companies have been employed in connection with the native constabulary of the Philippine Archipelago in the suppression of the ladores and have rendered very efficient service. They are amenable to discipline, have a martial spirit, and make excellent soldiers. It is a wise policy by which there shall be maintained in the Philippine Islands, as long as the United States remains in control of them, a small but well-trained Filipino army.

"In the training of these soldiers there should be no halfway measures. If they are to be made soldiers at all, they should be made good soldiers. They should be trained as the American soldiers are, with the same discipline and the same rifle practice, and they ought to have, and need, rather more than American soldiers do, a full complement of officers. There are now in the service two lieutenants to each company. Many of them have rendered praiseworthy service and are entitled to promotion. It seems to me wise, therefore, to create the office of captain in these companies, not for life, but for a term of four years, and to limit the eligibles for appointment to those who are lieutenants in the scouts. The law now provides for the appointment of majors from the regular line to command battalions, of which there would be, if the force were formed into battalions, thirteen.

"With a regular officer as major and the scout officers as captains and lieutenants, the discipline and efficiency of the Philippine Scouts could be largely increased at only the additional cost of the payment of the captains, some fifty in number. I earnestly recommend that this change be adopted. The present law provides for the appointment of captains of scouts from the lieutenants and captains of the Regular Army, but the truth is that the Regular Army can not stand the drain of its officers for such a purpose. The use of thirteen majors is as much as the Regular Army should be called upon to supply for this purpose. There are a few of the lieutenants in the scout companies that are Filipinos, but most of them are Americans."

As there are now in service fifty companies of Philippine Scouts, the operation of the legislation herein suggested would be to add fifty officers of the grade of captain to the existing military establishment. Your committee is unanimously in accord with the honorable Secretary in his opinion that the creation of the office of captain in the Philippine Scouts would be greatly beneficial to that organization, and earnestly indorses the proposed legislation.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, the excuse for the passage of this bill seems to be that there have been a large number of officers detailed from the Army and taken from the line to perform services either at schools or on the General Staff, or something of that sort. There are in the Regular Army 3,996 officers and there are about 68,000 soldiers—enlisted men. There are in the Philippine Scouts about 141 officers, and it is now proposed—

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, may we have order? I wish to hear what the gentleman from Virginia is saying.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I feel it my duty to at least oppose this constant addition to the Army. Now, a bill passed in the Senate not long ago, which added 612 officers to the Army, has the same excuse as this bill—that is, that the officers are being detailed from the line to other duties. There can be no good reason, in my judgment, why these Philippine Scouts should be commanded by a captain when through all these years they have been successfully commanded by a first lieutenant. There is no excuse for the passage of this bill on the ground that it is going to be of any advantage to the Philippine Scouts. It seems to me simply to be a bill for the purpose of adding fifty officers to the Regular Army and that we ought not now to do that. We just added the Porto Rican regiment the other day to the Regular Army, and we are constantly legislating with that end in view. I do not care to consume the time of the House, and therefore have nothing further to say than to enter my protest against this kind and character of legislation. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN].

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I am afraid, as was suggested by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY], that it is impossible to excite the interest of the House in this character of legislation. No matter how unnecessary military legislation may appear to those who have examined into it critically the greater support it seems to command. This bill is not necessary for the good of the military; it is not necessary in any sense for the public service. It is not required in any way for the defense of the integrity or sovereignty of the soil of the United States, nor for those undesirable insular possessions with which we are cursed at this time. It is simply an indirect way of increasing the size of the United States Army by fifty men of comparatively high rank, and at the rate of pay which the House voted the other day when it manifested such indifference to the interests of the taxpayers and yielded so pleasantly and promptly to the urgent demands of their friends in the Army. It, moreover, does one other thing which is directly in line with the legislation we passed the other day. Just above the heads of those officers it puts a roof, as it did in the case of the Porto Rican Provisional Regiment, through which the most aspiring, most able of them can not penetrate. It says, no matter what your talent may be, no matter how faithful your service may be, no matter how skillful you may be in your profession, you can not go through this into the higher grades of the Army. It uses to some extent the same language that has always been employed in the Porto Rican Provisional Regiment, even when we were assured it was but a temporary measure, that it was merely to tide over a time between the Spanish-American war and the return of peace and contentment which we thought would speedily come, but which the gentleman from Porto Rico himself [Mr. LARRINAGA] tells us has not come and does not seem likely to come very soon, and it gives fifty desirable places to fifty favorites of the War Department, and I have no doubt that the bill will pass.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Is it possible for a Filipino to get one of these places?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Some of the Filipinos, my friend from Virginia tells me, are second lieutenants, not captains.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But will it be possible under this bill, if it is passed, for a Filipino to become a captain?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I think not; but it has been some time since I looked it up, and I will ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs if it is possible for a Filipino to get a captaincy?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. If he starts as a lieutenant.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Are there any Filipinos who are lieutenants?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The report of the Secretary of War says there are a few.

Mr. WILLIAMS. A few are?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; so the Secretary of War states.

Mr. SLAYDEN. It is not provided for in the law, then? It depends on the will of the Secretary of War?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The law provides that these lieutenants shall be appointed from the noncommissioned officers of the Army. The Filipino Scouts under the reorganization act are a part of the Regular Army and counted in maximum or minimum number in the Regular Army, and I assume if the Philippine scout who was a member of the scouts were a first-class sergeant he would be eligible to appointment to a second lieutenant after passing the examination required.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then he might finally get to be a captain?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I assume so. He could then be promoted to the position of captain; yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. He could get no higher, could he?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; not unless he was a part of the Regular Army outside of the scouts. Mr. Speaker, just one or two words. The charge that this is to fix up some favorites of the War Department is hardly a fair one, for the reason that the appointees for all the lieutenantcies are named from the noncommissioned enlisted force of the Regular Army. A man has got to have a good record and to be recommended by his captain and regimental officers. He has got, in other words, to be an enlisted man before he is eligible to the position of lieutenant. Now, as to the matter of promotion. I know the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] are very accurate, as a rule, in regard to the military bills, but my recollection is that the captains are now from the first lieutenants of the Army, and get the pay of captains while so serving.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question or two for information. How many of these scouts are there altogether?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They are limited to a certain number.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How many are there?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The Secretary of War says there are about 4,000 now in the service.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What do they do?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They attend to all the duties of soldiers in the Philippine Islands. The law allows 50 companies of 100 men each, and if they were at a maximum there would be 5,000.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Who has been commanding them heretofore?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. An officer of the Regular Army.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Of what rank?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. He has the rank, I think, of colonel, if there is a full regiment.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How many companies are these scouts divided into?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Fifty companies.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Who commands the companies?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. My recollection is that it is a first lieutenant from the line of the Army who commands the company, and a major of the Regular Army commands a battalion of four companies.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Now, if the lieutenants have been commanding these companies for ten years, what is the reason the lieutenants can not go on and command them all the time?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The first lieutenant that commands a company as a captain is only a scout officer while so serving. He belongs to the line of the Army. When he is promoted to captain he goes to the line, and another lieutenant is detailed as commandant of the company, with the grade of captain while so serving. When you come to the lieutenants they are not selected by the War Department, but from the Army, and from the best class of noncommissioned officers, and their promotion is now limited to that of first lieutenant.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Then, you take the noncommissioned officer out of the Regular Army and make him lieutenant of scouts, and when his term expires as lieutenant of scouts, what rank does he hold?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The position, I suppose, he would hold in the noncommissioned force.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Are Filipinos made second lieutenants?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I understand from the Secretary of War that they are.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I thought the gentleman said just now that they were made from the noncommissioned officers of the Army.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I also said, if the gentleman will remember, that the scouts are a part of the Regular Army, and I assume the construction is that, if a good noncommissioned officer, a Filipino serving in the scouts is eligible to promotion, because he is a part of the Regular Army.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Can the Filipinos become captains?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They can if this bill passes. They can not now. They serve until there is a vacancy in the line. They are scouts until that position comes to them.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How long do the scouts serve?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They are part of the Regular Army and will serve until Congress repeals the law.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Then these captains can never be promoted?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. These captains can not be promoted beyond that rank.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The men who get that promotion to the line of the Army, are they to be retired like the officers of the Regular Army?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. When an officer of the scouts reaches the age of retirement, if he was appointed from the noncommissioned force, he is retired at the rank he holds in the Regular Army establishment here. If he holds the rank of a first sergeant, he is retired at the grade of first sergeant.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What do these lieutenants of scouts get?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The same as any other in the Army.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Two thousand dollars a year and rations?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It will be that salary after this law goes into effect, but not with rations. I hope the gentleman does not understand that rations are issued to commissioned officers.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. They get commutation for rations, do they not?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They do not get commutation of rations.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Do they get commutation of quarters?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They get commutation of quarters where the Government does not furnish quarters.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Suppose this bill is passed; will the same men who now command these scouts as lieutenants continue to command them as captains?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Not all of them. All the senior first lieutenants will be promoted to captains and the second lieutenants to first lieutenants, and the filling in will begin at the bottom, with the promotion of the noncommissioned force of the Army to the grade of second lieutenant.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It means, then, very largely simply an increase of the salary and rank, and not a change in the command?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It means more than that. It means making permanent these officers, of a captain performing the duties. It means also an increased force of fifty permanently. When officers now doing duty with the scouts are promoted they can go back to duty with their own company.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Does the gentleman say that second lieutenants are in command of companies now?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I would not say that.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If a company is now under the command of a first lieutenant and he becomes a captain, does it not simply mean raising the rank and pay without changing the command?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Not at all. I can not positively say that every company is now commanded by a captain; but there are fifty captains there in command, unless they are assigned to some other duty, or away from their commands, the same as is done all over the country in the Army and Navy. I can not say how that is with these scouts. This bill increases the permanent force by fifty officers. It makes fifty permanent captains of the scouts, where they are now detailed of the grade of first lieutenant. But if the gentleman asks me if every company of scouts has a full complement of officers, I would say no. A company never or at least rarely has its full complement of officers; there is some one away all the time.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Do these scouts perform any but police duties?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Oh, yes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What is it?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They do as vigorous fighting as any force of the Regular Army.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Is there any fighting going on there now?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; but there is a good deal of lawlessness.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Then this simply makes the scouts perform police duty?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Oh, no; they prove some of our best fighting force there.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Is there any war there now?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Oh, no.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If there is no fighting there now, then they are simply doing police duty?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The constabulary do most of the police duty.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What are these scouts doing?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They are stationed in various parts of the island. They are part of the military force of the country. They do what a soldier would be required to do under the same circumstances. Now, the gentleman is begging the question. The idea that they have got to be constantly fighting to justify their existence as a force is an absurdity.

It is absolutely absurd. They are there in the interest of peace, and being there they insure peace. Take them all away from the Philippine Islands, and the gentleman knows we would have trouble at once. With force enough there to guarantee peace, we have peace. It would be simply begging the question to say that they are not fighting all the time.

Mr. ADAIR. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes, if I have time.

Mr. ADAIR. Do I understand from the gentleman that this does not increase the number of officers in command of the scouts in the Philippine Islands, but does change the rank?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It does more than that. It releases fifty first lieutenants, now acting as captains, to come back and take their places as first lieutenants here, and makes fifty captains there, so that it does increase it in that way. In other words, there are fifty vacancies here now in lieutenants not with their companies, because they are in the Philippine Islands serving with the scouts.

Mr. ADAIR. It does not increase the number of commanding officers?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Not with the scouts; no.

Mr. ADAIR. That is the question I asked.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Oh, no; not at all, not with the scouts. I call for a vote, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

Mr. HAY. Upon that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 146, nays 112, answered "present" 15, not voting 114, as follows:

PHILIPPINE SCOUTS.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may incorporate in my remarks the section of the law providing for the Philippine Scouts and the appointment of other officers, so that the House may have that information.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the gentleman will ask unanimous consent to read it, I will have no objection.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I put in nearly all of it, but this is more full.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have made it a rule to object to the extending of remarks in the Record, but if the gentleman will read it, I will have no objection.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have that part read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent, for the purpose of getting into the Record as a part of his remarks, to have read a section of the law creating the Philippine Scouts. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 36. That when in his opinion the conditions in the Philippine Islands justify such action the President is authorized to enlist natives of those islands for service in the Army, to be organized as scouts, with such officers as he shall deem necessary for their proper control, or as troops or companies, as authorized by this act, for the Regular Army. The President is further authorized, in his discretion, to form companies, organized as are companies of the Regular Army, in squadrons or battalions, with officers and noncommissioned officers corresponding to similar organizations in the cavalry and infantry arms. The total number of enlisted men in said native organization shall not exceed 12,000, and the total enlisted force of the line of the Army, together with such native force, shall not exceed at any one time 100,000.

The majors to command the squadrons and battalions shall be selected by the President from captains of the line of the Regular Army, and while so serving they shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of the grade of major. The captains of the troops or companies shall be selected by the President from first lieutenants of the line of the Regular Army, and while so serving they shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of captain of the arm to which assigned. The squadron and battalion staff officers and first and second lieutenants of companies may be selected from the noncommissioned officers or enlisted men of the Regular Army of not less than two years' service, or from officers or noncommissioned officers or enlisted men serving, or who have served, in the volunteers subsequent to April 21, 1898, and officers of those grades shall be given provisional appointments for periods of four years each, and no such appointments shall be continued for a second or subsequent term unless the officer's conduct shall have been satisfactory in every respect.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4812) to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia, had asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. DOLLIVER, Mr. PETROSE, and Mr. DANIEL as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

INVESTIGATION OF THE OPIUM EVIL IN THE FAR EAST.

The Speaker laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which, with accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

In laying before the Congress the accompanying letter from the Secretary of State, I heartily recommend that appropriations be made as therein requested for the participation of the United States in the coming investigation of the opium question in the Far East by a joint international commission.

The cordial reception of this proposal by the governments concerned is a cause of gratification to the American Government and people. The high aim of this international project, placing as it does considerations of human welfare above all others, is a fine example of what is best in modern civilization and international good will and cooperation. Such an undertaking can not but appeal most strongly to the American people, and I am happy to lay before the Congress this opportunity to enable the United States to do its full share in the work.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 11, 1908.

ENLARGED HOMESTEAD.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 6155) to provide for an enlarged homestead, with committee amendments, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person who is a qualified entryman under the homestead laws of the United States may enter, by legal subdivisions, under the provisions of this act, in the States of Colorado, California, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, Oregon, Utah, Washington, and Wyoming, and the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico, 320 acres, or less, of nonmineral, nonirrigable, unreserved, and unappropriated surveyed public lands which do not contain merchantable timber, located in a reasonably compact body, and not over  $1\frac{1}{2}$  miles in extreme length.

SEC. 2. That any person applying to enter land under the provisions of this act shall make and subscribe before the proper officer an affidavit as required by section 2290 of the Revised Statutes, and in addition thereto shall make affidavit that the land sought to be entered is of the character described in section 1 of this act, and shall pay the fees now required to be paid under the homestead laws.

SEC. 3. That any homestead entryman of lands of the character herein described, upon which final proof has not been made, shall have the right to enter public lands, subject to the provisions of this act, contiguous to his former entry which shall not, together with the original entry, exceed 320 acres, and residence upon and cultivation of the original entry shall be deemed as residence upon and cultivation of the additional entry.

SEC. 4. That at the time of making final proofs as provided in section 2291 of the Revised Statutes the entryman under this act shall, in addition to the proofs and affidavits required under the said section, prove by two credible witnesses that at least one-eighth of the area embraced in his entry was continuously cultivated to agricultural crops other than native grasses beginning with the second year of the entry, and that at least one-fourth of the area embraced in the entry was so continuously cultivated beginning with the third year of the entry.

SEC. 5. That nothing herein contained shall be held to affect the right of a qualified entryman to make homestead entry in the States named in section 1 of this act under the provisions of section 2289 of the Revised Statutes, but no person who has made entry under this act shall be entitled to make homestead entry under the provisions of said section, and no entry made under this act shall be commuted.

Mr. HOWLAND. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. A second is ordered, under the rule. The gentleman from Wyoming is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Ohio to twenty minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, this is the most perfect homestead bill that an American Congress has ever considered, and if it becomes a law we shall have on the statute books for the first time a real homestead law. The present homestead law allows commutation and payment after fourteen months. This bill requires five years of continuous residence. The present homestead law contains no definite provision with regard to cultivation. This law compels continuous cultivation of at least one-quarter of the area included in the entry. This law, Mr. Speaker, is drafted in line with the recommendation of the President of the United States to this Congress in these words:

The land-law system which was designed to meet the needs of the fertile and well-watered regions of the Middle West has largely broken down when applied to the dryer regions of the Great Plains, the mountains, and much of the Pacific slope, where a farm of 160 acres is altogether inadequate.

In order to meet that condition, widely and universally recognized throughout the West for many years past, we are now presenting, by the unanimous agreement of all Western Members, by practically unanimous report from our committee, this bill which, while it doubles the homestead on the dry nonirrigable, nontimbered lands of the arid and semiarid region, at the same time throws safeguards around the homestead not now thrown around it by existing law. This is a bill more in the interests of the constituents of every Member on this floor than in the interests of my constituents, except that some of their constituents may, under this law, become my constituents. It is not an enlarged homestead, particularly, for the people already there, it is an enlarged homestead for those we hope will come to help us conquer the desert.

So far as our irrigated lands are concerned we divide them in small acreages and they are not entryable under this law, but the dry lands of that great area west of the Dakotas and Kansas and Nebraska to the Pacific coast require the most thorough methods of cultivation. In many instances they can successfully raise a crop only once in two years. Therefore the necessity of a larger acreage if we are to plant farms and farmers in that great territory. We have been inviting the homesteader on the 160-acre tract. He has been coming to some extent, but in four cases out of five, after enduring the hardships and trials for from one to three years, he has gone back to his folks or his wife's folks in Missouri and Iowa and Illinois. He has not done us any good and we have not done him any good. By giving him enough of these dry lands so that he feels he can afford to make the struggle, so that he feels that it is worth his while to stay there and plant a home, we expect to have very nearly every original entryman a final entryman and a home established, instead of only one original entry out of six or seven on our dry lands being perfected into a final entry.

Mr. ADAIR. How many acres can be entered under this bill?

Mr. MONDELL. Three hundred and twenty acres, twice the present amount. If the land is cultivated as most of it will have to be, under the biennial system, it makes the same acreage of annual crop.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is there anything in this act to prevent the wife or any other relative of a person occupying lands under the homestead laws making an entry under this law?

Mr. MONDELL. No one can take a homestead under the age of 21 years, and a wife, of course, can not take a homestead if the husband has one.

Mr. DRISCOLL. If this is nonirrigable, how can people cultivate it?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, we have been learning in the past few years that on these lands of short grass and short rainfall, where conditions are the best—this will not settle all of these lands by any manner of means, but it will settle the better portion of them—where conditions of soil and rainfall are the best, you can raise crops even with as low a rainfall as 14 inches by biennial farming and summer fallowing, and saving the moisture of two years to put into one crop, and that is the only safe system on those lands.

Mr. ADAIR. This bill does not change the homestead law, except as to the number of acres that can be homesteaded.

Mr. MONDELL. It does, because it repeals the commutation clause, so that a man can not get title until five years of residence. In other words, it repeals the objectionable part of the homestead law so far as these lands are concerned. Further, it has this additional requirement—a definite requirement of cultivation of a quarter of the area.

Mr. ADAIR. Which is an improvement over the old law.

Mr. MONDELL. Very much of an improvement.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Can a person who has already taken a 160-acre homestead enter 160 acres more?

Mr. MONDELL. A person living in that region on an unperfected homestead of 160 acres which is dry in character may take an additional 160 acres if there be contiguous land, but he must reside five years then upon the additional land.

Mr. BONYNGE. But one who has 160 acres of perfected homestead can not take the additional 160 acres?

Mr. MONDELL. No. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HOWLAND. Mr. Speaker, this bill increases the number of acres that may be taken under the homestead law from 160 to 320. In support of this measure it is contended that the character of the land remaining in the public domain is such that when used for agricultural purposes 160 acres is not sufficient to enable a man to make a living thereon for himself and family. It is contended that the homestead law, which has been in force for so many years, has broken down when applied to the semiarid lands of the Western States. It is readily conceded that on certain of the public lands in the States of Nevada, Utah, and the Territory of Arizona it is impossible to apply the homestead law, but in many of the States and in the Territory of New Mexico, enumerated in this bill, we are unable to agree with the conclusions of the majority of the committee.

The advocates of this bill have cited the President's message of December 3, 1907, and in the majority report there is set out, on the first page thereof, a short extract taken from page 29 of the message, under the heading of "Public lands."

This quotation, however, when read in connection with the context, can not properly be cited in support of an increased agricultural homestead because the context clearly shows that the President is discussing a grazing proposition and not an agricultural homestead. The paragraph at the top of page 30 of the message is as follows:

Some such legislation as that proposed is essential in order to preserve the great stretches of public grazing land which are unfit for cultivation under present methods and are valuable only for the forage which they supply.

The proposed legislation referred to by the President directs attention to the suggestions of the Public Lands Commission. Referring to the recommendations of that Commission, we find that nowhere in their reports do they recommend an increased acreage for the agricultural homestead. They did recommend in their first partial report the repeal of the timber and stone act and the amendment of the desert-land law, so as to prevent the assignment of desert-land entries. In the second partial report of this Commission, under date of February 13, 1905, on page 2 of the report and paragraph 3, the Commission uses the following language:

The agricultural possibilities of the remaining public domain are unknown. Provision should be made to ascertain them and, pending such ascertainment, to hold under Government control and in trust for such use, the lands likely to be developed by actual settlers.

They further recommend, in paragraph 8, on the same page, that the area of the desert entry should be reduced to not exceeding 160 acres.

In this connection it might be interesting to note that the desert-land law, as originally enacted, provided for a 640-acre entry. This was later reduced to 320 acres, and now the Commission recommends a further reduction to 160 acres under the desert-land laws.

On page 4 of said partial report the Commission insists on a land classification and uses the following language:

The agricultural possibilities of the remaining public lands are as yet almost unknown. Lands which a generation or even a decade ago were supposed to be valueless are now producing large crops, either with or without irrigation. This has been brought about in part by the introduction of new grains or other plants and new methods of farming, and in part by denser population and improved systems of transportation. It is obvious that the first essential for putting the remaining public lands to their best use is to ascertain what that best use is by a preliminary study and classification of them and to determine their probable future development by agriculture. Until it can be definitely ascertained that any given area of the public land is and in all probability will forever remain unsuited to agricultural development, the title to that land should remain in the General Government in trust for the future settlers.

Again, on page 5 of said report, after calling attention to the Kinkaid Act, which provides for a grazing homestead of 640 acres in the sand-hill region of Nebraska, they say:

Your Commission is of the opinion, after careful consideration, that general provisions of this kind should not be extended until after thorough study of the public lands has been made in each particular case, because to do so controverts the fundamental principle of saving the public lands for the home maker. Each locality should be dealt with on its own merits. Even if it should ultimately appear that this law has worked beneficially in Nebraska, it would by no means follow that such a law might safely be applied to other regions, different in topography, soil, and climate. No arbitrary rule should be followed, but in each case the area of the homestead should be determined by the acreage that may be necessary to support a family upon the land, either by agriculture or by grazing. If agriculture is impracticable, until such acreage is determined for each locality any new general law providing a method of obtaining title to the remaining public lands would, in the opinion of your Commission, be decidedly unsafe.

The pending bill is a new general law providing a method of obtaining a title to the public lands applicable to, substantially, all the public-land States and extending from the northern boundary of the country to the southern, including all kinds of climate, soil, and conditions, and, in the opinion of the Public Lands Commission, would be "decidedly unsafe."

In the majority report on page 2, at the middle of the page, it is said that—

The committee did not feel justified in accepting the recommendation of the Commissioner of the General Land Office in his report for the last fiscal year for a 640-acre homestead.

By reference to that report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, on page 19, we find that this recommendation can not properly be cited in support of the pending bill, but that his recommendation is expressly limited to semiarid lands, not capable of artificial irrigation, and which, because of the fact that they do not furnish potable water sufficient for domestic use or because of other conditions arising out of the semiaridity of the land, are not suitable for continuous habitation. The pending bill requires residence and, of necessity, potable water, and places it entirely beyond the scope of the recommendation of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

On the top of page 3, in the report of the Committee on Public Lands, filed with this bill, appears a very interesting table, which shows how many years it will take to absorb the remaining unreserved and unappropriated public lands in the States and Territories included in this bill at the present rate of final homestead entries. This table might be instructive in this discussion if there were no other way of absorbing the public domain than that of the final homestead entry, but there are many other ways, and the following table, taken from the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office for the years ended June 30, 1904, 1905, 1906, and 1907, shows the total disposition of the public lands in the States included in this bill for these years.

Taking the total number of acres that went to the homesteader on final proof as 1,327,510 acres, and the total number of acres as shown by this table that were disposed of during the same time, and it will be noticed that for every acre of the public land that went to the homesteader 9 acres were disposed of in other ways. Eleven million two hundred and forty-five thousand one hundred and twenty-five acres of public lands were disposed of during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and this is an increase of two and one fourth million acres over 1906. At this rate thirty years is an ample period to fix for the complete absorption of the entire public domain and the enthusiasm and energy with which measures are pressed before Congress, providing for its disposition in various ways will, unless checked, materially shorten this period. An argument in favor of this bill is attempted on the alleged ground that the final homestead entries, as compared with the original homestead entries, have fallen off in recent years and that they are now in the proportion of 1 to 4, and at the top of page 4 of the majority report a table is set out showing the original homestead entries in 1902 and the final entries in 1906. We do not contend that there has been no falling off in this respect in recent years, but do contend that the abnormal demand for labor and the high wages paid for the same has in recent years drawn many of the homesteaders into the labor market. It is insisted that the table submitted in the majority report loses sight of the large number of entries that may have been commuted in 1904 and 1905, although they call attention to the commutations of 1906. The table is further fallacious in failing to call attention to final homestead entries involved in contests suspended because of defects in the proof and pending for investigation before the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

In a communication from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, under date of March 27, 1908, we find that there are now pending in that Office 297,847 original homestead entries upon which final proof has not been made, 12,497 final homestead entries not yet approved, and 10,399 commuted homestead entries not yet approved. Taking these figures into consideration it might reasonably be said that instead of the original homesteader abandoning his claim because of hardships, that two or more homesteaders were contesting with each other the right to obtain the same homestead.

We contend that it is bad policy for the Government, as the area of the public land subject to the homestead entry is rapidly decreasing, to increase the number of acres to be taken by the homesteader. If he can not make a living on 160 acres of land, there is something the matter with the homesteader or the land. If the trouble is with the land, a greater quantity of that kind of land will not help the situation. If the trouble is with the homesteader, the amount of land he enters cuts very little figure.

Under this bill the lands must be nonirrigable, but who can say to what lands this term would apply? All lands fit for the plow are irrigable, if you can get the water. Does it mean arid lands or semiarid lands? Does it mean lands where the rainfall is less than 15 inches per annum? If so, then North Dakota should come under the terms of this bill, for in some portions of that State the average rainfall is 14 inches, but her Representatives have wisely decided that she does not need the advantages offered by this bill.

A few years ago millions of acres of land were considered non-irrigable that to-day have been reclaimed by irrigation projects, and to-day constitute some of the richest of our farming sections. To-morrow the very lands covered by this bill may be brought within the scope of irrigation projects or new methods of utilizing water supply and storing moisture may be devised.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HOWLAND. Yes; I will yield for one question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. We had a bill the other day, the gentleman will remember, for the purpose of correcting the land evil. Certain land-grant railroads had been prohibited in the original bill from selling above a certain number of acres at a time and above a certain upset price. There was no penalty of forfeiture expressly in the bill. They proceeded, nevertheless, to sell and violated the law. Now, in that connection, suppose this bill provided that only nonirrigable lands shall be homesteaded in quantities of 320 acres, and suppose as a matter of fact patents were issued to lands which were irrigable for 320 acres. What provision is there in this bill to punish the officer who issues the patent, or what penalty is there for the man taking the patent?

Mr. HOWLAND. There is absolutely no provision in this bill, and I take it that if, under the circumstances here, a patent were issued to a man for 320 acres of land who had in good faith believed his lands were nonirrigable and had made such an affidavit, the Government of the United States would have no remedy against him, because he makes the affidavit in good faith.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In connection with these land-grant railroads, the gentleman will remember that patents had been issued by the United States Government.

Mr. HOWLAND. I know that was a case of a condition subsequent—

Mr. WILLIAMS. And there was a plain prohibition, not like the phrase "nonirrigable." There was something that anybody could see, and yet the United States issued the patents and there was no provision to punish the officer of the United States for deliberately violating the law. It struck me that the same difficulty would arise here.

Mr. HOWLAND. Idaho is included in this bill. The Committee on the Public Lands a short time ago reported favorably a bill turning over to the State of Idaho 2,000,000 acres of the public lands for irrigation projects, and on the question of non-irrigable lands in the State of Idaho I wish to quote from the speech of Senator HEYBURN, of that State, reported in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 1 last, in which he says:

In our State of Idaho we have more water than any other State in the Union. We have lakes on top of high mountains that will afford an enormous amount of power. We have rivers rising up in the mountain chains of that State where you can reservoir and reservoir over and over again the waters of the rivers and have at your command unlimited volumes of water that you can flow onto any lands in the State. It is merely a question of distance that you carry them. In the State of Idaho we deem it a matter of small importance to carry the water 60, 70, 80, or 120 miles, where we need it, and we could carry it 500 miles if we needed to do it.

Under this state of facts it would seem that Idaho, at least, would not get much benefit from this bill, if "nonirrigable" means lands that can not be irrigated.

Speaking in a general way of the operations of the homestead laws, the rapidity with which the public lands are now being taken under the present law conclusively demonstrates that there is no immediate necessity for the enactment of the pending bill. From 1868 down to June 30, 1907, a period of thirty-nine years, we find that with the exception of 1890, 1891, 1901, 1902, that the final homestead entries made for the year ending June 30, 1907, were the largest since the passage of the homestead act, to wit, 26,485 final homestead entries, carrying title to 3,740,567 acres of land. So that it appears that more final homesteads are to-day being created out of the public lands than ever before, with the exception of the four years just mentioned.

At this session of Congress the Committee on the Public Lands reported out a bill known as H. R. 16890, to establish a new land district in the Territory of New Mexico, on the ground that the demand for public land in that Territory was so great that the land office at Clayton could not handle the business. At the Clayton land office the homestead entries for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1906, numbered 3,526, covering 459,597 acres. The entries for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1907, numbered 11,014, covering 1,559,019 acres, and during the first six months of the present fiscal year there were 4,406 entries, covering 595,847 acres.

In order to place the exact situation in each of the States embodied in this bill before the committee I submit tables showing original homestead entries, final homestead entries, and commuted homestead entries and their acreage in each of the States and Territories covered by this bill for the fiscal years ended June 30, 1904, 1905, 1906, and 1907 and the six months of the current year. The figures therein are taken from the reports of the Commissioner of the General Land Office for these respective years.

Mr. PARKER of South Dakota. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HOWLAND. I can not yield.

Mr. PARKER of South Dakota. I am from South Dakota, and I want to correct a statement you have made. Now, there was a limitation under the act that you referred to.

Mr. HOWLAND. At any rate, South Dakota is not here asking for this increase to-day.

Mr. PARKER of South Dakota. I know, but as to your statement, under the limitation—

Mr. HOWLAND. I can not yield further.

These figures demonstrate conclusively that the struggle for homesteads in the remaining public lands of the country is fiercer to-day than ever before in our history.

The general policy of our Government has heretofore limited the homesteads to 160 acres, and this has been done to enable the bona fide settler to obtain a home in the public domain. The more homes that can be established on the public domain the better for the country at large and the particular Commonwealth in which the homestead is located. This bill, however, by doubling the acreage of the homestead entry, provides for only one-half as many homesteaders as would be taken care of under the present law.

In the near future all of our public lands will be gone, and with the flood of immigration now pouring in upon us, together with the natural increase of our population, we may soon come to realize what the term "land famine" means to the older countries of the world. We have only a certain amount of land. The number of people that will soon be demanding it can not even be estimated, and the true policy of the Government in matters of this character should be to conserve our resources, and legislation along the lines of this bill should be defeated. [Applause.]

How much time have I remaining, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has four minutes remaining.

Mr. HOWLAND. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, there was some excuse for the passage of the Kinkaid bill, granting 640 acres of land for a homestead. The excuse was that the land could not be cultivated to advantage; that it must be used as grazing land. But this bill, which proposes to give 320 acres, bears on its face evidence that the land can be cultivated. It requires that 80 acres shall be in cultivation by the end of three years other than in native grass; and if there be a homesteader in the West who cultivates more than 80 acres, he cultivates more than he can take care of himself. A man who cultivates 80 acres of land cultivates enough ground for one man. If you are going to give additional land to every man that can cultivate it, very well. A man who has got 80 acres to be cultivated has got enough land.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as the country grows more populous, as the pressure increases, the tendency ought to be to cut down the amount of the homestead and not to increase the amount. All of this land in the Far West a few years ago was considered barren, a desert. Now, we know that, if not all of it, a very large share of it can be brought into cultivation by irrigation and made use of profitably. It seems to me a wicked proposition to now increase the amount that can be given to a homesteader, to increase the amount which he may cultivate, to double that which was given before. I think we ought to cut down the amount rather than to increase it.

Mr. MONDELL. Just a moment on one or two points raised by the gentleman from Ohio. As to this matter of nonirrigability, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] very properly asked how could that be determined. First, the entryman selects his land under a law that charges him with the obligation of taking nonirrigable land and which requires him to make an affidavit that the land he seeks to enter is nonirrigable. Second, for five years he is under the fire of contest of all comers, who can contest him successfully at any time within the five years if his land is irrigable. All that period he is being constantly watched by special agents of the Land Office. We have plenty of them in the West watching these entrymen. And at the end of five years, on making final proof, he must swear, and get two neighbors to swear, that his entry is nonirrigable land; and if he swears falsely he can be sent to jail for perjury, and at any time within six years his land can be taken away from him.

Now, as to section 3. It is true the bill provides that the men who have gone upon lands under the homestead law in the last two or three or four years and made an entry of 160 acres may take 160 acres more of the same character of land if there be such land adjoining their homesteads. We do that in order to hold the man there who is now there, because now only one man out of six or seven of those who have in the past few years homesteaded these dry lands have stuck it out the five years. The gentleman from Ohio says, and the gentleman from Illinois says, that in time we will settle these lands without increasing the homestead. Let me read the gentleman from the record. We do not expect to live always, and we want neighbors now. At the present rate that our public lands are being taken under the five-year homestead provision it would take 3,656 years to settle all the land in Arizona; it would take 500 years to settle all the land in California, 195 years to appropriate the land in Colorado, 227 years to take the lands in Montana, and 345 years to enter the lands in Wyoming; and we do not expect to live that long. We want settlers, and we want them now, and we do not want the farmers from Illinois, the people of Iowa, of Michigan, of New England, who come out there to make homes, to get discouraged and leave our country; we want them to remain and become citizens.

We want to give them enough of those lands, so that if they have enough nerve, courage, and "sticktoitiveness" they may establish a prosperous American home. [Loud applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. I shall be glad to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Was this bill ever submitted to the Department of the Interior?

Mr. MONDELL. The President, in his first message to this Congress, recommends a larger homestead for the dry lands of the West. The Department of the Interior recommended a 640-acre homestead.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Was this bill ever referred to the Department of the Interior?

Mr. MONDELL. Not this particular bill, but two other bills relating to the same matters were referred to the Department.

Mr. BOWERS. Will the gentleman explain what is meant by the term "nonirrigable?"

Mr. MONDELL. Lands that can not be irrigated, having no water supply for their irrigation.

I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, my voice will not permit me to speak long. This bill ought to pass. It does not affect, except to make better, the homestead laws and possible settlement of the West. The necessity of holding these lands five years renders it impossible for any fraud to be perpetrated, and makes it possible to make a homestead of 320 acres one-fifth as valuable as the original 160-acre homestead in the Middle Western States. It has been charged by an irresponsible crank that this bill will affect the navigation of the Mississippi River and do other dire things. Only a mod-cum of this water empties into the Mississippi, and it can not have any effect on its flow. No harm can result from this extension of the homesteads on lands now mineral, nonirrigable, and dry. You can not make a home on this additional land; you can not cultivate it to any great extent. You can fence it as an inclosure for milch cows and horses used on the farm and protect the sparse grass from the free range of the loose stock on the public domain, and to that small extent will encourage the settler to build a home in the waste places. No man can afford to enter less than 360 acres of the lands described in this bill and expect to make a decent or valuable home thereon. The West needs settlement. This will aid it to some extent. Three hundred acres of the lands described in this bill are worth less than 20 acres of irrigated land. There is no objection urged against it except by Eastern men, who never saw the public domain and who know nothing of Western conditions. The bill should pass. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has six minutes remaining.

Mr. MONDELL. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of California. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the House to one fact that is quite likely to be overlooked, especially as it refers to California and the other mountainous States. That is, that the remaining public lands subject to entry under this act are very remote from the railroads and must necessarily remain so. They lie back in the hills and mountains, where railroads will never be built, so far as human intellect can now foresee. California and the other Western States are traversed through their great valleys by railroads, and that land has already been entered. The land that is capable of irrigation from the mountain streams has already been taken, and I do not think anyone could find a homestead in California outside of the irrigable valleys which are affected by this bill, without going 25 miles or more away from a railroad. Now, that is a very serious matter, as everyone knows, and it is not possible under any conditions which we can now foresee for railroads to be projected into these remote mountains, where there are little flats that could not be irrigated; and the remainder of the land would simply be a small pasture lot yielding a very meager amount of grass for the farmer's stock. It seems to me it is in the interest of promoting the settlement of these remote mountain valleys which are scarcely large enough to be fairly called valleys. I had a very interesting letter yesterday from a young man in Massachusetts who said that he and a schoolmate desired to go to California and secure a homestead, and I was much interested in their enterprise, and desired to get them into the West, and gave them all the information I could. It is for the benefit of the young men in the East. We are not asking these things for ourselves, or our neighbors, but hoping that it will attract to the West the young men starting out in life, and we desire that they have something approaching the opportunity to make a living which the young men had who settled the great Mississippi Valley and other States of the West in their day. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS].

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that in my opinion this bill ought to pass. I do not say it without giving some thought to it, neither do I say it without knowing something about the homestead law, for within the last seven years I myself have entered a tract of public land, have lived on it, and made final proof, and I know something of the conditions that the homesteader has to go through. Now, in my State this, perhaps, would be giving the homesteader too much land.

Mr. HOWLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I have only one minute.

Mr. MURDOCK. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. FERRIS. I am sorry, but I shall have to ask the gentleman to let me have my minute. I want to say, further, that there is an additional reason why this bill should pass, and that is that it is fortified well against the taking of land that is irrigable in quality.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. I now, Mr. Speaker, yield one minute to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. ELLIS of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, I think that many gentlemen opposing this bill have an erroneous idea of the value of land contemplated to be taken under this bill if it should become a law. This provides that only nonirrigable lands shall be taken. Nonirrigable is a term definitely understood in the West. It is land upon which water can not be placed. Ten acres of irrigable land is worth more for a home than any 320 acres which it is possible to take under this act. Any man would rather have five acres of good land which he can irrigate, with a right to permanently use a reasonable quantity of water, than an unlimited quantity of land of the character named in this bill. The cream of the western country has already been taken. As has been stated by other gentlemen, this bill will not be for the sole benefit of those now in the West. We have already taken the best that the country afforded, but we now want to give those who come among us an opportunity to get a homestead upon which they can make for themselves and their families a suitable home.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HOWLAND. Mr. Speaker, I now yield one minute to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HACKNEY].

Mr. HACKNEY. Mr. Speaker, what is nonirrigable land? Several years ago I went down into the Pecos Valley in New Mexico, and every man would say that the land there was not irrigable, but to-day it is the very garden spot of that country. Several years ago I visited west of Eaton, Colo., and they said that you could not irrigate that land at all. Two years ago I went out there again and found that that same land is irrigated and in the great sugar-beet belt. If you pass this bill and permit them to take up in extended homesteads the lands that can be classed to-day as nonirrigable you will ruin and cripple the reclamation project; and I say the hope of the West lies in the successful operation of this Reclamation Service.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. HOWLAND. Mr. Speaker, I now yield one minute to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REEDER].

Mr. REEDER. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that I have not more time to discuss this subject. I have lived in a public-land State practically all my life, and took a homestead myself thirty-seven years ago and have since lived among the homesteaders. There are so many things that can be said against the bill that I wish we had more time to discuss it. Now, what is considered as nonirrigable land to-day, may be worth $100 an acre in a short time. In Kansas, where at one period you could buy land for $50 to $100 a quarter section, to-day some of it is worth $200 to $400 an acre. Hence it is wrong for Congress to dispose of vast tracts of the public domain when it may be very valuable for homes in the near future. It is claimed the purpose of this bill is to secure settlement. The enactment of this bill may permit the transfer of the title of the land from the Government into the hands of people for speculation, and that is what we wish to guard against. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has two minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BONYNGE].

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Speaker, I regard this bill as the most important measure for the future development and settlement of the arid lands of the West of any that has been before Congress since the passage of the reclamation bill. The reclamation act provided for such lands as could be irrigated. This bill provides a means for the settlement and cultivation of that character of land for which there is no water available for irrigation. What irrigable land is is easily determinable. When you can not get water for the land for irrigation, such land is not irrigable.

The conditions to which this law will be applicable are entirely different to those prevailing in that portion of the country where 160 acres was regarded as the proper limit for the homestead unit. The President of the United States, in his message to Congress, recognized that these changes made necessary an enlarged homestead. There are remaining nearly 400,000,000 acres of nonirrigable land in the West that can not be profitably or successfully taken up under the 160-acre homestead law. Let the Members of the House remember that when the great States of the Mississippi Valley were settled the settlers then had the opportunity to take up 160 acres under the preemption law, 160 acres under the homestead law, 160 acres under the timber-culture law, and each settler could thus get at least 480 acres of land. As the land has become less valuable because of its character, we have decreased the size of the homestead, whereas we should have increased its size. These lands will yield a crop only once in two years instead of every year, and if the law is passed you are giving to the settlers only the same amount of land, considered in regard to the amount of its productivity, as those that have the 160 acres, and that is only upon the further assumption that these lands are equivalent in productivity with the lands settled in the States of the Mississippi Valley. It is not as liberal in its terms as I should have been glad to have it, but it will materially assist in the settlement, growth, and development of the arid States of the West, and I trust the bill will be passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CAPRON). The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Wyoming to suspend the rules and pass the bill as amended.

The question was taken.

Mr. WILLIAMS and Mr. HOWLAND demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HAGGOTT. Mr. Speaker, I have a general pair with Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN, of North Carolina. On the roll call I answered "present," but I am informed that if Mr. KITCHIN were here he would vote "aye," and by arrangement with the Democratic whip I wish to change my vote to "aye."

The name of Mr. HAGGOTT was called, and he voted "aye."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

PROVIDING FOR ADDITIONAL LAND FOR IDAHO UNDER THE PROVISIONS OF THE CAREY ACT.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the rules of the House be suspended, that Senate joint resolution No. 51 be taken from the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House, and placed upon its final passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Idaho moved to suspend the rules and pass the following Senate joint resolution, which the Clerk will report, with amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. R. 51) providing for additional lands for Idaho under the provisions of the Carey Act.

Resolved, etc., That an additional 2,000,000 acres of arid lands within each of the States of Idaho and Wyoming be made available and subject to the terms of section 4 of an act of Congress entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes," approved August 18, 1894, and by amendments thereto, and that the States of Idaho and Wyoming be allowed under the provisions of said acts said additional area, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the purposes and under the provisions of said acts.

Amend the title so as to read: "Joint resolution providing for additional lands for Idaho and Wyoming under the provisions of the Carey Act."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. REEDER. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second. I would like to inquire whether the gentleman from Alabama is opposed to the bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not know whether I am opposed to the bill or not. I rose for the purpose of demanding a second, so as to get information as to what the bill meant.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Kansas opposed to the bill?

Mr. REEDER. I am.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule a second is ordered and the gentleman from Idaho is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Kansas is entitled to twenty minutes.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, under the present laws there are two great systems of reclamation applicable to arid lands of the western part of the United States. One of those is known as the "reclamation law," that was passed in 1902. Under the provisions of that law the Federal Government bears the expense of building reclamation works, and the settlers later on, acquiring the lands under the homestead law, pay back to the Federal Government the money that the Federal Government has expended in the construction of those irrigation works. This resolution does not pertain to that act. The other act by which lands are reclaimed in large areas is under what is known as the "Carey Act," an act that was passed by Congress in 1894. Under the provisions of that law not to exceed one million of acres was granted to each of the several arid States. Only eight States of the arid belt availed themselves of the privileges of that law. It is necessary under the provisions of the act for the States that seek to avail themselves of the provisions to enact such legislation looking to the reclamation of the lands as will meet with the approval of the Interior Department. Among the States that have enacted such legislation are the States of Idaho and Wyoming. Those two States have almost exhausted the entire grant that was made under the provisions of the Carey Act. Under that act it is provided that the States shall be responsible for the reclamation of the land, or rather that some means be provided by the States for the reclamation of the land. The settlers pay for the reclamation of these lands and ultimately acquire the ownership of the irrigation project, the same as they ultimately will acquire it under the provisions of the Federal law providing for the reclamation of the arid land. This resolution, if passed, will provide for the reclamation of land in those two States, in addition to the lands that will be reclaimed by the Federal Government, but the Federal Government will not be required to bear the expense of the construction of the irrigation works.

The total cost of reclamation will amount to about the same thing to the settlers. No settler, on the other hand, can acquire more than 160 acres of land. The fact of the business is that the average acreage of land acquired is probably less than 100 acres. The fact that we have in Idaho and Wyoming used most of the land that was originally granted under the Carey Act is the reason we have come to this Congress and asked that those two States be granted the additional privilege of claiming lands to the extent of 2,000,000 acres. This is not a grant of 2,000,000 acres to the State. The Secretary of the Interior has control over the lands in the projects that may be applied for, and unless the Secretary is satisfied of the feasibility of the project and the ability of the States to reclaim it, the Secretary may withhold the approving of land to the State for reclamation.

I believe the Federal Government is amply safeguarded in that respect. More than that, under the provisions of the law the State itself can make no profit out of reclaiming the lands. It may charge 50 cents per acre, which pays the machinery for carrying on the work, as the State must carry it on, and if there should be a residue left over after the State has borne the expense of reclaiming the projects, that residue, by operation of the original act as passed in 1894, reverts to a fund which shall be used for the reclamation of arid lands.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to ask the gentleman a question or two. The Federal law, as it now stands, authorizes the Government under the arid-land act passed to reclaim all arid lands, and, as I understand the law, when the Government takes hold of a project to reclaim the settler must pay the cost of reclamation. Is that so under the Carey law?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes; that is so under the Carey Act.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. As I understand, the Federal law limits the number of acres a settler can take to eighty. Is that so?

Mr. FRENCH. Not necessarily. Under the national reclamation act settlers may acquire as high as 160 acres, although the Department is trying to make the amount of land that they reclaim be granted to as many people as can reasonably build homes upon it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. What is the distinction between the Federal reclamation and the Carey Act in reference to the number of acres to be taken?

Mr. FRENCH. There is no distinction in the broad principles of the law. Under the Carey Act not more than 160 acres may be granted to any one individual. The fact is that, in my State, the average per individual is less than 100 acres under the Carey Act.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Now, under the national reclamation act I understand that it requires at least five years' settlement and that only one-fifth of the amount due the Government can be paid each year. It was put in there for the purpose of making the land subject to homestead entry alone. Now, I would like to know what the gentleman has to say as to the Carey Act along those lines. How is the real settler protected?

Mr. FRENCH. Settlement and cultivation are both required under the Carey Act, and I would say this: That no law that either State or Federal Government could pass will so compel actual settlement and cultivation of the land as the necessities that are imposed upon settlers upon irrigated land. A man may buy a piece of land that the rain falls upon and profitably rent it or lease it out. No man can buy a delicate piece of machinery and rent it out to a renter and expect to make a profit, nor can he buy or own irrigated lands and expect to make much profit by the ownership thereof, because the whole system of irrigation is so complex that it requires, to make it the most successful, the living upon the land and actual cultivation thereof.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman's answer is good argument, but it does not answer my question.

Mr. FRENCH. I will yield just a little further. I have promised time, and I can not yield much longer to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentlemen did not answer my question as to the distinction between these laws.

Mr. FRENCH. Under both laws the settler may pay out during a period of ten years ten annual payments. Under the reclamation act the national homestead law applies, but it does not apply under the Carey Act. The Carey Act, however, requires actual settlement, and requires the cultivation of not less than one-eighth of the entire land before the patent can issue.

Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. OLCOTT in the chair). The gentleman has eleven minutes left.

Mr. FRENCH. I would now prefer that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REEDER] consume some of his time, and I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. REEDER. Mr. Chairman, since we passed the national irrigation law my attention has been called to the effect of the land laws upon projects of irrigation, and when my attention was called to the question of appropriating 4,000,000 acres of land under the present resolution, I naturally proceeded to examine into this resolution, with no intention of opposing it, because as the law is written it furnishes from these lands homes for the people on the land under the very best conditions possible, which is a great advantage to the nation in the production of the very best class of citizens. But when I came to look into the matter, I learned there was a probability that the lands were not being legally used. I went to the Department and questioned the Secretary of the Interior in an endeavor to learn whether these lands were being so used as intended in the Carey law, and I found that under the law they did not have authority to learn anything about their final disposition. Now, I think that, while I can not say to you I am satisfied the lands are being wrongly used, for I am not absolutely convinced of it, but I do think there is a great big question whether in the outcome you will find these lands are not being utilized as the Carey law directs.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. REEDER. Certainly.

Mr. MONDELL. Has the gentleman ever been upon a Carey Act project?

Mr. REEDER. Yes, sir; at Twin Falls, Idaho.

Mr. MONDELL. Is there a better irrigation project on the face of the earth?

Mr. REEDER. No, sir; that is a wonderfully good project. And I want to say that if I could be convinced now or at any time in the future that all the lands that are being used will be used in any such a way as in that project I should be for it. When I found I could not get the information that I desired I asked, "Why can not we have this information?" and I was answered that, while it would cost but little to get the information, it could not be obtained under the present laws.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. Does not the gentleman recollect that in the sundry civil appropriation bill a reappropriation of $1,000 was made to the Interior Department to make this very investigation that you are talking about?

Mr. REEDER. No, sir.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Illinois called attention to the fact.

Mr. MANN. That would not investigate between here and out there.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. But they did not use it and did not think they needed it.

Mr. MANN. I do not think they said that they did not need it, but that they did not have enough.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. My recollection is that it had not been used, and it was reappropriated.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. REEDER. I would like the gentleman to occupy the floor in his own time. I will answer any question when you are on the floor and in your time which anyone on that side chooses to ask. I would like to occupy a little of my time in discussing the bill. On the other bill, which I regard as a very bad bill, I had but one minute. I would like to occupy a good deal more time on this one. I introduced this resolution, and it seemed to me it ought to have passed, but it did not pass:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to investigate as to the character and disposition that has been made of the lands granted to the States of Wyoming and Idaho under an act of Congress of August 18, 1894, commonly known as the Carey Act, and report his findings to Congress. It is further provided that said findings shall show what portion of said land is now irrigated and cultivated and also what portion is occupied and cultivated by persons who own the lands.

Now, I want to say that I asked the Secretary of the Interior quite a number of questions, and here is what I want to bring before the House. Here is what he says:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, March 30, 1903.

HON. W. A. REEDER,
Chairman Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands,
House of Representatives.

SIR: I am in receipt of your letter of March 20, 1903, inclosing for report joint resolution of amendment of S. R. 51, relative to providing for additional land for Idaho and Wyoming under the provisions of the Carey Act.

The following table will show you what States have proceeded under the provisions of said act and the amount of land which has been selected, approved, and patented:

	Number of acres se- lected.	Number of acres ap- proved.	Number of acres pat- ented.
Colorado.....	59,807.04	54,102.99
Idaho.....	909,104.05	651,713.24	76,041.04
Montana.....	104,748.01	83,338.54	18,296.91
Nevada.....	12,644.61
Oregon.....	435,701.90	245,287.52	50,038.13
Utah.....	285,207.57	48,226.74
Washington.....	102,501.34
Wyoming.....	809,906.45	649,071.93	50,813.00

Nevada and Washington have apparently abandoned all action under said acts.

The difference in the acreages selected by the States and the number which have been approved and patented in some cases is considerable, but it is accounted for by the fact that such difference is included in the number of acres canceled by this Department and by the applications which have been filed and are now in the process of adjudication. The number of acres patented represents the amount for which the States have furnished proof of irrigation and reclamation, as required by the act and the regulations issued thereunder. Proof of the reclamation of certain other land selected has been furnished, but has not yet been accepted by this Department and patent issued to the State. You will observe by the original act of August 18, 1894 (28 Stat., 424), that when satisfactory proof is furnished of the reclamation of such lands this Department issues a patent to the State for such lands. The State then, in turn, issues its patent to the persons to whom it sells the same. The State is bound by the terms of the act and by the conditions of the contract which it enters into with the United States at the time of the approval of its segregation to dispose of the land in quantities of not more than 160 acres to any one person, and then only to bona fide settlers who are citizens of the United States or who have declared their intention to become such citizens. To what extent the States are carrying out this provision this Department is not advised, and it can not give an estimate as to what per cent of the lands which have been sold by the State is still in the possession of the original purchaser or whether he is occupying the land as his home. Neither can an estimate be given as to what per cent of such land has passed into the hands of persons other than actual settlers.

This Department has received circulars issued by some of the States, or rather by the company which is constructing the irrigation system and selling the water right, advertising such lands for sale, and reporting in one instance that nonresidents can purchase such lands and obtain title thereto without the necessity of making settlement. Another State only requires a residence of thirty days upon the land prior to the time of making final proof before patent is issued to him by the State.

Very respectfully,

JAMES RUDOLPH GARFIELD,
Secretary.

Now, having these facts before me, I want to say that I felt that as I had been interesting myself largely ever since I have been in Congress in these Western lands for the purpose of opening them to settlement, and I believed that they should be prepared for that purpose, we are entitled to know what becomes of lands which have been given to States for the purpose of reclamation. I have even suggested that we let this resolution pass and let each State have a million acres of land. They have already had a million acres of land each. The proposition is that they now have another million each, and Congress and the people know what is done with it. I can not see that there is anything wrong in such an arrangement. If we can not arrange to get this information we can well afford to wait until the next session of Congress before giving these States these 4,000,000 acres, and permit this inquiry to be made in the meantime. It has been suggested that it will cost a great deal of money to learn the facts, but the Interior Department says it will not cost a great sum. We note that Idaho has only had 76,000 acres patented out of her first 1,000,000 acres, and Wyoming, I think, only 50,000 patented out of her 1,000,000 acres; and the Carey Act has been in existence for twelve years, I believe.

Mr. MONDELL. The State does not secure an acre of this land until it is segregated by direction of the Department of the Interior in certain areas.

Mr. REEDER. They had a right to take it. I am very much in hopes that the Members of this House will not vote to transfer this 4,000,000 acres of land. Here are homes for nearly 100,000 families, of 40 acres each, 500,000 people, and I do believe that we ought not to carelessly vote this land away from the Government. If they will make homes of this land, I am for this bill as much as any man in this House, but I believe we are entitled to know as to what use is to be made of it before we vote to transfer it. We have been so careless about the disposition of our public domain and our other public utilities, because we have so much routine work in Congress, that Members do not become acquainted with the facts as to many of the things that come before us. This is one of the things that I think Eastern Members do not know much about. I think I am peculiarly well situated to know a great deal about it, because I moved into a homestead country thirty-seven years ago. I saw lands that within ten years were not regarded as being worth anything, that have become worth $200 or $300 an acre on account of changed conditions.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REEDER. I decline to yield. I will answer all the gentleman's questions within his own time. I believe that there can be no possible harm in putting this matter off until the next session of Congress. Then we will know more about it. They have plenty of land at present. I will reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FRENCH. How much time has the gentleman reserved?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas has twelve minutes remaining.

Mr. FRENCH. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the use of the word "grant" in this legislation is somewhat of a misnomer. There is no absolute grant of land contemplated. There is a law—the Carey Act—under which the Secretary of the Interior, if any one of the States having arid land assures him that a certain area of land can and will be irrigated, may temporarily withdraw these lands for the purpose of their irrigation. That experimental law, when it was passed, limited the area to a million acres in each State.

Mr. REEDER. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. MONDELL. I can not yield. The gentleman would not yield to me.

Mr. REEDER. I thought that possibly the gentleman wanted to ask me some questions now.

Mr. MONDELL. I should be glad to answer the gentleman's question if I had time. We in Wyoming have undertaken the irrigation of nearly all of our first million acres—that is, we are under way with those projects. The gentleman from Kansas says "perhaps," and he has suspicions with regard to these reclamation projects. We have about eight of them in my State under construction. On those, so far as the land is prepared for settlement, it is settled upon in tracts of from 50 to 160 acres, at a price to the settler less than the Government charges under the national irrigation law. If the Secretary of the Interior does not know about the working of this law, it is his fault.

There is $500,000 in the sundry civil bill for special agents, every dollar of which can be used for the purpose of investigating Carey Act propositions, but there has been no complaint of the workings of this law until the gentleman from Kansas notified us of his suspicions. There has been nothing but praise of its operations, and therefore the Secretary has not uselessly spent public money in making investigations.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee rose.

Mr. MONDELL. I can not yield. I have only a minute or two remaining. The Secretary of the Interior can now investigate if he desires. When the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REEDER] was before our committee with his resolution, the members of the committee asked him if he had any information indicating that these lands were not being irrigated and settled upon. He said no; he had none. And yet simply because he had had a resolution printed with regard to which he had no information, he wanted the committee to call for a dragnet investigation. It would have been quite as proper to have provided for an investigation of the workings of the national reclamation law. It would have been quite as proper to investigate the workings of any other particular law, when all these questions can be investigated under the lump-sum appropriation provided by law for that purpose. The fact is the Carey Act leads to reclamation and settlement. It does not cost the Government a dollar. The law is being fully complied with, but if not, the Secretary of the Interior can compel full compliance with the law.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the Government get any pay at all?

Mr. MONDELL. The Government gets nothing, and the State gets nothing, except that the State charges 50 cents an acre, which pays for the State organization and expenditure in looking after the settlement of those lands.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Who does the irrigating, the State or private corporations?

Mr. MONDELL. The State makes contract with private corporations under which they must contract to do a certain class of work, and they must not charge the settler more than a given price per acre, which, in my State, in every instance is from 10 to 30 per cent lower than the Government price under Government projects. The entryman makes entry of the land and makes final proof of reclamation and cultivation as he does in the case of a homestead, and he must show all these things. The Carey Act brings private capital to the work of irrigation reclamation. It works side by side with the national law. In the northern part of my State we have a national irrigation project on one side of the Shoshone River and the Carey project on the other. Both projects are this spring opening their lands to settlement, and one is as good as the other, and on the Carey project the water rights are about $10 less per acre than on the Government project. It is possible that all the works on the Carey Act project are not as well finished as the Government works, but they are substantial and permanent and the water right costs less.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, anticipating the objections of the gentleman from Kansas, I inquired of the governor of my State, as well as the registers of the land offices in the southern part of the State, where the desert lands are, and I wired to each one of them these questions:

Do actual settlers live on Carey Act lands in Idaho?
Are lands passing into large holdings of few persons or companies?
What percentage of land is being put into crops this spring?

The answer of the governor is as follows:

BOISE, IDAHO, April 18, 1908.

Hon. BURTON L. FRENCH,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Actual settlement and cultivation must be made on Carey lands before final proof is allowed by State. State's agent makes personal inspection of settlement and cultivation of all claims for final proof. Law allows 160 acres to individual. Present average holding on Carey lands of this State is less than 100 acres. There is steady decrease in average individual holdings of Carey lands in Idaho. Fully half Carey Act lands where water is available are in cultivation. Under south side Twin Falls project, reclaimed under Carey Act, water was first turned on land three years ago this month. There has been created valuation of more than $15,000,000; population of more than 10,000 people. New county has been created for this tract alone. Bonds have been sold for erection of schoolhouse at Twin Falls City to cost $60,000. State of Idaho has taken these bonds. There are now five good-sized towns on this tract, with schoolhouses and churches. Power plant has been installed at Great Shoshone Falls. All this is new wealth. Not a dollar of taxable property was on this tract of land four years ago. People of Idaho only ask for opportunity to develop their State.

F. R. GOODING, Governor.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask unanimous consent to insert the other telegrams which I have received answering these questions, if I may have that privilege.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am sorry, but I shall have to object to the insertion of anything in the Record. The gentleman can read them.

Mr. FRENCH. Then, Mr. Speaker, I would say in answer to the gentleman from Kansas that the reason why the land does not pass to private ownership and patents issue therefor in greater number than that mentioned is because, under the terms of the bill, the settlers have ten years to pay for the water, and they do not need to prove up until a considerable time after they have gone onto the land. The fact of the matter is the first Carey Act tract in Idaho is only begun, and is the one referred to by the governor, where the lands were not reclaimed until about four years ago, and only three crops have been raised on the land. The State of Wyoming is just a very little ahead of the State of Idaho in the work under this act. Now, Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. REEDER. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has twelve minutes left.

Mr. REEDER. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois four minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this is a great day for the land grabbers. [Laughter.] There would have been and there was a justification for the original Carey Act, passed in 1894, before the irrigation law was adopted by Congress. But there is, in my judgment, no justification now for the Carey Act. Here is the proposition: After having received a million acres of land, the State of Idaho—

Mr. MONDELL rose.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the gentleman from Wyoming need not get up; he would not yield to anybody else, and he need not ask me a question. [Laughter.] He can not take any of my time. Under date of January 18 the Secretary reports that of the million acres provided for the State of Idaho, 41,000 acres have been irrigated, reclaimed, and patented. Now, it strikes me that it might be well to proceed along the lines a little bit further before they want 2,000,000 more acres. When this bill passed the Senate it provided for 1,000,000 additional acres for Idaho. I am not sure, but it seems to me as originally introduced it was for a much smaller amount than 1,000,000 acres. It passed to give Idaho 1,000,000 more, but when it came under the gentle influence of the gentleman from Wyoming, it emerged giving Idaho 2,000,000 acres and Wyoming 2,000,000 acres. Wyoming has done nothing under the original Carey Act worth mentioning.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. MANN. I do not yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. But the gentleman does not want to make that kind of a misstatement. Wyoming first started work—

Mr. MANN. I do not want this to be taken out of my time. The gentleman is forever interrupting everybody else on the floor and yields to no one.

Mr. MONDELL. But does the gentleman wish to make a misstatement?

Mr. MANN. I ask the gentleman to take his seat. I would not deal with the gentleman in that way, but he constantly refuses to yield; he would not yield at all to anybody sitting on the other side.

Mr. MONDELL. Because the gentleman that asked me to yield had refused to yield to me. He had fifteen minutes and I had five minutes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman once more wants to talk. The truth of the matter is that the gentleman is so tender because he put in 2,000,000 acres for Wyoming that had not been thought of at all until the bill had passed the Senate, that he does not like to have it mentioned.

Mr. MONDELL. But, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. MANN. He is an able gentleman, and I do not blame him, and I hope he will not take any personal offense at what I say.

Mr. MONDELL. Not if the gentleman does not misstate the facts, but the gentleman has misstated the facts.

Mr. MANN. The "gentleman" has not misstated the facts. He has stated the facts absolutely correctly. I took the trouble to look up this matter when it first passed the Senate. I read the debates which took place in the Senate, which probably the gentleman did not do. I discovered some of the weak points in this, and I wondered as I read it and saw this bill whether it would be possible for this bill to pass the gentleman's committee without bringing in Wyoming, and I discovered when it was reported that Wyoming was in just as big as life, and I do not blame the gentleman for taking care of his State.

Mr. MONDELL. But I have seen the thousands of settlers under the Carey Act in my State and, therefore, I know.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Speaker, we have an irrigation project, carried by the Government, where the terms are much stricter in regard to settlement than they are under this original Carey Act. When the Government undertook the irrigation and reclamation service it made it much more stringent about settling than it does under this act. The Carey Act is just as loosely drawn as possible. The taking of this land may at any time interfere with the taking of the land by the Government for reclamation services, and as long as the Government is in the reclamation service and has $15,000,000 a year for reclamation, I think the Government ought to construct these reclamation irrigation projects, and not permit them to be turned over by the State to some parties interested.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Where does the Government get the $15,000,000?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. REEDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES].

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me like Wyoming should be content with what she has.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman not think that Wyoming wants any more settlers?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Oh, wait a minute!

Mr. MONDELL. Wyoming wants more settlers.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I will give the gentleman my minute of time if he will give me half of his time.

Mr. MONDELL. I will do that.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Has the gentleman any time?

Mr. MONDELL. I have not any. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, Wyoming "has bit off more than she can chew." The record shows that. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REEDER] has called at the Department for information on the point, What are these States doing with the land they have? and nobody has been able to get the information.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. REEDER. I yield half a minute more to the gentleman. Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. He has asked for an investigation and here is this resolution in the Public Lands Committee, which I am ready to vote for, to investigate and find out the facts. Now, can not you do without another million acres until the next session of Congress? You say there is $500,000—

Mr. MONDELL rose.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. No, no!

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman asked me a question.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. You say there are $500,000 in one of the bills here to investigate this matter. That being true, if Secretary Garfield does his duty, and I presume he will, we will have the facts by next session.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. So I am opposed to the proposition.

Mr. REEDER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to state to the gentleman before me that I think I acted properly in making an inquiry into the disposition of this land. Now, I have had a good deal to do in Western conventions recently, and there is a good deal of a disposition there to think that Eastern people have no rights in this land. There is a disposition to think that Eastern Members of Congress are not entitled to have anything to do with public-land matters. Now, I do not say that is true of all the people, but I noticed it at the Boise irrigation congress, and I noticed it in the last summer's meeting at Denver.

Mr. MANN. That is true in the House here. They think it is impertinent for anybody to even—

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, has the gentleman from Kansas yielded to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. REEDER. I have not yielded to anybody. When I commenced to investigate the matter of 320-acre homesteads and the 4,000,000 acres desired under the Carey Act many publications and letters came to my desk urging the passage of these bills. I will only read one or two on account of the limited time at my disposal. This pamphlet or circular is called "The West to the East: An Appeal," and it says this:

The East has had its cake and eaten it; in turn the West, too, desires to munch its cookie in its own way—in the way that will best attract settlers to regions now sparse of population. It is a reasonable and fair ambition; one that you of the older States long since achieved. Therefore we ask you not to permit the door of opportunity to be shut in our face; give us our chance.

Now, I do not believe that there is a Member of Congress that has done more work in the interest of settling the West than I have, and I do not believe there is a Member more desirous of seeing the public domain irrigated and made into homes for those who need homes than I do. I intend to spend some time in talking about it on the floor of the House later. At the Boise convention there was an effort made to pass resolutions asking Congress to appropriate $100,000,000 out of the General Treasury to augment the national irrigation fund. I said at that time I was utterly opposed to such a resolution or to such an appropriation by Congress, for the reason that by reason of certain land laws we have lost to that fund $75,000,000 already from the irrigation fund, which has gone into the pockets of speculators. But I will not spend any more time on that subject now, because I am going to spend an hour soon talking on the land question, and time is now too short. I am sorry I did not do this before we passed the 320-acre homestead law. My inquiry as to what was being done with this land was proper of the Secretary of the Interior—

Mr. FRENCH. Will the gentleman yield? Do you know of one instance—

Mr. REEDER. I inquired of the Secretary of the Interior in good faith, and I was met with the statement that they had no authority to know what became of these lands. I said then I would introduce a resolution to give them such authority, and that resolution was tabled very quickly by the Committee on the Public Lands. Well, I inquired at the Department, as I said, and they replied that they had no information and no power to get such information. Now, I believe this House ought to insist that these States continue to utilize the million acres each now has under the Carey Act until the next term of Congress and let us have the opportunity to get information as to what use is being made of the land they have. I wish to say further that I have learned there is a great deal of interest in the passage of this bill. That arises from a large association of moneyed men who are making money out of those lands.

If it is the policy to sell the land to the settlers for a fair price after it is irrigated as it is stated, and I have no reason to doubt the statement, then I have no objection to the method of handling the land, and I do not object to a great association of Jews making a mint of money out of these lands provided they sell the land at a reasonable rate to the settlers. I have had handed me a statement about the projects in Idaho that are to be developed under the Carey Act. I took this to some person in the Department—now, I will not name persons for this reason, many people have been in the Department for years who are not at the head of the Department, but who know more of the facts than the real head of the Department in many cases.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think these construction companies are out there for their health, or out there for the purpose of grabbing money?

Mr. REEDER. I do not think they seek health solely. I am in favor of the Carey Act, and I am in favor of any proposition or any project which will irrigate these Western lands if it will add one more tillable acre to our national domain, providing it gets into the hands of home owners without paying too great a tribute to speculators.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield? What will become of this $500,000 that has been going into these bills?

Mr. REEDER. I do not think it is intended for this kind of an investigation at all, so far as that is concerned.

Mr. MONDELL. That money is for the investigation of public lands.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Three minutes.

Mr. FRENCH. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS].

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, this matter was before the Committee on Public Lands, examined carefully, and we thought it was all right there. I thought it was right then and I think it is right now. It is a bill that lets the State handle the land and enables the homesteaders to get them irrigated. The legislature, I am advised, has passed laws out there governing the distribution and the letting and subletting of these lands. Those States need some capital to come there and open up those lands. An individual homesteader could not do it, but when they can get a company out there to open a large tract or plat or grant of that land—I care not what you call it—and then let subowners or subhomesteaders under this land grant take up that land and utilize it it brings good results. We had numerous proofs before the committee to that effect. The legislature has enacted, so my friend from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] tells me, laws that make it safe and keep it from getting into the hands of speculators and large tracts of it from getting into the hands of a few.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FRENCH. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McGUIRE].

Mr. McGUIRE. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Public Lands Committee I voted against the resolution introduced before that committee by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REEDER]. I did it for the reason that I had satisfied my mind that the Secretary of the Interior under existing laws could make all the investigation necessary.

Mr. MANN. He says he can not.

Mr. McGUIRE. And no investigation has been made; the Secretary can make investigation. If there has been the suspicion, as suggested by the gentleman from Kansas, and upon which he has based his argument—if that suspicion has existed any considerable length of time—there is no reason why an investigation could not have been made before the committee considered this measure.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, just a word in conclusion. I want to say this, that when the resolution was pending I asked the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REEDER], and other members of the committee did, as I remember it, whether or not he could point to a single instance where there had been a breach of faith or violation of the good faith that should exist under this law. He did not point to one, the Department did not point to one, he did not mention a single name of an official of the Department—though we were there as a committee—that could point to a single violation of the law. I want to say this: If you go to the Twin Falls tract, in Idaho, to which he refers, you will find as confirmed—not only by the governor, but by other testimony that I have received—you will find that the average ownership of land there is less than 100 acres of land for each individual. It was a sagebrush plain four or five years ago, but now it is a veritable garden, with over 50 per cent of the land in actual cultivation, with homes, churches, and villages everywhere. And I defy anyone upon this floor or elsewhere to point to a single case where a single violation of the law has occurred. I want to say that any investigation that could be made, and which I would thoroughly approve of, would result in showing to the country the best and fairest law operating for the reclamation of the best lands that can be irrigated throughout the arid West. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to submit a request for unanimous consent. It is evident that the House can not understand this resolution from the debate that has taken place, and I ask unanimous consent that further time of twenty minutes on each side be granted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] asks unanimous consent that further time on this joint resolution (S. 51) be extended, and that twenty minutes be allowed on each side.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, while I would like to see the time extended, owing to the filibustering tactics of the gentleman who makes the request, wasting the time of the House, I shall have to object to this extension.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I submit that the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], excepting in so far as they contain the phrase "I object," be stricken from the Record.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, regular order!

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair only heard the phrase "I object." The question is on the motion to suspend the rules and agree to the amendment and pass the joint resolution.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 80, nays 98, answered "present" 15, not voting 186, as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 20784. An act to authorize additional aids to navigation in the Light-House Establishment, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 20471) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 4063. An act for the widening of Benning road, and for other purposes.

The Speaker announced his signature to enrolled joint resolutions of the following titles:

S. R. 37. Joint resolution disapproving certain laws enacted by the legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico; and

S. R. 79. Joint resolution authorizing the widening of the channel of Michigan City Harbor.

DRAINAGE OF CERTAIN LANDS IN MINNESOTA.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the motion which I send to the desk may be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

I move to suspend the rules, take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 19541) entitled "An act to authorize the drainage of certain lands in the State of Minnesota," disagree to Senate amendments numbered 1, 2, and 3, agree to amendment numbered 5, and agree to amendment numbered 4 with an amendment striking out all of said amendment and inserting: "That unless the purchasers of unentered lands shall within ninety days after the sale provided for in section 3, pay to the proper receiver the fees, commissions, and purchase price to which the United States may be entitled as provided in section 5, and unless the purchasers of entered lands shall within ninety days after the right of redemption has expired make like payments as provided for in this section, any person having the qualifications of a homestead entryman may pay to the proper receiver for not more than 160 acres of land for which such payment has not been made: First, the unpaid fees, commissions, and purchase price to which the United States may then be entitled; and second, the sum at which the land was sold at the sale for the drainage charges, and in addition thereto, if bid in by the State, interest on the amount bid by the State at the rate of 7 per cent per annum from the date of such sale, and thereupon the person making such payment shall become subrogated to the rights of such purchaser to receive a patent for said land. When any payment is made to effect such subrogation the receiver shall transmit to the treasurer of the county where the land is situated the amount at which the land was sold at the sale for drainage charges together with interest paid thereon, if any, less any sum in excess of what may be due for such drainage charge if the land when sold was unentered."

Mr. WILLIAMS. I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the Senate amendments to the bill. He has just read the motion.

The Senate amendments were read, as follows:

Section 5, page 2, after the word "time," insert in line 25 "within three months." Page 3, line 7, after the words "homestead laws," insert the following:

"If such payment is not made to the receiver within three months from the date of such sale all right to purchase or enter said land on the part of the person purchasing at the sale provided in section 3 of this act, shall cease and determine and said land shall, without further action or proceeding, be subject to entry under the homestead laws, subject, first, to the payment to the receiver of the minimum price of $1.25 per acre, or such price as may have been fixed by law for such land, together with the usual fees and commissions charged in entry; second, to the payment to the receiver by the purchaser at such sale of the amount appearing to have been paid therefor under the provisions of section 4 of this act."

In line 9, page 4, after the word "time," insert "within ninety days."

In line 19, after the word "entryman," insert the following:

"Provided, That unless the payment of $1.25 per acre, or such other price as may have been fixed by law for such land, together with the usual fees and commissions charged in entries, be paid to the receiver within said ninety days, all rights of the entryman and all rights of the purchaser at the sale provided for in section 3 of this act shall cease and determine, and said lands shall, without further action or proceedings, be subject to homestead entry under the provisions of the homestead laws, subject to paying to the receiver, first, the minimum price of $1.25 per acre, or such other price as may have been fixed by law for such lands, together with the usual fees and commissions charged in entry of like lands under the homestead laws; and, second, upon payment to the receiver for the benefit of the purchaser at the sale provided for in section 3 of this act, the amount which may appear due from the statement of such sale provided for in section 4 of this act."

Page 5, line 23, after the word "ownership," insert:

"SEC. 8. That hereafter homestead entries and final proofs may be made upon all ceded Chippewa Indian lands in Minnesota embraced in the withdrawal under the act of June 21, 1906, entitled 'An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department' (34 Stat. L., p. 325), and patents may issue thereon as in other homestead cases, upon the payment by the entryman of the price prescribed by law for such land and on entries on the ceded Red Lake Reservation in addition thereto the sum of 3 cents per acre to repay the cost of the drainage survey thereof, which addition shall be disposed of the same as the other proceeds of said land."

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask a second.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands a second. Under the rule a second is ordered. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] to twenty minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, this is a House bill with certain Senate amendments. The motion is to disagree to Senate amendments Nos. 1, 2, and 3, to agree to amendment No. 5, and to agree with an amendment to amendment No. 4. As we have disagreed to three Senate amendments, it is not necessary to discuss those three amendments. Now, as to the amendment to which we agree, that amendment is a provision contained in a bill which has been favorably reported by the House Committee on the Public Lands. It has this effect: Several years ago there was some hope in Minnesota that the Government might enter upon swamp-land reclamation up there, and with that idea in view certain lands and homestead entries were temporarily suspended in the hope that the Government would go on with the reclamation. This is a law under which the State is to reclaim those lands, and the last amendment which we adopt is simply a provision restoring those lands to entry and to final proof that were withdrawn some time ago, and to charge them with 3 cents an acre in order that they may reimburse the Treasury in the sum of $25,000, an appropriation made for their drainage survey a year or two ago.

Now, as to amendment No. 4, which we amend—

Mr. WILLIAMS. Did the bill as it passed the House contain a charge of 3 cents an acre?

Mr. MONDELL. No; the bill as it passed the House—

Mr. WILLIAMS. It charged whatever the expense might be, did it not?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; but that charge against these lands that have been withdrawn and are now restored to entry is a special charge of 3 cents an acre to reimburse the Treasury for a small appropriation made for their survey. Now, the Senate amendments that we disagreed to were all intended by the Senate to safeguard the final entry of the lands after they were reclaimed. I am inclined to think that the bill was properly safeguarded as it passed the House, but these Senate amendments do place additional safeguards around it. So we felt that instead of accepting them in three amendments we would condense them in one. So this motion is practically to agree to the Senate amendments to the bill, putting those amendments in a somewhat different form, and the amendment relates entirely to the manner in which the homestead entrymen shall enter the land. The House has carefully considered the bill. These amendments perfect it, or were so intended, and I believe they do. We adopt them, but we put them together in what we believe to be better form than the Senate amendments.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, this is the most absolutely satisfactory illustration of the thoroughly unsatisfactory manner of doing business that has been adopted by an otherwise helpless majority. Here is a motion to suspend the rules, take from the Speaker's table a bill which I have barely managed to procure from the document room, a bill containing about five and a half pages, and to "disagree to Senate amendments numbered 1, 2, and 3," to "agree to another amendment numbered 5," and "to agree to an amendment numbered 4," with an amendment striking out all of said amendment and inserting something. There is nothing in the motion to tell anybody what the amendments are. There is nothing before the House to do that except what the Clerk has read from the desk. There is no opportunity for anybody to have it before him on his desk and examine it and understand precisely what it means. The gentleman from Wyoming has undertaken to explain it, and I will undertake to say now that there is not a man within the sound of my voice who, if he votes "no" upon this motion, will know what he is voting against, or, if he votes "aye," will know what he is voting for. There is not a man within or without the sound of my voice, except the conferees, who knows anything under the sun about it. The only thing that is set out is the House substitute for one Senate amendment which is set out in the motion. It would of course be possible to take this bill, read it before the House, give some idea to the House what was contained in it, to send to the Speaker's desk and read again in extenso as read by the Clerk in the usual way, amid the usual disorder, without any attention being paid to the Senate amendments by anybody. If that were attempted, the bill and amendments could not be read within the twenty minutes of time at my disposal. It is absolutely impossible for me to know, it is absolutely impossible for any of you to know, what this motion will consummate if it passes, or what would be defeated by voting against the motion.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is a very good rule of legislation that the proponent of a proposition be charged with the burden of proof himself to make the merits of the proposition clear to the legislators. They must understand that they are being asked to do something which they ought to do, and if that understanding is not effected it is a very safe rule to vote "no." Whenever you are in doubt, vote "no;" whenever you are in ignorance, vote "no," unless that ignorance be an ignorance that could be overcome by some exertion of your own industry, your own intelligence, or your own ingenuity before the time to vote comes. It would be absolutely impossible within the time before the House to make even a studied and careful examination of the matter set up in this motion contained in the amendment and contained in the bill. So that there is not only ignorance in the minds of the House, but there is absolute inability to dispel that ignorance.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there ought to be a little reason in all things. A matter as complicated as this, at any rate, ought not to come up in this manner. There is no opportunity to take a separate vote upon the proposition to agree to a certain Senate amendment, to disagree to certain others, and to agree to yet another with an amendment. We are just in this attitude and no other—that the conferees upon every bill before this House can, under the precedent set by this motion and under your special rules, do anything. In some of these long appropriation bills there will be amendments amounting to thirty or forty or fifty, and they will be able to bring in here a motion to suspend the rules with some twenty minutes' debate on each side for examination and discussion, and agree, say, to Senate amendments numbered 1, 5, 6, 10, 12, 15, 21, 22, 29, 31, 46, 79, 81, 82, 83, and 97, and disagree to the balance of 100 amendments without anybody's knowing what any of them contain; and the excuse for this sort of a thing is that the constitutional right to call for the yeas and nays might possibly be put in operation by the minority. The excuse is that the majority is so absolutely helpless that it can not devise any manner of exercising its legislative power in connection with which the House itself can understand what the House is doing or is asked to do.

Now, I am not talking aimlessly; I am looking several of you in the face. It would be interesting to know how many of you would be willing to stand up on the floor now and say that you understand what you are voting for and what you are voting against if you vote either "aye" or "no" on the pending proposition. You do not even know whether the conferees have legislated or not. You do not even know whether the conference report contains anything not contained in the subject-matter of the bills which passed the House or the Senate. You do not know whether there is any new matter inserted in the conference report. What have you left to intelligent men to do except simply to vote "no?" There is no clearer-headed man in the House than the gentleman from Wyoming. There is no Member on the floor that does not recognize that fact. He might be subject to criticism of other description, but his worst enemy could never accuse him of not being able to make as clear a statement as any man on the floor, and yet he has made what he regards as a sufficient statement on the pending subject-matter to this House, and not one of you is wise to what he wants. I would be willing to give bond that seven-eighths of the House right now could not go out in the lobby with me—and I will give a bond for $1,000 that fully seven-eighths can not go out now—and tell me what they would be voting for if they voted "aye" or what they were voting against if they voted "nay," except that they might say that it was "in favor of a motion offered by the gentleman from Wyoming" or that they were voting "against a motion made by the gentleman from Wyoming."

And this is what you call a deliberative assembly; this is the American House of Commons. You have such a stringent set of fixed rules and such drastic special rules as the world has never seen, and yet you can not do business with intelligent understanding on the part of the House. In the Senate and in the British House of Commons, where they have no such rules, people can understand what they are doing when they legislate.

You have made it preeminently true that the safest vote for a Representative who does not want to do wrong is to vote "no." The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] and the conferees perhaps understand this proposition. For all I know the proposals may be perfectly right; for all I know, if I could understand it, I would vote with them, and for all I know, if I understood it, I would be horribly opposed to the result of the motion made by the gentleman from Wyoming. Mr. Speaker, is it possible that the Committee on Rules and the majority can not devise, with the patience and wisdom of the Speaker, the industry of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN], the lawyerly ingenuity of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], some method whereby a large majority in the American House of Commons can make attempted and proposed legislation intelligible to the Members of the House and to the country? There is not a man in the press gallery who could render an intelligent report to his newspaper after this motion passes or after it is defeated, whichever may be the case, of what the effect of the vote had been. Not one-tenth of the membership of the House can do it. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] has reserved a part of his time, and I hope that within the time reserved by him the House may be made to understand just precisely what Senate amendments are disagreed to—not by number, but by context and content—just exactly what are agreed to, just exactly what amendment is stricken out, and what new amendment substituted for it by content and not merely numerically. Why, there never was an object lesson equal to this of pitiable impotency upon the part of a majority! How powerful the minority must be, how helpless the majority must be, when they can not, with plenary power, concoct even special rules under which the House of Representatives can understand what it is doing within the time that is put at its disposal! I am not blaming the gentleman from Wyoming much, because he could not within the twenty minutes' time at his disposal make things plain, because he could not read to the House the original House bill, read to the House the Senate amendments, read to the House the House amendments to the Senate amendments, and give the reasons for disagreement, agreement, or amendment.

I will reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], whom I thank for the very kindly compliment he pays me, to the fact that we on this side of the Chamber are not responsible for the present parliamentary situation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the gentleman think that the Committee on Rules can not bring in any rule that it chooses; that it could not give four hours instead of twenty minutes in explanation of this matter, or one hour or thirty minutes?

Mr. MONDELL. If the matter were important enough, I have no doubt that the Committee on Rules would bring in such a rule, but I think if the gentleman will give me his attention—

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Mississippi a question right there, if the gentleman from Wyoming will pardon the interruption—that is, if the difficulty is not that the framers of the Constitution in making a requirement for the yeas and nays and recording it did not contemplate that in the year 1908 a gentleman like the gentleman from Mississippi would be elected to the House of Representatives, insisting on a roll call upon the question of adjournment or taking a recess after 5 o'clock in the afternoon.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, Mr. Speaker, I do not think the forefathers foresaw either the "gentleman from Mississippi" or the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE]. [Laughter.] I am certain if they had foreseen the gentleman from New York they would have made a different Constitution. [Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. Now, both the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] are kindly, considerate gentlemen, and if they will give me their undivided attention for two or three minutes I think I can explain this motion. In the first place, the House knows all about, or ought to know all about, the provisions of the bill, as we passed the bill some time ago after considerable discussion, and almost unanimously, as I recall. It is a bill authorizing the State of Minnesota to reclaim some swamp lands. It was a good bill as it passed the House. When it reached the Senate, the gentlemen in the Senate thought that our provisions as to the procedure of the settler when he should go upon the lands after they had been reclaimed were not clear enough, were not explicit enough, and so they offered several amendments, and I will be glad to call the attention of the House to the amendments. The first amendment is the words "within three months;" the third amendment consists of the words "within ninety days."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Where are those in the original bill?

Mr. MONDELL. They are on pages 2 and 4 of the bill. The second amendment and the fourth amendment are amendments intended by the Senate to more clearly define the method, simply the method, the procedure, for entry of these lands after reclamation. The House accepts those amendments, but instead of accepting them in two separate amendments we put them together in one amendment, slightly modified, in order to make the purpose and intent clearer, and we think that we still further clarify the process of clarification inaugurated by the Senate. So much for those provisions. The last amendment is an amendment that simply restores to entry some lands that the people from Minnesota had withdrawn temporarily from entry some time ago, I think, because at that time they hoped the Government would expend Federal funds for the reclamation of these lands. Now, that they are to be reclaimed by the State, those lands must be restored, and we laid upon them a 3-cent-an-acre charge to pay for the small appropriation that was made for the reclamation survey at the time they were withdrawn. Mr. Speaker, I am sure the House understands this much more clearly than it understands a great deal of legislation that comes in here on conference reports.

The provisions relate only to the manner in which the settler shall avail himself of the opportunity under the homestead law to settle upon and acquire the land. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. Seven minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes, or more if he desires, to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD].

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I ought to take up the time of the House in further explanation, as it was quite fully explained at the time the original bill was passed in the House. I want to call attention to this: That the Senate amendments are not in such form that we can accept them. The first amendment, for instance, on page 2, says that patent must issue inside of three months. The idea is not to compel a patent to issue inside of that time, but to compel payment of the money due to the United States. The same is true as to the amendment on page 4, numbered 3. It was inadvertently inserted with the idea that it would compel payment within ninety days, while, as a matter of fact, it says patent shall issue within that time. Amendments 2 and 4 refer to the same thing. The object of the first four amendments, I think, are far more clearly set forth in the amendment which we offer at this time. The amendment which is offered now is intended to take the place of the four first amendments.

The trouble with the bill, as the Senators saw it, was this: They thought a man might perfect his claim under the drainage proceedings and assert a right to the land without making payment to the United States. It is perfectly evident to me that he could not refuse to make such payment and still claim possession of the land. We are glad to accept the suggestion of the Senate to compel payment inside of a certain time, and to provide that if such payment is not made, then the land may be paid for and taken by some one else.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. How much land is it possible for one person to obtain under this bill with the gentleman's proposition?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. A hundred and sixty acres, if it is entered; if it is entered, the entryman can only hold 160 acres. It is intended to guard it carefully, so that no one can get more than 160 acres.

Mr. MANN. It will not be possible, under the bill, where the land is sold for nonpayment of assessment or in any other way for one person to acquire a large tract of land?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Not except that if it has been entered the policy is to treat it as though it were privately owned land.

Mr. MANN. Suppose it has not been entered, can any person acquire a large tract of land?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No; if it has not been entered he can only get 160 acres—a quarter section—and at this time let me call attention of the House once more to this feature. We do not ask from the National Government anything. We provide that every dollar that the United States Government can get out of this land, if it passes to patent in the ordinary way, must be paid before patent can issue to anyone under the provisions of this drainage bill.

We have taken extra precautions to see that the Indians who are interested in this money will not lose anything. There are, as I called attention to, twenty townships which are practically all one swamp. Why should we not have the opportunity of reclaiming that? We do not ask the National Government to pay anything for this reclamation, we only ask an opportunity to do it ourselves, charge the expense of the improvement to the land, to hold the land for it the same as we do with privately owned land.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Why does the gentleman object to Senate amendment No. 2?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. We do not in fact object to the object sought by amendments 2 and 3. The provision in No. 2 is open to this objection.

It provides that the money shall be paid to the receiver, and there is no provision under which that money can be paid back to the county. We would, under that amendment if it became a part of the law, have to have an act of Congress to transfer this payment from the receiver back to the county. We agree to what is sought by that amendment and substantially accept it. Amendment No. 4 is subject to the same objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS. How do you accept it, when you say in the motion here to disagree?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. How much time have I left, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. Six minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. I yield three minutes more to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD].

Mr. VOLSTEAD. We accept it because we expressly provide that payment of this money shall be made to the receiver practically as is provided in amendments 2 and 3, but we direct the receiver to pay the drainage money to the county.

Mr. MANN. Is this part of amendment No. 2 in your substitute subject first to the payment to the receiver or anybody else at the minimum price of $1.25 per acre?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Both of the provisions, in No. 2 and No. 4, are embodied in the amendment which I offer, and they are substantially the same, except that the provisions contained in the Senate amendments would work a forfeiture of the purchaser's right to the land unless he paid the United States inside of three months. On the other hand, this amendment provides that any one qualified as a homesteader may go to the receiver and pay the amount due the United States Government and for drainage charges, and then be subrogated to the right of the purchaser at the sale for drainage.

Mr. MANN. How do you provide in your substitute for the payment of this minimum price of $1.25 per acre? What part of your substitute covers that?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It says that if they fail to pay within ninety days, then any person who is qualified to enter land as a homesteader may pay to the receiver for 160 acres, first, the fees, commissions, and purchase price to which the United States will then be entitled, and then, second, the sum for which the land was sold at the sale. It expressly provides that the purchase price specified in section 4 and section 5 must be paid. There can not be any question about it. The Government can not possibly be defrauded, and it seems to me we ought to have this opportunity to make use of these lands.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] desire to use the balance of his time?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, Senate amendment No. 2 says:

If such payment is not made to the receiver within three months from the date of such sale, all right to purchase or enter said land on the part of the person purchasing at the sale provided in section 3 of this act, shall cease and determine and said land shall, without further action or proceeding, be subject to entry under the homestead laws, subject, first, to the payment to the receiver of the minimum price of $1.25 per acre, or such price as may have been fixed by law for such land, together with the usual fees and commissions charged in entry; second, to the payment to the receiver by the purchaser at such sale of the amount appearing to have been paid therefor under the provisions of section 4 of this act.

Now, then, this motion says that we are to disagree to Senate amendments Nos. 1, 2, and 3; that we are to agree to Senate amendment No. 5; we are to agree to amendment No. 4, with an amendment striking out all of said amendment—that is, amendment No. 4—and inserting what follows below. Now, nowhere in there do I find where this minimum of $1.25 per acre is expressly protected as a first charge upon the land.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. If the gentleman will excuse me, it provides that he must pay the amount specified in sections 4 and 5.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The question is, whether he is entitled to it after the Government has donated the land. Now, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me the conferees are right about agreeing to Senate amendment No. 1.

Mr. MANN. May I call the attention of the gentleman from Mississippi to page 3, where it refers to the minimum price of $1.25 per acre? Now, does not the substitute cover by reference—

Mr. WILLIAMS. It does if this language does:

First, the unpaid fees, commissions, and purchase price to which the United States may then be entitled.

Mr. MANN. That is the purchase price. It can not be less than $1.25 an acre.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Unless that language covers the point, nothing else in the bill does.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. If the gentleman will excuse me, it does—

Mr. WILLIAMS. Wait a minute. The gentleman is to remember that this is an act of donation.

Now, then, in view of that fact, how would the court hold as to what the United States was "entitled to?"

Mr. MONDELL. This is scarcely an act of donation. It is simply a provision that Government lands shall be subject to the State reclamation law of Minnesota.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It makes them subject to the reclamation charges by the State if the State complies with the provisions of the act.

Mr. MONDELL. And our amendment compels the entryman to pay those charges.

Mr. STEENERSON. Will the gentleman from Mississippi allow me to make this explanation; that is, that the amount due to the Indians, whether it be $4 an acre or $1.25 an acre, is first to be paid. That is the first lien on the land.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That comes in under section 5.

Mr. MANN. That is already in section 5 of the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I say that the part due to the Indians is part of Senate amendment 5 to section 8.

Mr. MANN. The original section 5 provides that $1.25 an acre, the minimum price, must be paid before any patent can be issued.

That at any time after any sale of unentered land has been made in the manner and for the purposes mentioned in this act patents shall issue to the purchaser thereof upon payment to the receiver of the minimum price of $1.25 per acre.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is as to the unentered land.

Mr. STEENERSON. That applies to everything not now entered, and that is practically the most of the land.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, the gentleman considers that Senate amendment No. 5 fully protects the Indians?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It was drawn at the Land Office.

Mr. WILLIAMS. For that purpose? Well, it seems to me, frankly, to do so.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It is not intended to cheat the Indians.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, I do not know. We white people have not been doing anything else for a century and a half where we got a chance. I am not charging that against the gentlemen in the new States. The people of Georgia and Mississippi and Arkansas in their time did the same thing, but I am calling attention to the fact, and it is well always to watch out for the repetition.

Mr. STEENERSON. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that unless this law is passed the Indians will never get anything out of the million and a half acres of land they have there, because nobody will buy it; and that which is subject to the payment of $1.25 an acre or $4 an acre will forever remain unpaid because the land will not be sold.

Mr. MANN. If this law is not passed, some other one will be.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am convinced about Senate amendment No. 5. I think I shall agree to amending Senate amendment No. 4, but I do not see why we should disagree to Senate amendment No. 2.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. That is a double safeguard.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is the trouble about having a double safeguard?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. HACKNEY. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, I was on the subcommittee that examined a bill looking to the drainage of the Indian lands in Minnesota. It became apparent to the members of that committee that the Government could not take up the project, and we were of the opinion that the State should take up the project on the lines of this bill. I believe there is merit in the bill. I have taken pains to examine the amendments, and it does seem to me every right is conserved. The Indian rights are protected and the Government rights are protected.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Do you not think that we could agree to the Senate amendments and pass the bill?

Mr. HACKNEY. I do not think the Senate amendments are in as good shape as they will be if the suggestion of the gentleman from Wyoming embodied in the pending motion is carried out. I concede that we are somewhat hampered in dealing with this matter by not having the proposed amendment printed; but I have taken pains to examine a typewritten copy of the amendment as suggested, and, in my judgment, every right is protected. I believe the Senate amendments ought to be concurred in so far as it is recommended, and that we should disagree to the amendments asked to be disagreed to. In that way, in my judgment, every right is properly protected. The great body of land up there will remain unreclaimed unless this improvement is made. This is the very best disposition that can be made of these Indian lands. We ought to pass this bill now and let the State of Minnesota do this work, which in this bill we are giving it the right to do.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, this is clearly good legislation. It will lead to the reclamation of large areas of swamp land in Minnesota. As the gentleman from Missouri has very clearly pointed out, it protects the interests of the Government, the Indians, and the settlers, and as the bill is perfected by the proposed amendments, it will be complete in all its details, and I believe will accomplish much good in the reclamation of these lands.

The SPEAKER. As many as favor agreeing to the motion will say "aye"—

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, to save the time of the House, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. Pending the demand for the yeas and nays, if there be no objection, the Chair will lay before the House certain personal requests.

LEAVE TO WITHDRAW PAPERS—OAKLEY RANDALL.

By unanimous consent, at the request of Mr. HUBBARD of West Virginia, leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Oakley Randall (H. R. 5391, Fifty-ninth Congress) no adverse report having been made thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. LOWDEN, on account of the illness of his mother.

DRAINAGE OF CERTAIN LANDS IN MINNESOTA.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi demands the yeas and nays on motion of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. PAYNE. To save time, I make the point that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [Having counted the House.] One hundred and forty-six Members are present; not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, and the Sergeant-at-Arms will notify absent Members.

As many as favor the motion of the gentleman from Wyoming will, when their names are called, answer "aye;" as many as are opposed will answer "no;" those present and not voting will answer "present;" and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 141, nays 39, answered "present" 17, not voting 190, as follows:

THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I desire to make a brief statement.

Several months ago I introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 52) requesting the President, on a day named, to deliver the control and possession of the Philippine Islands to the authorities representing the people thereof. The joint resolution provides, in substance, for a time when the United States shall remove its authority from the Philippines, and also provides that certain steps shall be taken by this Government, in connection with other governments, to secure the neutrality of the Philippines.

Mr. President, I am assured by Senators on both sides of the Chamber, who have been in sympathy with the general purpose of the joint resolution, that there is a prevailing opinion among them, or such as I have had an opportunity to talk to, that it would be better under the circumstances to have the joint resolution go over until the next session. Because of this consensus of views I rise merely to say that I will ask that the joint resolution lie on the table until the next session of Congress, when I shall call it up.

REMOVAL OF RESTRICTIONS FROM INDIAN ALLOTMENTS.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RAYNER rose.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. RAYNER. Certainly.

Mr. SCOTT. I wish to make a statement. I do not wish to interfere with the business of the Senate. There are seven pension bills on the Calendar, and I am informed from the House that unless we pass them to-day and get them over there it will be impossible to have them enacted into laws at the present session.

I do not want to interfere with the Senator from Maryland, or with the Senator from Pennsylvania, in charge of the pending appropriation bill, but I should like at some time to-day to get those seven bills before the Senate and have them passed, so that they can be sent to the other House.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I have yielded the floor to the Senator from Maryland. After the conclusion of his remarks I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the post-office appropriation bill. Later in the day I will endeavor to arrange a suitable opportunity for the Senator from West Virginia to call up the pension bills and have them passed.

COL. WILLIAM F. STEWART.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I call up Senate joint resolution 82, and I should like to have the joint resolution read.

Whereas Colonel Stewart has not been served with a copy of these charges, and although he has applied for a court of inquiry in order to ascertain the truth or falsity of the same his request has been denied, and he was nevertheless, without the opportunity of defense or trial, upon the basis of these ex parte accusations deprived of his command and ordered to be retained at Fort Grant, Ariz., long an abandoned military post, until he reaches the minimum age of compulsory retirement in the year 1911, and was thereafter ordered to another abandoned military post, without command, at St. Francis Barracks, St. Augustine, Fla., and upon reaching St. Augustine has been ordered back again to the abandoned post at Fort Grant, Ariz.; and

Whereas this punishment has been inflicted upon him without affording him any opportunity whatever to relieve himself from the charges aforesaid and without giving him the slightest information in reference to the same: Therefore

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States be authorized and directed to convene a court of inquiry to consist of not less than five officers of the Army, whose duty it shall be when so convened to fully investigate all the charges and accusations against Col. William F. Stewart, of the Coast Artillery, now on file in the War Department or that may be contained in the report of the same heretofore submitted to the President of the United States, or any other charges affecting the character or qualifications of the said Col. William F. Stewart as an officer of the United States Army; and that the said Col. William F. Stewart have the right to appear in person and be represented by counsel and to be confronted with the witnesses against him and to have a copy of the specifications containing such charges in the proceedings before such court, and that the said court report its opinion upon all the facts and specifications before them as is usual in the procedure of courts of inquiry: Provided, That the court be convened as soon as possible and that the said Col. William F. Stewart shall be allowed the same right of challenge as is allowed by law in trials by court-martial.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I want to preface the brief presentation that I propose to make of this matter by saying that I am entering upon the subject with no feeling whatever of hostility or enmity to the President of the United States. I have upon several occasions before in this body differed with the President very widely in regard to certain principles and policies that he has advocated, but I have always done so in a deferential and respectful way. This occasion does not warrant any personal feeling or afford any justification for it. I think that the President has made a mistake, and that he has again fallen into a grave error in regard to the extent of his prerogative under the laws of the country, and in stating my position I should like to have it distinctly understood that it would not be a matter of the slightest concern to me to which party the President belonged, for if the President was a member of my own party and took the same view of his legal and constitutional rights that he now does, I would not have the slightest hesitation in opposing him with all the zeal and power at my command.

Senators here know that I have no political object in view, and that I would never use this forum for any such purpose. I am not sufficient of a partisan to use an occasion of this sort for the purpose of gaining any political advantage. I am animated by a higher purpose, because the subject under consideration involves to my mind one of the most important questions that has ever been presented to the Congress of the United States.

Mr. President, I want to state who Colonel Stewart is. Colonel Stewart is a colonel of the Coast Artillery. He is not a graduate of West Point, but he entered the Army as a commissioned officer at the age of 17 years. He comes from a military family, his father before him being a colonel in the United States Army. He has been recommended for a medal of honor, and he has been promoted in the Indian warfare for gallantry upon the field of battle. He has been in the service of his country for over forty years. He is now one of the fourteen colonels of the Coast Artillery. He is second in rank upon the list of Coast Artillery colonels on the active list, and is likewise the second ranking colonel among all the colonels of both the Coast and Field Artillery on the active list. Colonel Greenough is now the ranking artillery colonel. He will retire in December, 1908, when Colonel Stewart will become the ranking colonel on the active list of all the Coast or Field Artillery colonels. He will not be 62 years of age until June 13, 1911. This is the minimum retirement age. He can be compulsorily retired by the President on that date, if he declines to retire sooner of his own volition.

Now, having stated who Colonel Stewart is, I want to state where Fort Grant, Ariz., is, so as to bring the objects in juxtaposition with each other. Fort Grant, Ariz., is an abandoned military post. It consists of a group of old buildings in charge of a single caretaker, who I think has been sick during most of the period he has been at that place. There are no troops whatever stationed there. The only companions of Colonel Stewart at this place of punishment are a care taker and a teamster, both civilians; and Colonel Stewart while he is confined there has no right officially to communicate with any other post. He can only communicate direct with the Department. The nearest railroad station, I believe, is 25 miles from the place where the President has located him, stripped of his command, and the nearest surgeon is at a cavalry post in Arizona 75 miles distant; and the surgeon could not be ordered direct but only through orders from Washington.

I want to have it distinctly noted, as I have already stated that Colonel Stewart is on the line of promotion, there being but one artillery officer between him and the head of the artillery service, as I am informed.

Now, I want to read the process through which Colonel Stewart passed, which is as interesting as it is cruel, before he reached the place where the President has him now.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
September 23, 1907.

Col. William F. Stewart, Coast Artillery Corps, Fort Barrancas, Fla.—
He was stationed at Fort Barrancas, Fla., which I understand is a fort 9 miles from Pensacola—

SIR: Pursuant to instructions from the President, the Department is prepared to issue an order assigning you to station, probably Fort Grant, Ariz., without command. The President has directed, however, that before this order is issued an opportunity be given you to apply for immediate retirement under section 1243, Revised Statutes, and by direction of the Acting Secretary of War that opportunity is hereby given you.

The Acting Secretary of War directs that immediately upon receipt of this communication you telegraph acknowledgment thereof to this office and that within twenty-four hours afterward you advise this office by telegraph whether you do or do not desire immediate retirement, under section 1243, Revised Statutes.

Very respectfully,

BENJ. ALVORD, Adjutant-General.

No charge, no notice of any offense or delinquency that was committed, no information on the subject, no condemnation by a court or otherwise, but "pursuant to instructions from the President." No instructions were ever given to him, or a copy of them forwarded to him. He is given twenty-four hours to retire from the Army of the United States without being given any cause at all of what his retirement was asked for, or anything else up to this date.

That is the commencement of this process. Here is the answer of Colonel Stewart. I am not reading the whole of these letters, because they are not relevant. Here is the answer:

FORT BARRANCAS, FLA., September 30, 1907.

ADJUTANT GENERAL U. S. ARMY.

SIR: Your letter of the 23d instant sent direct to me by registered mail was a surprise to me.

In order to cause such a letter to be sent there must have been some report or charge made against me to the War Department. I am ignorant of the purport of the report or charges. In law a person is presumed innocent until proven guilty.

The Colonel is mistaken. Under this Administration certain persons are presumed to be guilty unless they are proven innocent. The maxim is reversed. He was laboring under a delusion, therefore, when he said that a person is presumed innocent until proven guilty.

Before any action is taken on a report against me, I am, I believe, entitled to know the report or charges, or should have a chance to confront the witnesses. In this case I have had no chance to defend myself. I therefore request that a court of inquiry, as provided for in the One hundred and fifteenth article of war, be appointed to examine into the accusations or imputations made against me.

STEWART, Colonel.

Now here comes the letter from the Adjutant-General in answer to this:

WAR DEPARTMENT, October 2, 1907.

SIR: You are hereby relieved from duty at Fort Barrancas, Fla., and will proceed without delay to Fort Grant, Ariz., and take station there. That post has been withdrawn from the command of the commanding general, Department of the Colorado, and you will, therefore, communicate directly with this Office on all official matters pertaining to yourself or your station. The travel directed is necessary to the military service.

By order of the Acting Secretary of War.

HENRY P. MCCAIN,
Adjutant-General, War Department.

Then comes the President's action—

SIR: In response to your letter of the 15th ultimo, I am directed by the Acting Secretary of War to advise you as follows:

Your request for a change of station is disapproved. The Quartermaster-General has been directed to take prompt measures to remedy all the defects complained of by you in reference to the habitability, comfort, and sanitary conditions of your quarters at Fort Grant.

If you desire, provision can be made to quarter the care taker at Fort Grant in another building, or a different care taker can be ordered there. If you desire either of these changes made, you will make report to that effect to this Office for the action of the Secretary of War.

The action of the President that determined your present status was based upon a report submitted and acted upon by the President—

Not a line of which Colonel Stewart has ever been given the right to read or examine—which contained the distinct recommendation that you be retained at Fort Grant until you reach the minimum age (62 years) permitting of your compulsory retirement by the President, unless in the meantime your application to be retired after forty years' service should be received; then of course you would be ordered to your home on retirement.

It is therefore to be inferred that the President contemplates no modification of your present status (which you yourself have chosen in preference to being retired) until your retirement.

Very respectfully,

HENRY P. MCCAIN, Adjutant-General.

Now, there is a supplement to this, and that is that within the last few weeks he was ordered from Fort Grant, Ariz., to Fort St. Francis Barracks, St. Augustine, Fla., and the day that he reached there last week he was ordered again to this post at Fort Grant, Ariz. He is there now.

The Senate will understand that Colonel Stewart has never received notice of the charges that have been preferred against him. He has never been allowed to see a copy of the charges.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. RAYNER. I do.

Mr. FORAKER. I dislike to interrupt the Senator, but I should like to ask him if he does not find in the correspondence from which he has been reading a report of the War Department from Colonel Stewart giving an account of the situation existing at Fort Grant, the kind of a place it is, and its location generally, and the condition of the buildings that he must occupy. If so, I would suggest to the Senator that I think that letter would be important enough to be put into the Record in this connection, if it would not disturb the Senator.

Mr. RAYNER. I have no such communication. I do not know whether the Senator heard my statement just now, when I gave a short description of that spot to the Senate. I gave a description of Fort Grant as well as I could. The President sent me a letter a few days ago and gave me a copy of the charges, and then he demanded that I should return the charges. Under the circumstances I did not think that I had a right to have the charges copied, and I have never had the charges myself, except only the opportunity to look over them. I considered the charges somewhat in the nature of a confidential communication. If those charges contain any other description of Fort Grant than what I have given, of course I should like very much to have them.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not refer to the charges. I refer to the official report on the application made by Colonel Stewart for an order transferring him to some other post because of the disagreeable conditions existing at Fort Grant. I saw it in some paper which was sent to me by somebody through the mails, I do not know by whom. I think I can get it.

Mr. RAYNER. I have no doubt that is perfectly correct; and I will say to the Senator from Ohio I suppose the letter which I have just read must have been in answer to the communication of Colonel Stewart, in which the Adjutant-General says:

The Quartermaster-General has been directed to take prompt measures to remedy all the defects complained of by you in reference to the habitability, comfort, and sanitary conditions of your quarters at Fort Grant.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. RAYNER. Yes, I do.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Before the Senator from Maryland leaves St. Augustine and the St. Francis Barracks, I would ask if he means to explain to the Senate why Colonel Stewart was ordered from St. Francis Barracks back to Fort Grant, Ariz.?

Mr. RAYNER. I have so much to refer to that, unless the Senator from Florida wants me to do it further on, I prefer not to go into that, and I will give the Senator from Florida an opportunity to say why Colonel Stewart was transferred. I have merely said that he was transferred without stating anything more about it; and before I took the floor this morning I stated to the Senator from Florida that I should make that statement just in this way. If the Senator wants time further on, he can give reasons why Colonel Stewart was transferred; or, if he wants me to do it, I will do it, though I had rather go on now. It is not a question of where the man is that I am discussing; it is the question of the right to treat him as the President has treated him.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I thought, Mr. President, that it would make the Senator's argument more complete if he took up those questions as he went along.

Mr. RAYNER. I am much obliged; but I would prefer, very politely and courteously, to be the judge of the completeness of my argument myself. I am very much obliged to the Senator, and I shall explain, before I have finished, the reasons, or I will give the Senator the right to do so, but I would rather he would do so in his own time. I do not, however, object to interruptions at all on the main point. Why Colonel Stewart was sent from one post to another is collateral and irrelevant to the subject that I have in hand.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I shall not interrupt the Senator again.

Mr. RAYNER. I will give the Senator the right now, or I will state it myself further on.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I did not mean to pass critically upon the completeness of the Senator's argument, but simply wanted him to do justice, as I thought, as he went along. If he prefers that later on I shall make the statement. Of course I will do it, if necessary, in my own time and in my own right.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I come to a letter that the President has written to me, and I am not prepared to say now that I will read that letter. I propose to read extracts from it. If it is necessary I will have the letter published when my remarks are published in the Record, but I do not intend to have the whole letter read now.

Before reading this letter I want to state what some of these charges are. They are all charges which, even if they were true—and I am informed that they are not true, and that the untruth of the charges could be sustained if this officer were afforded an opportunity to produce testimony and witnesses in his own behalf—the charges are frivolous and petty charges, not in the slightest degree affecting Colonel Stewart's character as a man, his honor as a citizen, or his courage as a soldier.

One of the charges relates to a controversy that occurred between Colonel Stewart and a civilian when Colonel Stewart was located at Fort Williams, Me., in which a gentleman by the name of Cushing wanted his employees to use the Government boats, and Colonel Stewart refused him the right. Another charge relates to a controversy that occurred between him and an engineer of the United States Army when he was at Pensacola, Fla., in which the engineer desired to use the Government barracks for certain purposes on the eve of his daughter's marriage; and Colonel Stewart, being a strict disciplinarian, denied him that right. Another charge relates to a controversy which occurred between him and a plumber in Pensacola, Fla., in reference to some trivial matter. Another charge—and I think I am going over all of them—alleges that Colonel Stewart's quartermaster-general, I think, was convicted of embezzlement, and the President seemed to think that he was not sent to the penitentiary soon enough; that Colonel Stewart ought to have expedited him to that point a little quicker than he did, although his conviction was procured by Colonel Stewart. Another charge relates to some emphatic language that Colonel Stewart indulged in with some subordinate in the United States Army. In other words, there are charges, as the President is pleased to call them, of temperamental infirmities, certain peculiarities of disposition that manifest themselves whenever there is any opposition to the display of individualism. [Laughter.] The President has come to the conclusion that Colonel Stewart is a man who wants to have his own way. [Laughter.] Whenever there is a controversy between himself and others, imitating the example of the Constitutional Commander of the Army, he wants to dominate the situation, that he has his own ideas about his public duties, and that he does not propose to be interfered with in the performance of them. [Laughter.]

Those are not the charges, Mr. President, that Colonel Stewart makes against the President, but the charges that the President makes against Colonel Stewart. [Laughter.] He has not the temperament that the President has—that fine system of adjustment and compromise that is always suggestive of restraint and calmness and moderation. [Laughter.] As you will observe, none of these charges are of a grave and serious nature, but relate to petty controversies, in which the President thinks that Colonel Stewart ought to have yielded, as the President has always done upon similar occasions. [Laughter.]

One instance relates to a discussion with a subordinate officer, in which the Colonel is said to have used rather emphatic language in maintaining his side of the argument. The President finds great fault with this particular temperamental weakness because in his own official intercourse it is well known that the President never indulges in any forcible or vehement expression either in oral discourse or in written communications. [Laughter.]

Of course, Mr. President, even if these charges are true, it is a matter of deep regret that a military officer should not be able to imitate the example of the Constitutional Commander in Chief of the Army, and at all times and upon every occasion and with every person exercise that degree of tranquillity and repression that for the last few years has given us, free from every kind of tumult and commotion, the most serene and placid Presidential epoch that we have ever been blessed with in the annals of this country. [Laughter.]

Having, Mr. President, given the status of Colonel Stewart, I come now to the propositions that are involved in this resolution. Have we a right to pass this resolution? I want to give you what the President says, and then I want to give you what I say, or rather what others say, for I shall not depend upon any original thought of my own in reference to this resolution.

In the meantime I want to read a letter the President has at this moment sent to me. It is as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, May 12, 1908.

MY DEAR SENATOR RAYNER: Senator TALIAFERRO informs me that he understood that you felt you were not at liberty to publish my letter without my consent, and had written to ask for that consent. I have not received any request from you to this effect. You are entirely at liberty to publish the letter, which was not marked confidential or private.

Sincerely yours,

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

Hon. ISIDORE RAYNER,
United States Senate.

I will now read my two letters to the President. This is the first:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., May 4, 1908.
HON. THEODORE ROOSEVELT,
Executive Mansion.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I have thought over the matter in connection with Colonel Stewart, and I would take the liberty of suggesting to you the calling of a court of inquiry upon the subject. The facts contained in the record, extracts from which you read me, could then either be established or Colonel Stewart could be vindicated. As I understand the method of procedure, and I have had some experience in the matter, neither penalties nor punishments necessarily follow the findings of the court, but the object of the proceedings would be simply to find the facts, and either sustain the record or vindicate the officer. I would kindly and respectfully ask you to give this matter your consideration as soon as possible. I would like, in the meantime, to have a copy of the charges that you read to me, and I shall be extremely obliged to you for the same. I am receiving numbers of communications upon the subject and, of course, my recollection is not specific upon the points in question, and I would like to have them before me.

I do not want to inconvenience you in this matter, but it was your own suggestion that you intended to embody them in a communication to me, in answer to my letter to the Secretary of War. With respect and esteem, believe me,
Very truly, yours.

The second letter I wrote him reads:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., May 9, 1908.
HON. THEODORE ROOSEVELT,
Executive Mansion, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I have just received your communication, and, of course, I will wait until you see the Senator from Florida to-day. I would, however, in the most respectful manner, call your attention to the fact that it is not so much a question where Colonel Stewart is to be sent as it is whether he ought to be punished in this way at all without a trial. I therefore again submit to you, with all due consideration, that a court of inquiry could easily dispose of this subject, and I earnestly hope that upon further reflection you will assent to the propriety of this course in the interest of justice. It is the only way in which the truth or untruth of the charges can be ascertained.

In the case of General Howard a joint resolution in a similar matter was passed by Congress, and a court of inquiry was held, and the accused officer was vindicated. I want to avoid such a proceeding if possible, and I therefore kindly ask you to give this matter your further consideration before arriving at a final conclusion refusing the appeal of Colonel Stewart for an official inquiry into the charges that have been made against him.

Of course, you will easily draw the distinction between a court-martial and a court of inquiry, and while you said to me, and I entirely agree with you, that the accusations would not justify a court-martial, they constitute the very kind of charges that a court of inquiry could easily dispose of.

Yours, very truly.

I will, in a moment, read the conclusion of the President's letter in reply to this. Then I wrote:

MAY 7, 1908.
HON. THEODORE ROOSEVELT,
Executive Mansion, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I desire to thank you for the prompt attention you have given to the case of Col. William F. Stewart, and hope that you understand my position in regard to the same. I have been asked to submit a resolution to Congress asking for a court of inquiry in the matter. If I take this course I am acting strictly in accordance with law and with a well-established precedent in which the right of Congress to take action in a matter of this sort was established. I have had occasion to examine the question very closely, and have no doubt about the power of Congress to pass a resolution directing a court of inquiry to be called. I gather from your letter that you do not think it proper to convene the court. In view of the fact that you state in your communication that you have not made a final decision upon the subject, and inasmuch as Congress will adjourn in a few weeks, I shall gladly wait until the expiration of the present week before I offer any resolution upon the subject—

That was last week—

You will understand that I have no idea of impeaching the conclusions you have reached upon the ex parte statements that have been submitted to you. You have heard one side of the case; now what Colonel Stewart's friends want is to have his side of the case heard. I therefore, respectfully submit that you might change your mind if the testimony should be in his favor, instead of against him, before the court. He has never had a copy of the charges upon which this severe punishment is now being meted out to him. I am quite sure that you do not want to convict him upon the testimony against him, without hearing his testimony, no matter from what distinguished source the charges against him may emanate, and it is for this reason that a court of inquiry would be the proper forum before which the evidence on both sides could be submitted, and to which I am confident you will give your most careful consideration. The most extreme measures have been resorted to in reference to the punishment inflicted upon this officer, and he must have the right to have his case heard before a tribunal that can present to you the testimony on both sides.

I return herewith the memoranda which you have asked me for, and I again thank you for your courtesy and for the consideration that you have given this matter.
Very truly, yours.

Now, the answer in the President's letter is as follows:

Now, as to your suggestion as to a trial. For the reasons given above, and also in the memorandum which I herewith forward, there is no point in having a court-martial. At present I do not see how a court of inquiry could be of use, for I do not see how any court of inquiry would express an opinion to which I should pay more heed than to the judgment of Generals Wade, Grant, Murray, Duvall, and Davis, in accordance with whose recommendations I have acted.

Senators will observe that this officer has never been given the slightest opportunity to defend himself against the charges of Generals Wade, Grant, Murray, Duvall, and Davis. Without saying one word against these officers, because I think I know some of them well and I know the distinguished services they have rendered to their country, I want to say that, with a single exception, these officers have all been promoted over the head of Colonel Stewart, as I am informed, to the positions that they now occupy.

You say it is only by a court of inquiry that "we could ascertain the truth or untruth of the charges." I feel that the truth of the charges has been established beyond the possibility of upsetting by the reports quoted in the body of my letter.

What do we think of that? The prosecution has been heard, but not a word for the defense, and the truth of the prosecution has been established "beyond a possibility of upsetting," when the man has never had the slightest opportunity of defending himself or even being confronted with the witnesses against him or of giving his testimony. That is the President's conception of his constitutional prerogative. It has never been paralleled in the military records of American history. I challenge the production of a case that is a parallel to it. Language is not too strong for the condemnation of such a course of procedure as this.

I will, however, consider this matter of a court of inquiry carefully before making a final decision; but at present I am not inclined to view the proceedings with favor. There is nothing to be inquired about. The testimony before the inspecting officer by both Colonel Stewart and the officers whose testimony I have mentioned, and others, was under oath. So that as to the concrete case there is nothing to find out, and as to the general opinion of the service it is clearly set forth, not only by the testimony of the officers who served under him, but by the reports above mentioned of the last five general officers under whom he served. The case is absolutely clear.

Nothing would more quickly destroy all discipline in the Army than continually to grant courts of inquiry to contentious, inefficient, or disobedient officers whose misconduct is already proved beyond the possibility of rebuttal. Baseless requests for such courts are continually made by offenders of contentious disposition.

"Contentious disposition." [Laughter.]

It would be wholly undesirable to grant them. I do not understand your allusion to a joint resolution by Congress.

Such measures as those taken in this case are purely within the scope of the President's duties and authority. The course followed in this case is the course which will hereafter be followed, to the great benefit of the Army in all such cases. Letters to this effect have already been addressed to the commanding officers of the several departments.

Now let us look at whether the President is right or not. I shall go very briefly into the cases, because the proposition is so perfectly plain that I do not think any tyro in his profession would dispute them. The propositions that I make are three—first, that Congress has the right to order a court of inquiry; second, that the President has no right as the Commander in Chief of the Army to inflict any punishment whatever upon an officer of the United States; and, third, that as Commander in Chief he is bound by the laws of Congress.

The principal question is: Is the President of the United States bound by the laws of Congress in reference to his duties as Commander in Chief of the United States Army?

The President—

(Read from the Constitution)—

The President shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and of the militia of the several States, when called into the actual service of the United States;

But—

Congress shall have power * * * to raise and support armies,

And—

To make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces.

My proposition is that any law or rule or regulation that this Congress makes commands and demands the obedience of the President, to quote the language of a text writer to whom I shall presently refer, as much as it does the loyalty and obedience of any private in the ranks.

Here is the precedent for my resolution. I would not have offered the resolution; I would have hesitated to have offered it, if I did not have precedents; but this whole question was discussed in the Forty-third Congress. The Senator from Maine (Mr. FAYE) was then a member of the House of Representatives, and he participated in the discussion. In this Chamber the question was decided by as able a body of men as ever gathered within its presence. Conkling participated in the debate; Sumner participated in the debate, as did Morrill, Logan, Thurman, and others. The result was the passage of a resolution identically in the terms of this resolution, with one slight correction, which I will endeavor to have made, and that is the resolution I have introduced "authorizes and directs" the President; whereas the resolution passed in the Forty-third Congress "authorizes and requests" him. I did not know that the President would pay any attention to a request, and so I thought I had better put it as strongly as I could, and therefore

I used the word "direct;" but I am perfectly willing to change the word "direct" and put in the word "request." With that exception the resolution of the Forty-third Congress is the precedent for my resolution. It is a matter of grave importance in connection with this discussion. It was passed on the 30th of January, 1874, in the Forty-third Congress, first session. The resolution was as follows:

Be it resolved, etc., That the President of the United States be requested and authorized to convene a court of inquiry, to consist of not less than five officers of the Army, whose duty it shall be, when so convened, to fully investigate all the charges against Brig. Gen. O. O. Howard, contained in the communication of the Secretary of War to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of date December 5, 1873, and to report their opinion as well upon moral as upon technical and legal responsibility for such offenses, if any, as may be discovered.

I have left that last sentence out. It is not necessary at all.

Provided, That the accused may be allowed the same right of challenge as is allowed by law in trials by court-martial.

The resolution was discussed in the House and it was discussed in the Senate. It unanimously passed the House and the Senate. A court of inquiry was convened and General Howard was honorably—I will not say acquitted—but he was honorably vindicated. I merely want to read a few words from what Senator Conkling said upon that occasion:

Now, learning, as I do, that General Howard has no objection to this inquiry, which I think is to his credit, I can not suppose that this proceeding will fail to address itself to the sensibility of every member of the Senate. Here is an officer, certainly distinguished in service, distinguished in the sufferings which his service inflicted upon him, a man maimed in body, and who until this inquiry shall be made must be regarded as maimed in reputation. If he is willing or desirous that his conduct shall be inquired into, and by a court so rigorous as must be a court to whom apply especial obligations and considerations of honor, in that respect, it seems to me, there should be no doubt.

Mr. Thurman addressed the Senate with a very instructive argument, and wound up by saying:

Mr. President, I shall vote for this resolution. It is time this investigation was made, and it is proper that it should be made, in my judgment, by a court of inquiry.

I will not read the whole debate, but it is all there. There was not a dissenting opinion in the House of Representatives of the United States as to the propriety and legality of the passage of such a resolution. The only point that was taken was that the statute of limitations had run, and if the court of inquiry had decided against General Howard a court-martial could not be convened to punish him. The Senate passed by that objection and gave him a court of inquiry without reference to it. I want to say, in passing, that the statute of limitations had run in the case of Admiral Schley. When the case of Admiral Schley was tried before the court of inquiry a question arose in reference to the statute of limitations, but, nevertheless, the court of inquiry was held in that case. Here is what Mr. Morrill says:

Now, why should not this inquiry be made? My friend by my side (Mr. Morton) says it will result in nothing. I say it will result in much. This man is under a cloud. Here is a distinguished officer of the United States Army in whose reputation and character we all have a just pride; a man who entitled himself to honor, who entitled himself to the good wishes of his countrymen; conspicuous in war, maimed, and will go down to his grave maimed, in a very worthy service; a man whose reputation up to this time has been as spotless as that of any man living. He is under a cloud. It is said that this investigation will result in no legal proceedings thereafter. Suppose that were so; is it not an object to relieve this man from this cloud which hangs over him? Have we no duty in this case to him and to the Department? Has not my honorable friend made this investigation absolutely necessary by his voice in denunciation here this afternoon?

Then the amendments were ordered to be engrossed, the joint resolution to be read a third time, and the joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

So I am not here without a precedent. I am here with about as well-considered a precedent as could be desired. If I had no precedent, the text writers are all unanimous upon this subject, it seems to me. But here is a precedent, and I have drawn this resolution, with the one exception to which I have referred, just in the line of that precedent.

I come to the point, What is a court of inquiry? But before I advert to that let me point to the Army Regulations on this subject. I read from article 99 of the Articles of War, which relates to the dismissal of officers:

ART. 99. No officer shall be discharged or dismissed from the service, except by order of the President, or by sentence of a general court-martial; and in time of peace no officer shall be dismissed, except in pursuance of the sentence of a court-martial, or in mitigation itself.

Then following that are provisions relating to the punishment of officers. There are only one or two cases where summary punishment can be inflicted and in each one of these cases a court-martial is provided for. There is no such thing in the military jurisprudence of the United States, under the Constitution, as the commanding officer inflicting punishment upon anybody in the military service of the United States. The authorities are all against it; and I will refer the Senate presently to a whole line of authorities where it has been held over and over again that the President has not the slightest right, and no commanding general has the right, to inflict punishment without a resort to the military court.

What is a court of inquiry? I want to refer to Winthrop just for a moment. He cites the Howard case on page 795. I am hurrying through this case because I want to say that I am not here merely for the purpose of addressing the Senate. If the Senate is simply very kindly giving me its attention while I am making this speech and this man should be compelled to stay out there for three years, my speech will amount to very little. I must call this resolution up later in the week for some practical action on it, because you see what the President is determined to do. The President is determined to keep him there for the next three years. The President has put him in this position: "I demand that you send in your application for retirement; I deny you the right to have a copy of the charges against you; and if you do not retire, I will keep you there for the next three years. You have either to stay there or you must retire and surrender—one or the other."

No such edict as that, so far as I have been able to ascertain, has been promulgated in the imperial armies of the European continent, where the law is different from what it is here, because there a military officer loses his identity as a citizen, but here an officer of the United States Army never loses his identity as a citizen, and he is always to be protected under the fifth amendment to the Constitution, which provides that—

No person shall be * * * deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law.

The office is his property, and the President has no right to deprive him of that office without due process of law. A court of inquiry, so called, is not a court at all. I am glad the members of the Committee on Military Affairs are giving me their attention, because I shall not be able to appear before them:

The court of inquiry, so called, is really not a court at all. No criminal issue is formed before, it arraigns no prisoner, receives no pleas, makes no finding of guilt or innocence, awards no punishment. Its proceedings are not a trial, nor is its opinion (when it expresses one) a judgment. It does not administer justice, and is not sworn to do so, but simply to "examine and inquire." It is thus not a court, but rather a board—a board of investigation, with the incidental authority (when expressly conferred upon it) of pronouncing a conclusion upon the facts. But, as it is a sworn body, and as the witnesses before it are sworn and examined and cross-examined, as before courts-martial, it is a board of a higher sort in the nature of a court, and has thus come to be termed a court in the law military. This is from Winthrop.

Then in giving the most prominent cases that have come before courts of inquiry, he gives this case to which I have just referred.

I know all about what a court of inquiry is. I had four months' experience with one of them. This case in some respects is like the Dreyfus case. Dreyfus was sentenced to a place like this. Of course it can be said to the eternal honor of the French Republic that it annulled the sentence and restored him to his position and vindicated his character. But, at least, he was before a court. He was convicted upon the testimony of suborned and perjured witnesses, it is true. But he was tried. He was represented by a master of the criminal law in France. This man has had no counsel and no friend except his wife in Washington, who is the granddaughter of William Pinkney. It has been impossible to communicate with him. It has been impossible to get a list of his witnesses. Such a proceeding was never heard of, that I can find, in the military records of any civilized country on this earth.

What does the President mean? Who are his advisers? Is a man entitled to a trial? The President says "I am satisfied he is guilty, and I do not want to hear the defense." What would you think of a judge upon the bench who promulgated such a brutal decree as that? It makes the blood rise to a fever heat to see the President announce such a doctrine to the Senate of the United States. If the man is guilty, convict him. If he is innocent, acquit him. But the greatest felon in the land is entitled to a trial, and certainly this man ought to be entitled to one after forty years of distinguished service to his country. He became engaged in a quarrel with a plumber. How many quarrels has the President been in with plumbers and everybody else? Suppose the President was sent to a place like this for every quarrel he got into and for every emphatic expression he made use of? This man is convicted because he imitated the example of the Commander in Chief.

Mr. President, I think he has a right to demand a court of inquiry. The President says not. What can we do? I think under the one hundred and fifteenth article of war he has the right. The President will not give it to him. Let me read that one hundred and fifteenth article for just a moment. It seems to be very plain:

A court of inquiry, to examine into the nature of any transaction of, or accusation or imputation against, any officer or soldier, may be ordered by the President or by any commanding officer; but, as courts of inquiry may be perverted to dishonorable purposes, and may be employed, in the hands of weak and envious commandants, as engines for the destruction of military merit, they shall never be ordered by any commanding officer, except upon a demand by the officer or soldier whose conduct is to be inquired of.

Does not that give him the right to demand it? The President, the commanding officer, says not, and he relies upon some construction of some of the officers of the War Department, that although the officer demands it, there must be, nevertheless, the assent of the President before it can be granted. What can this man out there do? Tell me what he can do out there at Fort Grant, Ariz.? Let us assume that he is entitled to a court of inquiry. The President denies it. There is no process in the civil courts by mandamus or otherwise by which he can enforce his rights. That has been held. Must he stay there for three years, or obey the President's request for retirement, or has he the right to come to the Congress of the United States and ask it to do as it did in the case quoted upon almost a similar state of facts, to grant him a trial, to which every American citizen ought to be entitled?

I come now to another point, an exceedingly important point. Has the President the right to inflict punishment? No one doubts that this is punishment. I challenge the President or his law officers to produce a single case in which it has ever been held that a commanding officer has the right to inflict punishment without resorting to a summary court or a court of inquiry or a court-martial. Let me give you an authority on that point, with at least thirty or forty cases, in favor of the proposition I now state. I quote from Winthrop, volume 1, page 679. I have another authority, the best we can get on that subject. On page 679 Mr. Winthrop states the law in this way:

By the authorities nothing is more clearly and fully declared than that punishments can not legally be inflicted at the will of commanders—that they can be administered only in execution of the approved sentences of military courts.

No officer has the authority in any case to inflict punishment for past offenses of any kind.

It is stated much stronger in Mr. Porter's admirable work.

Mr. Porter, on page 730, states it in this way, and he would not have stated it in this way if it had not been a true statement of the law:

We have in our military law no system of disciplinary punishments. Except in a few cases, unimportant in themselves or of rare occurrence in practice, our code recognizes no punishments other than such as may be adjudged upon trial and conviction by a military court.

If the Military Committee will examine this case at page 730, they will find no less than thirty or forty military decisions in favor of the proposition. All through the President's letter—I have marked the points—he speaks of it as punishment.

Listen to the letter:

For the reason that while a court-martial would undoubtedly award some punishment it would fall short of what was really needed, the separation of Colonel Stewart from active service.

It must be remembered that the desire throughout was primarily to benefit the Army, and that the punishment of Colonel Stewart was wholly incidental to this end.

If he had consented to retire, there would not have been any punishment at all. Four times on one page the President speaks of "punishing" an officer of the Army of the United States, and over and over again in the military annals of this country it is stated that no military officer at this day has the right to inflict the slightest punishment upon any officer or soldier of the Army except by regular trial by court, unless otherwise provided by law.

Now, I come to another proposition. Why did not the President give the man a retiring board? I ask this in passing. He would not even send him before a retiring board. If he is mentally or physically or temperamentally disabled, if he has this temperamental infirmity or any of these new diseases which have sprung up in American politics, why not try him before a retiring board? They can retire him. I will not quote the provisions, but there is provision after provision for a retiring board. You can bring any officer before a retiring board, and if he is mentally or physically disqualified you can retire him at any time. You can not only retire him on half pay, but you can retire him without any pay at all. The President will not have him before a court-martial. The President will not have him before a court of inquiry. The President will not give him a retiring board, but he proposes to be the witness, the judge, and the executioner at the same time. Of course I claim that he can not be retired.

This brings me to the most interesting part of this discussion. I have now taken longer than I intended.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. RAYNER. I shall be very glad to yield.

Mr. FORAKER. A few minutes ago I called the Senator's attention to a certain letter which I had seen in the correspondence between the War Department and Colonel Stewart, and I asked the Senator if he had the letter, and if so whether he did not think it should find a place in the Record in connection with his speech. Since then I have been furnished with a copy of the letter. In connection with the question whether or not punishment has been imposed upon this officer, I should like to ask the Senator whether he does not think the letter should be inserted in his speech. It is a letter from Colonel Stewart, written from Fort Grant, after he had been there four months, telling of the conditions existing there and by which he was surrounded and to which he was subjected.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. RAYNER. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. I simply want to suggest to the Senator from Maryland that he might read without hesitation anything furnished him by the Senator from Ohio. [Laughter.]

Mr. FORAKER. I certainly would not try to mislead the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. RAYNER. I want to say to the Senator from Texas that he is entirely mistaken on that proposition and the case the Senator from Ohio is advocating, with all deference to the Senator from Ohio, because there is no one for whom I have greater regard and esteem. The case of the Brownsville rioters differs as much from this case as it is possible for two cases to differ. There is no possible connection between them. I am not for one moment attacking the claim the Senator from Ohio makes. I am not for one moment entering into that discussion.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. RAYNER. I should like to finish the sentence.

Mr. FORAKER. I was about to suggest, if the Senator will allow me, that I will take the responsibility of reading the letter as a part of the interruption of the Senator if he prefers it.

Mr. RAYNER. I want to read the letter, and I am very much obliged to the Senator for giving it to me. I shall certainly read it. I appreciate his kindness in giving it to me. Without passing upon the Brownsville matter at all, for I have not examined that matter, I may say that this is an entirely different case. If there is any intimation made by the Senator from Texas, I want to point now to Article 4—

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from Maryland—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. RAYNER. Yes, I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from Maryland was so much engrossed with his subject that he did not catch the point of my remark. The Senator from Maryland must certainly understand that I differ more widely than he does with the Senator from Ohio on the Brownsville controversy, which is not now before the Senate, and I only had reference to the well-known cordial relations which exist between the Senator from Ohio and the President of the United States when I said that the Senator from Maryland could be positive that the Senator from Ohio is not furnishing any disproof of what the Senator from Maryland was saying. But having said that much in a jocular spirit, I want to say, also, that I do not believe the Senator from Ohio would furnish anything that he did not believe would enlighten us on the subject.

Mr. FORAKER. I had that purpose in view, and certainly I had no thought of the Brownsville matter in that connection, strange as that may appear to Senators.

I will say to the Senator that to-morrow or at an early day I will try to get before the Senate the Brownsville bill, when I shall undertake to indicate the points of that controversy. If the Senator from Maryland will allow me, I will read that letter.

Mr. RAYNER. I will read the letter. I am much obliged to the Senator for giving it to me. I have not come to any conclusion on the law of the case in the Brownsville affray. There is a broad distinction between that case and this. That case is governed by article 4 of the Articles of War, which reads in this way:

No enlisted man, duly sworn, shall be discharged from the service without a discharge in writing, signed by a field officer of the regiment to which he belongs, or by the commanding officer when no field officer is present; and no discharge shall be given to any enlisted man before his term of service has expired except by order of the President, the Secretary of War, the commanding officer of a department, or by sentence of a general court-martial.

I am not passing an opinion upon this, and I am only stating it as a distinction between the discharge of enlisted soldiers and the punishment of an officer. The first case is provided for by article 4 of the Articles of War and the second case, in reference to the discharge of an officer, is provided for by article 99, and that article particularly states that no officer shall be discharged except by trial by court-martial, and this article does not embody that provision. I shall read this letter.

Mr. FORAKER. Just a word further. There is, of course, this broad distinction: An officer holds his position by virtue of an appointment which is confirmed by the Senate. The enlisted man sustains a contractual relation to the Government. It makes all the difference in the world.

Mr. RAYNER. Now, I will read this letter of Colonel Stewart, which the Senator from Ohio has so kindly given me.

FORT GRANT, ARIZ., February 15, 1908.

The ADJUTANT-GENERAL,
United States Army.

SIR: I respectfully request that I be ordered to take station at Washington, D. C. This request is made in order that I may obtain access to certain records in the War Department and to obtain counsel to enable me to properly present to the War Department a defense against the unjust reports made against me. Situated as I am, I can not properly defend myself.

I beg leave to invite attention to the way in which I am situated here. I have now been here over four months. I have no companionship, and no means of recreation; there are two men at the post besides myself—the caretaker, Mr. W. F. Vall, and the teamster.

The quarters I occupy, the best at the post, are not in the condition of repair, etc., to which I am entitled. During the bad weather we have had of late—snow, sleet, wind, and rain—it has been impossible, owing to the small open fireplaces, to keep the building warm. The grounds about the building are in a poor state of police.

There are practically no sanitary conveniences for me. On my arrival here, October 12, 1907, I found the caretaker occupying this house; he still occupies one side, and I have the other side.

Mr. Vall was an inmate of the hospital at Fort Bayard, N. Mex., to September, 1905, where he was "treated for tuberculosis." He states that he did not have consumption, but be that as it may, he is a sick man.

In case of sickness or injury I have no means of obtaining medical attendance, except to send a messenger to Willcox and telegraph to you. If you then order, by telegraph, a doctor at Fort Huachuca (the nearest post to this) it would probably be from two to four days from the time I started a messenger until the doctor arrived here. I urgently request that this application be approved.

I should have made this application some time ago had I known that I was to have been kept here so long.

Mr. FORAKER. I observe that the Senator has passed one paragraph of the letter.

Mr. RAYNER. I did not think that part was exactly proper to read before the Senate and galleries.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask that the whole letter may be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. RAYNER. Let it go into the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objections the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter referred to is as follows:

FORT GRANT, ARIZ., February 15, 1908.

The ADJUTANT-GENERAL,
United States Army.

SIR: I respectfully request that I be ordered to take station at Washington, D. C. I beg leave to invite attention to the way I am situated here. I have now been here over four (4) months. I have no companionship and no means of recreation; there are two men at the post besides myself—the caretaker, Mr. W. F. Vall, and the teamster.

The quarters I occupy, the best at the post, are not in the condition of repair, etc., to which I am entitled. Mr. Vall was an inmate of the hospital at Fort Bayard, N. The bath and toilet room in this building (they have been torn out of the other buildings at the post) have and are still being used by Mr. Vall. I can not use them, except in an emergency, as I do not consider it safe, owing to Mr. Vall's sickness. In case of sickness or injury I have no means of obtaining medical attendance, except to send a messenger to Willcox and telegraph to you. If you then order, by telegraph, a doctor at Fort Huachuca (the nearest post to this) it would probably be from two to four days from the time I started a messenger until the doctor arrived here. I should have made this application some time ago had I known that I was to have been kept here so long. I put it off hoping and expecting an order to leave this post.

Respectfully, etc.,

WM. F. STEWART,
Colonel, Coast Artillery Corps.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (S. R. 74) suspending the commodity clause of the present interstate commerce law.

Mr. ELKINS. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from West Virginia asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Without objection it is so ordered.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, before I conclude, I am going to ask the Secretary to read the whole of the President's letter, so that there may not be any mistake about the President's letter being before the Senate. I shall conclude in a few moments.

Now, I come to the last proposition which has been delayed by the interruption. Is the President as Commander in Chief of the Army governed by law? We may as well have this question decided one way or the other, and this is the proper place to decide it. Is the President as Commander in Chief of the Army governed by law? The President says he is not; that he is above the law; and that the Constitution vests in him as Commander in Chief powers incidental and implied that can not be affected, controlled, or disturbed by law. I say he is mistaken. I say he is subject to every law and regulation that Congress may pass; and I will now give to the Senate extracts from the best text writers upon this subject sustaining the proposition for which I contend, a proposition of great magnitude and vast importance to military circles of the Army at least, if not to the people of the country.

Here is the best text writer on the subject, I think. See how he puts it. I read from O'Brien on Courts-Martial, page 25:

According to the Constitution, Congress has absolute power over the Army. It can create, organize, increase, or disband it at its mere will and pleasure. It has the exclusive power of making rules and articles of war and of legislating for the public force. The military laws which it may be pleased to enact, in pursuance of the Constitution, are as binding on the President as on the private soldier, and there is no power in the Commonwealth which dare disregard or deviate from the slightest of its ordinances.

On page 31 he puts it in this way:

In all that relates to the raising of an army, to its strength, to its organization, to its criminal code, Congress is omnipotent; the President powerless.

* * * * *

The command of the President is, indeed, absolute within its sphere, but its sphere is bounded on all sides by law. The moment the Executive oversteps the boundaries prescribed he becomes powerless and his commands are of no force.

* * * * *

So contracted is the actual authority of the President that, but for the protective power of his qualified veto, his command might be so restricted by legislation as to destroy its utility.

As the Executive has no legislative power, it is plain that the regulations issued by him to the Army are not law; and as he is as much bound by law as any other citizen, it follows that if any of them conflict with law they are so far null and void.

Then we come to a statement by Mr. Curtis, who puts it just as strongly, but a little more concisely. Let me give you what he says upon the subject:

The President is the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, not only by force of the Constitution, but under and subject to the Constitution, and to every restriction therein contained, and to every law enacted by its authority, as completely and clearly as the private in his ranks.

Has the President ever read any one of these authorities?

He is General in Chief; but can a general in chief disobey any law of his own country? When he can, he superadds to his rights as commander the powers of a usurper; and that is military despotism.

If the Constitution had provided that a commander in chief should be appointed by Congress, his powers would have been the same as the military powers of the President now are. And what would be thought by the American people of an attempt by a general in chief to legislate by his decrees for the people and the States?

Besides, all the powers of the President are executive merely. He can not make a law. He can not repeal one. He can only execute the laws. He can neither make, nor suspend, nor alter them. He can not even make an article of war.

Mr. President, what the President has done is martial law. That is what he has done. He has proclaimed against this officer martial law, and using the language of one of the greatest patriots and advocates of his day—Sir Edward Coke—defining what martial law is, said: "Martial law is no law at all."

I want to add to what Sir Edward Coke said on the subject what Mr. Justice Woodbury, in the celebrated case of Luther v. Borden, speaking of martial law, said:

By it every citizen, instead of reposing under the shield of known and fixed laws as to his liberty, property, and life, exists with a rope around his neck, subject to be hung up by a military despot at the next lamp-post, under the sentence of some drumhead court-martial.

Hallam, in his Constitutional History, says that its use by—the commissioners to try military offenders by martial law was a procedure necessary, within certain limits, to the discipline of an army, but unwarranted by the Constitution of this country. Indeed, a distinguished English judge has since said that "martial law," as of old, now "does not exist in England at all;" was "contrary to the Constitution, and has been for a century totally exploded."

This is nothing but martial law. This is not the law of the Constitution; it is not the law of the land. It is the law of the President, beyond the Constitution and above the laws of the land.

I have said now, Mr. President, all that I intend to say upon this subject. I might say a great deal more. I want, when I conclude this address, to have the President's letter read in full, because I had no idea that he would give me the right to offer it, and I only learned this morning that he gave me the right. I looked upon it as a private communication.

I want to say in conclusion I am not here to pass upon the guilt or innocence of this officer. I do not know, and I so told the President, whether these charges are true or whether they are untrue. They may be true or they may be false. I am here to claim a right of trial for the accused officer. I am here to claim the right of having him furnished with a copy of the charges. I am here to claim the right under the Constitution of having him confronted by the witnesses who are against him, a right, accorded as I have said, to every citizen in the land.

He has not, as an officer of the Army, lost his constitutional right. The authorities are all one way upon that subject. A man does not cease to be a citizen without constitutional rights because he is an officer in the United States Army. His office is his property, and he should not be divested of it without due process of at least military law. He is now an outcast and an exile, and I hold that in time of peace he can not thus be deprived of his liberty without a trial. I am not criticising the President; I am not assailing his motives. He may be right in the conclusion he has reached upon the facts. He is wrong in not permitting the facts to be investigated. The President is not involved in this controversy. All I ask for is a trial. It would be a mockery of our system of military jurisprudence if an officer who has given forty years of his life to the service of his country could be thus degraded without an opportunity to be heard.

In all the days of the common law, since star-chamber process passed into oblivion, no precedent can be found for such a practice. If we have a military code in this country that permits without a hearing the humiliation of an officer of the Army, that strips him of his command without notice of his alleged delinquency, that without a charge against his character or his courage or his honor can banish him to solitary exile and offer him the alternative of retirement or acceptance of this punishment, if he can be driven from one abandoned post to another, and when he asks for the charges that have been made against him can be denied the right to have any information upon the subject, if this is the law of the land, then the law of the land is a disgrace to the land and ought to be obliterated from the statute book; and I venture to say that if this be its true interpretation, it is an instrument of despotism that has no counterpart among any "other people claiming to be civilized or under any other government purporting to be free." [Applause in the galleries.]

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will admonish the occupants of the galleries that under the rules of the Senate applause is not permitted.

Mr. RAYNER. I will now ask for the reading of the letter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read the letter as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, May 6, 1908.

MY DEAR SENATOR RAYNER: I have received your letter of May 3d and also the letter you wrote to the Secretary of War in reference to the case of Col. W. F. Stewart. The facts are as follows:

I made a careful investigation of the case of Colonel Stewart. I have before me the report of the Judge-Advocate-General upon it, and the full report by Major-General Duvall, and have looked at the original reports of Generals Grant, Murray, and others. It appears that Colonel Stewart has been forty-one years in the Army, having entered it when very young. He is now entitled to retire, having served forty years. He refuses to retire unless he is made a brigadier-general. I shall certainly not make him a brigadier-general, because he is grossly unfit not merely to be a brigadier-general, but to hold his present rank in the Army. His career has not been distinguished for a number of years; his usefulness has been diminishing—indeed, it has not only irrevocably passed, but he is a nuisance in the service, being both incompetent and temperamentally unfit to exercise command over enlisted men, or to control other officers, or to behave with propriety when brought in contact with civilians.

As General Duvall reports, it is well known throughout the artillery service that Colonel Stewart is an "impossible" commanding officer, and he is a man who in civil life could under no circumstances have risen to any position of influence or authority over his fellows. During the last three years the trouble with Colonel Stewart has reached a climax. In 1905, when he was in command at Fort Williams, Me., an officer of his command, his quartermaster, was court-martialed, dismissed from the Army, and sentenced to the penitentiary for the perpetration of most outrageous frauds upon the Government, which had extended over a considerable period of time. Apparently all this went on almost under the very eyes of Colonel Stewart, but he failed to detect the crimes of the officer, in so doing being culpably remiss in exercising supervision over his subordinates. At the same place he became embroiled with a civilian, Mr. Cushing, a resident of the neighborhood of the military reservation, and the War Department was obliged to interfere and stop his wrangling with Mr. Cushing. He also became so abusive and tyrannical in his treatment of a civilian employee, Mr. Randall, a plumber, that the latter was obliged to appeal to the War Department for protection. These were only some among the instances which were brought to the attention of the Department.

In 1906 Brigadier-General (now Major-General) Grant, the Department Commander, forwarded the report on Colonel Stewart's command to the division headquarters, with the comment that the "unhappy condition of affairs at Fort Williams" was due to the action of the commanding officer, his shortcomings being temperamental, which caused him so to irritate those around him that in the opinion of General Grant the only way to meet the defect was to "get rid of the irritant, which can be done by offering Colonel Stewart an alternative of relief from command or retirement on his own application."

The Chief of Artillery then investigated the matter and reported that the irritation caused to those around him by Colonel Stewart had been known unofficially to the office of the Chief of Artillery for some time, and that Colonel Stewart's "methods have appeared to cause irritation and annoyance to officers and men at his own post and at the other posts of the artillery district of Portland which he has commanded. Complaints have also been made to the War Department by civilians." In conclusion, the Chief of Artillery indorsed General Grant's recommendation that Colonel Stewart be offered the alternative of relief from command or retirement.

However, the Department did not act on this suggestion, desiring to give Colonel Stewart another chance; for the action of the Department was marked by extreme lenience. Accordingly Colonel Stewart was ordered to Fort Barrancas, Department of the Gulf. Early in 1907 General Duvall submitted a memorandum in which he gave several reasons for Colonel Stewart's unfitness for his position through temperamental and other defects. These reasons included "tyrannical conduct" in assigning a lieutenant to isolated and unpleasant duty at a subpost of Fort Barrancas, when this lieutenant had already within a short period served many months thereat and while there were two other available officers for this duty, one of whom had never been assigned thereto and the other for but a short time. (The facts having come to the notice of the Department Commander he ordered Colonel Stewart to change this assignment.) Also failure through lack of comprehension, or through obstinacy bordering on insubordination, to carry out instructions from the War Department in the matter of the newspaper reports alleging that soldiers of his command had fired on a railroad passenger train near his post. General Duvall closed his memorandum with the following:

"In consideration of the facts stated in this paper and of many other subordinate ones distributed over a long period of service, and well known throughout the artillery, the undersigned, for the good of the service, strongly indorses the recommendation of the commanding general, Department of the East, and the Chief of Artillery in this case."

Colonel Stewart, having forwarded an application to be appointed a brigadier-general, the department commander declined to recommend it, and stated that Colonel Stewart's arrogant narrowness, his suspicion of those about him, his frequent if not habitual tyrannies, and his apparent malice and vindictiveness toward those who had incurred his resentment, were not faults which could be ignored, even if the Colonel had been, which he was not, a commander of high technical value. The division commander in forwarding the application to the War Department stated that judging from the letters and indorsement before him Colonel Stewart was entirely unfit for the duties of a commanding officer.

Complaints continued. In July, 1907, Colonel Stewart was found to have been guilty of tyrannical and unreasonable conduct toward a civilian employee of the Government, Mr. J. E. Turtle. This led to an investigation. It was officially found that the action of Colonel Stewart, resulting in injustice to Mr. Turtle and failure to safeguard the interests of the Government, was due to groundless antagonism toward Turtle, and that Colonel Stewart had been guilty of incorrectness of statement in his testimony. Incidental to this investigation unimpeachable testimony by certain officers was introduced as to Colonel Stewart's violence in his language to enlisted men, one officer stating that he had accused enlisted men of open mutiny for trifling military derelictions, and that he worried both officers and enlisted men by nagging about minor and petty details until the command was demoralized. Another officer, Major Walke, second in command of Colonel Stewart's post, stated that Colonel Stewart had applied opprobrious epithets to enlisted men, in one case calling a first sergeant of twenty-nine years' service a "dirty, insolent pup," and stating further that he considered that the demoralization of the force (due to Colonel Stewart's conduct) rendered the conditions of the command very poor and practically put a stop to intercourse between the people of Pensacola and the members of the garrison. Lieutenant Wilson, Colonel Stewart's adjutant, as well as Lieutenant Rhoades, Colonel Stewart's quartermaster, corroborated this testimony. I call attention to the fact that this testimony is from Colonel Stewart's second in command, and the two most important officers on his staff, who under any ordinary conditions could be trusted to wish to support their commander in anything he did. The inspector reported that if desired such testimony could be supplemented to almost any extent by precisely similar testimony. Brig. Gen. J. M. K. Davis, commanding the Department of the Gulf, referring to Colonel Stewart, considered that "he should not be intrusted with the command of a post. This opinion is based in the main not only upon actual service with him, but upon information that has reached me at various times of the unhappy condition of affairs at posts under his command." The Chief of Artillery, General Murray, then reported as follows:

"There can be but one conclusion from the testimony of his division and department commanders, his corps commander, his second in command, his own staff officers, and all others who have been called upon; Colonel Stewart is unfit for command. Instead of performing a useful function, he is a hindrance to the transaction of public business, and little short of a scourge to those who are so unfortunate as to be under his control."

"It is believed that this officer should be relieved from the command of his post and district, but this can not be accomplished by bringing him before a general court-martial, for while he has committed many overt acts for which he might be punished, it would probably be impossible successfully to prosecute charges which would result in his dismissal from the service, and to sentence him to any less punishment would not be a proper or effective remedy; it can not be accomplished by bringing him before a retiring board, as recommended by the inspector, Major Cronkhite, because mentally and physically he is to all appearances perfectly sound, though believed to be often irresponsible through ungovernable temper.

"The recommendation of General Grant, as concurred in by the commanding general, Department of the Gulf, and myself, as Chief of Artillery, appears to be the only practicable solution. It is therefore again recommended that to Colonel Stewart there be offered the alternative of relief from command or retirement upon his own application under section 1243, Revised Statutes."

On this recommendation the Acting Chief of Staff, Brigadier-General (now Major-General) Duvall stated that the Chief of Artillery understated rather than exaggerated the case, but recommended that the option of honorable retirement be offered to Colonel Stewart for the reason that while a court-martial would undoubtedly award some punishment it would fall short of what was really needed, the separation of Colonel Stewart from active service.

It must be remembered that the desire throughout was primarily to benefit the Army, and that the punishment of Colonel Stewart was wholly incidental to this end, so much so that if he had consented to retire there would have been no punishment at all, and what of punishment has occurred has been purely owing to the insistence of the Colonel himself, though he has been not only a very inefficient but a pernicious officer, that he should be retired as a brigadier-general. Accordingly, on the advice of the four general officers, Grant, Duvall, Davis, and Murray, all of them his superior officers, who were most intimately acquainted with the facts of the case, Colonel Stewart was sent to the ungarisoned post of Fort Grant. It was found upon inquiry that there were four posts available for such assignment. Fort Assiniboine was deemed unsuitable, as the winter season is long and severe. Fort Keogh, although without a regular garrison, is occupied by a small detachment of troops; Colonel Stewart's conduct toward enlisted men has been so tyrannical and unjust that the Department would not consent to subjecting them to his exclusive control, and therefore Fort Keogh was excluded. Fort Brown, at Brownsville, Texas, has been left without a garrison; as Colonel Stewart has been continually embroiled with civilians, it is deemed inadvisable that he should be sent to this particular post. There remained only Fort Grant. It is an entirely healthy post, and the question of its employment as a light artillery post is now under consideration. It is provided with excellent quarters for the commanding officer, who should have no difficulty in making himself very comfortable there. But there are no enlisted men or junior officers over whom Colonel Stewart can tyrannize, but few civilians with whom he can quarrel, and no officer of superior rank to whose command he might, to the great detriment of the Army, some day succeed.

Criticism has been made of this action by people who desire that "mercy" should be shown to Colonel Stewart, or who speak as if he had been "tyrannized" over. In effect this criticism is a demand that Colonel Stewart be kept in some position where he can himself tyrannize over subordinates who are helpless to resist this tyranny unless it becomes overt to a degree which he has been careful not to permit. The very persons who are apt to clamor against corrective measures when employed against enlisted men who need them, or to be jealous of the actions of officers of the army when the right is on their side in controversies with civilians, have now demanded improper favoritism for Colonel Stewart, although his is a case in which the officer has really treated enlisted men and subordinate officers improperly, and has in actual fact behaved improperly toward civilians.

A few weeks ago the War Department, being inclined to be as merciful as possible to Colonel Stewart, consented that he should go to St. Francis Barracks, St. Augustine, Fla.; but through Senator TALLAFERRO I have received emphatic protests against this assignment. One of the protests is from the adjutant-general of Florida, on behalf of the State, to which the barracks in question at St. Augustine had been turned over by the War Department. The Secretary of War notified the Florida authorities that it would exempt from the terms of the lease the commanding officer's quarters, the purpose being to place therein Colonel Stewart; the State authorities assert that this would entirely disarrange the plans that they have made for complete military headquarters at St. Augustine, and that they do not think it should be done save in the event of "a military exigency of great importance." I agree with them. In addition, Senator TALLAFERRO submitted to me the protest of a gentleman for whose standing and trustworthiness that Senator writes that he heartily vouches. This protest runs:

"About a year or so ago a Col. W. F. Stewart of the United States Army was in command of the military post here at Fort Barrancas. He is of a very unfortunate and quarrelsome disposition and very distasteful to everybody who came in contact with him. I also understand that he has had differences with nearly every officer at the post, and in fact I have heard that he has been in hot water at every army post at which he has been stationed. I believe it is a disease with him. It became notorious at Fort Barrancas. . . .

"It is very greatly to the interest of the business community here, as well as those who come in contact with the commanding officer at Fort Barrancas, not to have a commanding officer with Colonel Stewart's disposition. . . . I think he is more to be pitied than anything else, but it would be most unfortunate for this community if he were sent back here."

In view of these protests, Colonel Stewart has been directed to remain at Fort Grant. The facts above given show that Colonel Stewart is entitled to no consideration whatever; that he ought to be retired from the Army forthwith, and that to adopt any other disposition of the case than that which has actually been adopted would be unfair to the interests of the Army and particularly unfair to the interests of the enlisted men and unjust to the civilians at any post to which he might be assigned.

Now as to your suggestion as to a trial. For the reasons given above, and also in the memorandum which I herewith forward, there is no point in having a court-martial. At present I do not see how a court of inquiry could be of use, for I do not see how any court of inquiry would express an opinion to which I should pay more heed than to the judgment of Generals Wade, Grant, Murray, Duvall, and Davis, in accordance with whose recommendations I have acted. You say it is only by a court of inquiry that we "could ascertain the truth or untruth of the charges." I feel that the truth of the charges has been established beyond the possibility of upsetting, by the reports quoted in the body of my letter. I will, however, consider this matter of a court of inquiry carefully before making a final decision; but at present I am not inclined to view the proceedings with favor. There is nothing to be inquired about; the testimony before the inspecting officer by both Colonel Stewart and the officers whose testimony I have mentioned and others was under oath, so that as to the concrete case there is nothing to find out, and as to the general opinion of the service it is clearly set forth not only by the testimony of the officers who served under him, but by the reports above mentioned of the last five general officers under whom he served. The case is absolutely clear; nothing would more quickly destroy all discipline in the Army than continually to grant courts of inquiry to contentious, inefficient, or disobedient officers whose misconduct is already proved beyond the possibility of rebuttal. Baseless requests for such courts are continually made by offenders of contentious disposition; it would be highly undesirable to grant them. I do not understand your allusion to a joint resolution by Congress; such measures as those taken in this case are purely within the scope of the President's duties and authority. The course followed in this case is the course which will hereafter be followed, to the great benefit of the Army, in all such cases; letters to this effect have already been addressed to the commanding officers of the several departments.

Very truly, yours,

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

HON. ISIDOR RAYNER,
United States Senate.

P. S.—Please return the inclosed memorandums when you are through with them.

Mr. RAYNER. I ask that the joint resolution may lie on the table, and I wish to give notice that I shall call it up Thursday for the consideration and action of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request that the joint resolution lie on the table? The Chair hears none.

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator from Maryland mean that he expects action upon the joint resolution without its going to a committee?

Mr. RAYNER. I make the request that it now lie on the table, and I shall call it up on Thursday for the action and consideration of the Senate. When I call it up Thursday and make a motion in reference to it, the Senator from Wyoming can make a motion to refer it to the Committee on Military Affairs. I think it is best for all interests concerned that the measure should take the course I have suggested.

Mr. WARREN. The present request is simply that it lie on the table?

Mr. RAYNER. That it lie on the table, and I shall call it up on Thursday.

Mr. FORAKER. I suggest to the Senator from Maryland that the Committee on Military Affairs meets on Thursday, and if the joint resolution lies on the table until Thursday without any action being taken it will be a week from that date before it could be considered by the committee, unless a special meeting for the purpose should be had. I think, unless the Senator wants it to lie over so as to further discuss it, it would be better for the joint resolution to go to the Committee on Military Affairs now, if it is to go there at all.

Mr. RAYNER. I will change my notice that instead of calling it up on Thursday I will call it up to-morrow. I shall call up the joint resolution to-morrow.

ENLARGED HOMESTEADS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 6155) to provide for an enlarged homestead.

Mr. NELSON. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House of Representatives and request a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to, and the Vice-President appointed Mr. SMOOT, Mr. CLARK of Wyoming, and Mr. McLAURIN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

DRAINAGE OF LANDS IN MINNESOTA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 19541) to authorize the drainage of certain lands in the State of Minnesota numbered 1, 2, and 3, agreeing to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agreeing to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, with an amendment, which was to strike out all of the amendment and to insert: "That unless the purchasers of unentered lands shall within ninety days after the sale provided for in section 3, pay to the proper receiver the fees, commissions, and purchase price to which the United States may be entitled as provided in section 5, and unless the purchasers of entered lands shall within ninety days after the right of redemption has expired make like payments as provided for in this section, any person having the qualifications of a homestead entryman may pay to the proper receiver for not more than 160 acres of land for which such payment has not been made: First, the unpaid fees, commissions, and purchase price to which the United States may then be entitled; and second, the sum at which the land was sold at the sale for the drainage charges, and in addition thereto, if bid in by the State, interest on the amount bid by the State at the rate of 7 per cent per annum from the date of such sale, and thereupon the person making such payment shall become subrogated to the rights of such purchaser to receive a patent for said land. When any payment is made to effect such subrogation the receiver shall transmit to the treasurer of the county where the land is situated the amount at which the land was sold at the sale for drainage charges, together with interest paid thereon, if any, less any sum in excess of what may be due for such drainage charge if the land when sold was unentered."

Mr. CLAPP. I move that the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, and 3 and concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4.

The motion was agreed to.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PENROSE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the post-office appropriation bill.

Mr. FRYE. Let it be done by unanimous consent, or else it would displace the unfinished business.

Mr. PENROSE. Certainly; I ask for unanimous consent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the post-office appropriation bill be laid before the Senate and proceeded with.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 18347) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. TALIAFERRO] to the amendment of the committee, on page 22, in the amendment of the committee, to strike out lines 12 to 18, inclusive.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Mr. President—

Mr. CURTIS. I should like to have the amendment again stated and to have the words proposed to be stricken out read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 22 it is proposed to strike out from line 12 to line 18, inclusive, as follows:

And the Postmaster-General shall give the company carrying such mails advance notice of his intention to take their weights separately from the other mails of the route and readjust the compensation for the carriage of the same on the basis of their value on the shorter or less expensive route, and shall report weekly during the time of such weighing the weights of such mails to the company carrying them.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Mr. President, I notice on page 22, beginning at the end of line 3, the following language:

In connection with such weighing and readjustment, where there are two or more routes by which the mails may be dispatched between important points with equal facility and advantage to the mail service, the Postmaster-General may send such mails by either route.

I would ask the chairman of the committee to explain the purpose of that provision. I understand that the Postmaster-General under the law possesses the right to send the mails by the routes which he thinks most advantageous to the public service; and this seems to contemplate some unusual condition, I will say, if my understanding of the law is correct.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the Postmaster-General has under existing law the right to contract with any railroad company that he may elect for the carriage of the mails between two points. But it occurs now and then that after making the contract with a given company a shorter line of road is constructed and made available, and by this shorter line of road the mails can be carried cheaper. But in the meantime the railway postal clerks have established their homes along the line of the road having the contract, and the whole service is adjusted to that line. The time made by the two lines may be the same, but yet, instead of transferring to the shorter line which will do the work cheaper, this provision gives the Postmaster-General authority to permit the longer line to carry the mails at the same charge for which the shorter line will carry the mails. This avoids a needless system of readjustment in the middle of contracts.

By reference to page 6325 of to-day's CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the Senator will perceive an explanation in a letter of the Postmaster-General, under date of April 28, on this subject. In the course of that letter the Postmaster-General says:

After the transportation of the mails has been established over a route—

Mr. TALIAFERRO. From what is the Senator reading?

Mr. CARTER. I am reading from the letter of the Postmaster-General of April 28, the third division or paragraph of the letter, found on page 6325 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Very well.

Mr. CARTER. I will read the entire paragraph. It is as follows:

The elements of expedition, efficiency, and economy are given consideration in arranging for the transportation of mails on railroads. Where through mails are concerned the Department often has the choice of competing routes. A competing route may be shorter than another; it may be more economical by reason of being a land-grant route; or it may perform important terminal or transfer functions which must otherwise be provided for by the Department. After the transportation of the mails has been established over a route and the train schedules remain satisfactory it is not advisable to divert mails merely because a competing route offers to make a satisfactory schedule. The facts that the transportation has been established over such route; that the company has furnished the necessary facilities for their carriage, and that railway postal clerks have been assigned to duty with reference to such mail routing are given due consideration; and of the company carrying the mails can furnish as advantageous service as the competing company it is not advisable to take the mails away from it. Where the Department has the opportunity of dispatching mails by competing routes, one of which is shorter or otherwise less expensive than the other, it appears to be but just to the Government—when such mails are allowed to remain with the longer or more expensive route—to reduce the compensation paid therefor by the amount which the Government would save if the mails in question were dispatched by the shorter or less expensive route.

In the absence of such a provision, I submit to the Senator from Florida that when a lower rate was furnished the Postmaster-General would have no discretion but to cancel the existing contract and accept the lower rate. This provision permits, however, the contracting company to reduce the rate to that for which the competitor offers to do the service.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Does the Postmaster-General have anything to say on the subject of the weighing—the giving notice as to the weighing?

Mr. CARTER. The Postmaster-General in that behalf, on the same page of the RECORD to which I have referred, in a letter of another date, says as to the portion of the bill with reference to readjusting weights:

This will give legislative expression to the practice of the Department recently adopted.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PERKINS in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. CARTER. I do.

Mr. CURTIS. Does the Postmaster-General, I would ask the Senator from Montana, recommend the change of the weighing of the mails from a period of one hundred and five days to thirty-five days?

Mr. CARTER. The Postmaster-General so recommends.

Mr. CURTIS. Well, might it not be to the disadvantage of the Government to select thirty-five days, because of the fact that those thirty-five days might be at a time when the mail was exceedingly heavy?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the Postmaster-General selects the time for the weighing. The railroads have nothing to do with selecting the time when the weighing shall commence. It will be thirty-five consecutive days, but the Postmaster-General names the first day. In the main it must be taken into account that the Department keeps pretty fair track of the average mails of the year, and the Postmaster-General can be relied upon, we think, to select such time as will give a fair average and not an average higher than it normally is.

Mr. CURTIS. Do I understand that the Postmaster-General recommends this amendment?

Mr. CARTER. The Postmaster-General recommends this amendment precisely as stated.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, I am of the opinion that unless some arrangement is made for the weighing of the mails for a longer period than thirty-five days it would be putting too much power and too much responsibility in the hands of the Postmaster-General. As I understand, the practice now is to begin in one part of the country to weigh the mails, and then the weighing is followed up in another section, and so on. So that it is really divided into four periods, which altogether consume a good deal of time in the weighing of the mail. I can not make out from this provision whether the Postmaster-General is now going to weigh the mail in sections, so that it will be going on thirty-five days in one section, then thirty-five days in another section, and so on, in perhaps four divisions, and thus consume one hundred and forty days in weighing, or whether the idea is to weigh all the mail in thirty-five days.

The point which the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] suggested is, to my mind, a pretty patent one, because I suppose all of us have had criticisms come to us that in some way or other the railroads are getting the best of it in the weighing of the mails. In fact, Congress, a year ago, to satisfy itself in that matter, provided, and the Department cooperated—if I remember correctly it was done by an act of Congress—for a special weighing of the mails in a special manner in the Post-Office Department, so as to establish public confidence in this mail weighing, and, I think, to a great degree it did establish public confidence in this mail weighing. I remember seeing a newspaper article, which went through the press quite generally, complaining that the mail was weighed at a certain time of the year when the mails were heaviest, and consequently the Government was getting the worst of it, so to speak, in this mail weighing. I took the matter up at the time with the Post-Office Department. The Postmaster-General informed me of the process of weighing at that time, and it seemed to me that, under that system, it was practically impossible for the railroads to concentrate the mail in such a manner as to defeat the Government or to defraud the Government in the mail weighing.

But it does seem to me that the question which the Senator from Kansas asked is one as to which we ought to be informed, and I should, at least, like to be. If the mail is to be weighed in thirty-five days, then it would be possible to concentrate a good deal of mail in those thirty-five days' weighing, which would last for a whole year, and in this way defraud the Government. I am not saying that it would be done, but it would make it possible to raise that point and to make it more important than it otherwise would be.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, I am in sympathy with the suggestion made by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKETT], but I should like to ask him how it would be possible to so concentrate the mail?

Mr. BURKETT. I confess, I will say to the Senator from Illinois, that I do not know how it would be possible for the railroads to concentrate the mail unless they should enter into some sort of a league with great mercantile houses that were sending out a great number of catalogues to get them all to go out at a certain time, or enter into a conspiracy of some kind. I have really never taken much stock in the claim, but the Senator will remember seeing an article that went through the press—not only one article, but a great many articles—and, as one Senator, I have received a great many letters on the subject calling it to my attention that Congress had not sufficiently protected the Government in this matter of the weighing of the mails. Now, it occurred to me that after—

Mr. HOPKINS. The reason, I will state to the Senator, is that I have served on the Post-Office and Post-Roads Committee, both in the House and the Senate, and I have always found the Post-Office Department was very exacting at such times.

Mr. BURKETT. I have no doubt of that, I will say to the Senator from Illinois, because I recall that a few years ago a special committee of the House of Representatives was appointed to investigate the whole matter of the mail weighing. A Representative from Massachusetts, now on the Supreme bench, Judge Moody, was chairman of that committee, and they made a very exhaustive report. However, it occurs to me that if we are going to make a change in the system of weighing, reducing the time from one hundred and five days to thirty-five days, for one I should like to have a pretty full explanation of it, showing that it is going to be for the protection of the Government, rather than otherwise.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. CARTER. I should like to state—

Mr. CURTIS. I should like to make a statement right here, if I can, and I should like to ask the Senator from Montana a question.

Mr. CARTER. Very well.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been informed, but have not had time to look up the data, that the reduction of the period of weighing to thirty-five days instead of one hundred and five days will increase the expense to the Government at least 7 per cent.

Mr. PENROSE. That is not correct, Mr. President. The appropriation contained in this bill is $44,000,000, exactly the same as for the current year. No increase whatever will be incurred by this amendment.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, that may be true, so far as the bill is concerned, but if this change did increase the expense to the Government, there is nothing to prevent the Postmaster-General from submitting an estimate for a deficiency appropriation at the opening of the next Congress. At the proper time I should like to move to strike out the word "thirty-five" and insert instead the words "one hundred and five."

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to say here, Mr. President, that this amendment comes to the Senate direct from the Department. Its phraseology is identical with the amendment submitted by the Postmaster-General, with the exception of a suggestion made by the Senator from Florida [Mr. TALIAFERRO] leaving the question open as to when the Postmaster-General should designate the time for weighing.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I understood the Senator from Pennsylvania to say something about the Senator from Florida, but I did not catch his remarks.

Mr. PENROSE. I stated that the amendment as it came to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads from the Department fixed the time when the weighing should take place.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Yes.

Mr. PENROSE. And that at the suggestion of the Senator from Florida, in committee that fixed period was eliminated from the bill and it was left open to the Postmaster-General without notice to the railroads to proceed with this weighing.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. And it is, Mr. President, in the spirit of that objection which the Senator from Florida made in committee that he now objects to the language contained in the bill.

Mr. PENROSE. I think the other proposition is an entirely different one.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, in answer to the question of the Senators from Kansas and Nebraska, I feel that this observation is due: The mails have heretofore been weighed in sections of the country quadrennially. The increase between one weighing and another has been probably 20 to 25 per cent, marking the normal growth of the mails carried on the trains. The weighing of the mails in sections has given very little data to the Department of any especial value, because the mail has only been weighed in a given section of country during a particular year; the next year it will be weighed in another subdivision; and so on throughout four years into which the time of weighing is divided.

There are some elements of injustice in this in the computation of the amounts due the roads under their contracts. It is true that if the mail was constantly diminishing in volume the Government would be injured, and if constantly increasing the contractor would be injured. It was desired to invoke some rule under which fair dealing could occur in this transaction, and at the same time to make the weighing throughout the country uniform during a given period of time, instead of divided into sections as formerly.

Mr. CURTIS. May I interrupt the Senator long enough to say that I think the change from the system of weighing every four years to weighing each year is good and should be adopted?

Mr. CARTER. Yes, Mr. President, a joint commission which was authorized by Congress to look into certain matters connected with second-class mail some years ago ascertained that the statistical data at present in the Department with reference to the volume and growth of the mail was of no value whatever as a basis upon which to form any deduction as to the cost of performing any part of the service. That was due to the fact of infrequent weighing and the lack of uniformity over the country in weighing. This provision will result in the weighing of all the mails carried on trains during thirty-five consecutive days, the days to commence at such time as the Postmaster-General shall designate. It is believed that the Postmaster-General—

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. CARTER. When I have finished the sentence. It is believed that the Postmaster-General, advised as to the thirty-five days during which a normal volume of mail ordinarily passes over the road, will select such time with reasonable care as to safeguard the Government against any unusual period marking an unusual volume of mail. Now, I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I desire to ask, Mr. President, if the Senator from Montana understands by "consecutive days" that Sundays are included in this weighing process?

Mr. CARTER. Sunday is not excluded.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Is not excluded?

Mr. CARTER. Not excluded. I understand the mails will be weighed for thirty-five consecutive days.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Because if thirty-five days of consecutive weighing does not include Sundays, we would not get the division of seven days in the week, as I understood the bill would provide.

Mr. CARTER. The bill provides for a seven-day divisor. The seven days' weighing is to continue throughout the entire period.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, I want to understand this matter thoroughly. Do I understand the Senator to say that the rule fixed by Mr. Cortelyou, Postmaster-General at that time, making a divisor of seven instead of six, will be enforced in the event of the adoption of this amendment?

Mr. CARTER. This amendment makes that rule the law.

Mr. BACON. May I ask the Senator what is the purpose of the provision which requires that notice shall be given to the railroads?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, it will be observed that that portion of the proceeding does not involve any charge against the Government of the United States at all. Where the Government desires to modify its action under an existing contract by taking away from a road a portion of the mail being carried upon that road under the contract, it shall give the road notice of its intention so to do.

Mr. BACON. As I understand, the notice that is given is of its intention to weigh the mails.

Mr. CARTER. Weighing the mail for the purpose of taking the contract from one road and passing it to another.

Mr. BACON. Very well; but nevertheless it gives the opportunity for the railroads to have a greater or less amount of mail at that time if they could effectuate it, and it would be to their interest to do so.

Mr. CARTER. Not at all, Mr. President. The action under the former provision is such that an increase of mail would mean an increase of compensation in this subdivision. The taking from a road of part of the mail held by it under contract does not involve a question of the aggregate amount of pay at all, but merely a determination of the amount of pay to be taken from the road in view of the amount of mail taken from it and passed upon another line. That is according to the present practice of the Department. When, for instance, the Southern road takes the contract for carrying the Florida mails, and during the period of the contract, the Postmaster-General concludes that the interests of the service will be best subserved by transferring one-half or all of the through mail to the Seaboard Air Line, he must give the Southern road notice of his intention to take that mail away from them. Now, when he undertakes to take mail away, be it understood that he can not take it all away, because the Richmond mail and the mail of the stations on the line of the Southern road not reached by the other line will of course remain with the Southern road. The Postmaster-General, when beginning this weighing, will determine as best he can by a weighing process the weight of the local mails as distinguished from the through mail which he intends to transfer to another line.

Mr. BACON. As I understand, though, Mr. President, the purpose of weighing is to ascertain what amount of mail in pounds is being carried by a road. Now, would not that be more accurately ascertained—with less liability to influences being brought to bear to affect that question—if the weighing were done without notice? I can understand why notice would be given if part of the mail is to be taken away, but what is the purpose of giving notice that at a certain time they are going to weigh the mail I do not understand.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, of course the taking away from a road a volume of mail or a portion of a volume of mail it has contracted to carry involves the necessity of the reduction of equipment and the withdrawal of the force that has been employed in the carrying of that large volume which is to be diverted. At the same time a portion of the mail pay, to the extent that it is local, will remain with the road under the contract. The road must be given timely notice in order to withdraw its equipment, and the amount of equipment to be withdrawn is dependent upon the amount of mail to be deflected from the road.

Mr. BACON. Exactly.

Mr. CARTER. So that it is an ordinary business matter, and the Government's charge is in no case affected one way or the other to the extent of a farthing.

Mr. BACON. Exactly. I understand that; but still the Government desires to ascertain honestly and truthfully what is the weight of the mail before it determines to divide it. The question I do not have a satisfactory answer to is this: When the Postmaster-General conceives the purpose to divide the mail, why can he not go and make his examination and have the weights taken without notifying them in advance that he is going to weigh the mails? It is proper that he should notify them in advance if he divides it, after weighing it to make the division, but what is the reason that the road should be put upon notice that he intends to weigh, unless it may be, perhaps, that they may take the opportunity to present the best weight that may be most favorable to them. That is what I want to understand.

Mr. CARTER. They might stimulate the local mail.

Mr. BACON. Very well; but they ought not to have the right to stimulate anything. What is wanted is that the Government shall ascertain what is the weight without stimulation. Why should we give them an inducement to stimulate? What I want is to ascertain the truth, and the way to ascertain the truth is to go and weigh the mail without giving any notice about it.

Mr. CARTER. But, Mr. President, if the Senator will carefully read the text of the amendment he will find that the Postmaster-General does not, in the notice, specify the day upon which he is going to weigh the mail. There is no provision for the railroad company having anything to do with packing the mails for weight purposes, but the notice given is to the effect that a portion of the contract is to be canceled. That would be another way of putting it.

Mr. BACON. That part of it giving the notice is all right; but, then, why should he give them notice of his intention to take the weight of the mails? Why can not he go and take it without giving them notice?

Mr. CARTER. That would be equivalent to no notice at all, because when the weights are taken the mail is instantly removed.

Mr. BACON. Not necessarily.

Mr. CARTER. It may be that the weights would be taken thirty days later than the notice given or at any time within thirty days following the giving of the notice.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. The Senator from Montana will observe that on line 16 there is this language added:

And shall report weekly during the time of such weighing the weights of such mails to the company carrying them.

I appreciate the Senator's point that this does not increase the cost to the Government, for the Government pays the same price to the one company that it would to the other; but I can not understand the necessity for giving the railroad company any notice whatever of the time of weighing the mails or of reporting to them weekly during the progress of the weighing. There is an incentive there for the railway company to act, as corporations usually act, in their own interest.

Mr. CARTER. In what manner can they serve their interests?

Mr. TALIAFERRO. To stimulate or to reduce the volume of mail as might seem to them best for their interest.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I will ask what interest the road could have when notice is given practically of a termination of a part of their contract in attempting to handle the mails? Again, how can a railway manipulate the shipping of mails over its lines when the shipment is directed by the Department itself, and the road has nothing whatever to say about it? This, I will say to the Senator from Florida, is, according to the Department, putting into statutory law that which is now the regular line of procedure and has been the regular line of procedure in the Department for some time. If this presented a case where the burden of the United States could be increased to the extent of a penny, there might be some reason for not giving notice of the intention to cancel the contract in whole or in part. But this does not increase the burden of the United States. In no manner or form can the notice do aught so far as the railroad company is concerned except to advise the company of about the amount of equipment which it will be required, as a matter of economy, to withdraw from its lines, and that amount will be dependent upon the weight of the mails withdrawn from the line. Of course they are entitled to notice of that.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Practically there is very little to that argument. The railroad company could not withdraw its equipment until the mails were diverted. The diversion would occur when the operation of weighing the mail had been completed, and the company would then be notified of the amount of diversion, and its equipment would then be withdrawn, and not before that. So that information given to the company during the process of weighing would not be at all useful in reference to the suggestion of the Senator from Montana that it might be needed to let them know what equipment they would have to furnish.

Mr. CARTER. The transfer of the mails occurs gradually. They do not wait to weigh all, but at the end of the week weigh a certain amount and pass it over to another road, and so on. I think the Department is correct in its conclusion.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, I do not want to prolong this discussion, but I do not know that I will ever understand what is the plan of weighing the mails, and I do not know that the people generally ever will understand it. I suggest to the Senator, in connection with this question, that it seems to me there is one time when the railroad company should have notice, and that is in the case of a new railroad coming into competition with the existing one. The bill says that in that event the Postmaster-General may have the right to send the mail over either route. Then he shall weigh it, in order to readjust the allowances. Of course he could not weigh it on the new route until it starts over the new route; and unless he did give the old road which had been carrying the mail notice that he was going to weigh it on the shorter route, they would go on with the full equipment. It would be proper in that case, it seems to me, to give the railroad which has had the contract and from which he is going to take the mail and give it to another road notice of his intention. On page 21 the bill provides for the readjustment annually of the compensation and for the weighing, and so forth. Then in line 12 on page 22 it is provided:

And the Postmaster-General shall give the company carrying such mails advance notice of his intention to take their weights.

That has reference to all the weights that are being taken under the entire appropriation on pages 21 and 22. And the objection the Senator from Florida makes would apply to all of it except in the one particular I have mentioned.

Mr. CARTER. The Senator should read the entire sentence, I think. I will read it, so that a proper construction may be placed upon it by the Senate.

And the Postmaster-General shall give the company carrying such mails advance notice of his intention to take their weights separately from the other mails of the route and readjust the compensation for the carriage of the same on the basis of their value on the shorter or less expensive route, and shall report weekly, etc.

This is wholly for the purpose of readjusting under the contract made, as provided for the weighing, to be conducted as prescribed on page 21. It is entirely a matter of adjustment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida to the committee amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out of the committee amendment lines 12 to 18, inclusive, on page 22.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. CURTIS. On page 21, line 22, I move to strike out the word "thirty-five" and insert "seventy," so as to read "by the actual weighing of the mail for seventy successive days."

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads was, on page 23, line 13, to reduce the appropriation for railway post-office car service from $4,800,000 to $4,600,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item for railway mail service, on page 23, line 17, to increase the appropriation for the salaries of eleven assistant division superintendents from $2,000 each to $2,250 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 13, to increase the total appropriation for the railway mail service, from $18,588,000 to $18,590,750.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 14, after the word "dollars," to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That the Postmaster-General may, in his discretion, under such regulations as he may provide, allow a clerk who is sick leave of absence with pay, his duties to be performed without expense to the Government during the period for which he is granted leave, not exceeding thirty days in any fiscal year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, after line 19, to insert:

That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, authorized to create an additional division of the railway mail service with headquarters at New Orleans, La., and to assign to duty one division superintendent, in addition to those heretofore appointed, and who shall be paid a salary of $3,000 per annum; and one additional assistant division superintendent at $2,000 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, after line 2, to insert:

That hereafter the Postmaster-General may, in his discretion, under such regulations as he may provide, allow a railway postal clerk leave of absence with pay for a period not exceeding thirty days, or in cases of sickness thirty days additional in any one year, with the understanding that his duties will be performed without expense to the Government during the period for which leave is granted, he to provide a substitute at his own expense to perform said duties.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, after line 10, to insert:

That hereafter railway postal clerks on entering the service shall receive the salary of the lowest grade, and no clerk shall be advanced more than two grades in any period of one year's service.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 26, to insert:

To enable the Postmaster-General to guarantee to substitutes who qualify themselves for the work and hold themselves in readiness for all calls, a minimum compensation of $25 per month, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, line 9, after the word "duty," to insert:

Who shall be granted leave of absence with full pay during the period of disability, but not exceeding one year, and if said period of disability exceeds one year, then at the rate of 50 per cent of his annual salary for the period of disability exceeding one year, but not exceeding twelve months additional.

So as to make the clause read:

For acting clerks, in place of clerks or substitutes injured while on duty, who shall be granted leave of absence with full pay during the period of disability, but not exceeding one year, and if said period of disability exceeds one year, then at the rate of 50 per cent of his annual salary for the period of disability exceeding one year, but not exceeding twelve months additional, and to enable the Postmaster-General, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, line 2, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty thousand" and insert "one million," and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Provided, That from and after July 1, 1908, railway postal clerks shall be paid their actual and necessary traveling expenses, not to exceed $1 per day, while away from the terminal where their runs or series of runs begin and end, when actually on duty, such expenses to be paid under the direction of the Postmaster-General.

So as to make the clause read:

For actual and necessary expenses of division superintendents, assistant division superintendents, and chief clerks, railway mail service, and railway postal clerks, while actually traveling on business of the Post-Office Department and away from their several designated headquarters, $1,000,000: Provided, That from and after July 1, 1908, etc.

Mr. CULBERSON. I respectfully call the attention of the chairman of the committee to this amendment, with a view of having an explanation of it. The increase seems to be from $20,000 to $1,000,000.

Mr. PENROSE. The reason of that is that heretofore while apparently, from the reading of the bill, these expenses were allowed to railway postal clerks, as a matter of fact there was never any appropriation to make any allowance for it. They are the only class of Government employees who do not receive this allowance. This is one of the issues in this bill, and has been publicly discussed. It is recommended by the Department. It has been considered moderate and fair that these men should be allowed compensation not exceeding $1 a day for their actual traveling expenses. Under the $20,000 appropriation they practically, of course, have no allowance for traveling expenses.

Mr. CULBERSON. The way the bill reads it is simply a straight, direct increase from $20,000 to a million dollars for the actual and necessary expenses of the persons named in the bill; and it occurred to me, while I am not especially familiar with the matter, not now being a member of the committee—

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. CULBERSON. Certainly. I simply invite attention to it for the purpose of getting information.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, it is true this amendment is a new departure in the Post-Office Department in regard to railway mail clerks. Heretofore railway mail clerks have simply had a salary, the maximum, I believe, being $1,600 a year. They pay all their hotel bills while away from home. There are 13,000 railway mail clerks. It is estimated that about 6,500 of them, half of them, are out all the while, and it is estimated that a dollar per day will pay their expenses for lodging while out on duty. I believe this to be the most meritorious amendment that was added to the bill. I believe the railway mail clerks do really more hard, substantial work and come in contact with greater dangers than any other class of Government employees. This million dollars is intended to pay each one of them a dollar per day while he is out, away from home, for his actual expenses.

Mr. PENROSE. I would correct the Senator from Georgia in that respect. It is not exceeding a dollar a day.

Mr. CLAY. That is correct—not exceeding a dollar per day.

Mr. PENROSE. Many of them will get only a quarter or half a dollar.

Mr. CULBERSON. Where is the provision that it shall not exceed a dollar a day?

Mr. CLAY. I will read it, with the permission of the Senator. I have it here.

Mr. CULBERSON. Oh, yes. It is at the top of page 27.

Mr. CLAY. Page 27.

Mr. PENROSE. It is in line 6, on page 27:

Provided, That from and after July 1, 1908, railway postal clerks shall be paid their actual and necessary traveling expenses, not to exceed $1 per day, while away from the terminal where their runs or series of runs begin and end, when actually on duty, such expenses to be paid under the direction of the Postmaster-General.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will ask the Senator if the traveling expenses—that is, so far as the railway expense is concerned—are not provided for in the contracts with the companies?

Mr. CLAY. That is correct. This sum is not intended to have reference to anything except board and lodging while away from home.

Mr. CULBERSON. Why is the word "traveling" employed?

Mr. CLAY. I think the words "and necessary traveling" should be stricken from the bill.

Mr. PENROSE. I understand that "traveling" covers the board and lodging.

Mr. CULBERSON. The traveling expenses are included in the contract with the railroad company.

Mr. CLAY. That is correct.

Mr. PENROSE. It does not refer to railroad fare, and it is a term well understood by the auditing officers.

Mr. CLAY. The railway mail clerks have no traveling expenses. They do not travel by private conveyance at all. They simply travel on railway cars. Consequently it looks to me that "actual expenses" would cover it, and that it would be better to strike out "and necessary traveling."

Mr. PENROSE. I would hesitate to alter the phraseology. It is well understood by the auditing officers and generally accepted.

Mr. CULBERSON. I move to strike out the word "traveling," because otherwise in my judgment it would authorize the Postmaster-General to pay the railway traveling expenses of these employees, whereas it is already included in the contract with the railroad company. Therefore it would be double pay.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 27, line 5, after the word "necessary," it is proposed to strike out "traveling," so as to read "actual and necessary expenses."

Mr. DICK. Mr. President, this phraseology is that generally used in laws of this character. It has been construed by the Department, and inasmuch as the word "actual" precedes the words "traveling expenses," nothing could possibly enter into the accounts of these agents except only such actual expenses as were necessarily incurred in the discharge of their official duties.

Mr. BURKETT. I would suggest to the Senator from Texas that striking out the word "traveling" would enable the Department to pay their expenses of every kind—traveling and everything else. There would not be any limit whatever to it. I think, by striking out "traveling," he makes it broader than by leaving in the word.

Mr. CULBERSON. In view of the fact that the traveling expenses are already provided for by law, we ought not to provide for them again. I do not know that I am in favor of the amendment at all.

Mr. GALLINGER. Would not the Senator from Texas make a distinction between "traveling expenses" and "transportation?" Transportation is provided, but traveling expenses are not included.

Mr. CULBERSON. The Senator from Georgia has kindly informed us that they have no other expense than for board and lodging.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have an impression that the words "traveling expenses" cover their incidental expenses, and I think it is so understood.

Mr. CLAY. Does the Senator mean board and lodging by the term "traveling expenses?" The only expense they have is for board and lodging. There might be a little other incidental expense—street-car fare. I do not know about railway clerks having any expense of that kind.

Mr. FORAKER. I am told that the Department construes the term "traveling expenses" to include lodging and board.

Mr. PENROSE. That is my understanding.

Mr. FORAKER. If so, that phrase as there employed would be all right.

I originally introduced this amendment in the Senate. I did it because I learned that the railway mail clerks are required to be absent from their homes a good deal of the time, and that they are at an expense when they are away, not only for board and lodging, but for another item, of which I will speak in a moment, and that they have no compensation allowed them for that.

For instance, take a city like Cincinnati. Many of these men are unable to own homes in the city. They live in the suburbs. Some of them live 20 or 25 or 30 or 50 miles away. They have to go into the city to start on their runs. They have a traveling expense of that kind which is not included in the transportation expenses that the Government provides for them.

Mr. BURKETT. Is it the intention of the amendment to cover the expenses in such cases, when the clerks live at their homes away from the terminal?

Mr. FORAKER. Not their expenses when they are at their homes, but their expenses when they are away from home. A man has to live somewhere, and he lives according to his necessities. He is allowed his expenses to the extent of a dollar a day. That is all. That is certainly reasonable enough, considering the character of the service they render and the dangers to which they are subjected constantly. There is nothing harder than the service they render. I was astonished when I saw, a few days ago, the number of deaths last year among railway mail clerks while in the line of duty and the great number who were injured.

Mr. DICK. If I may suggest to my colleague—

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. DICK. They are the single exception in all the official roster of the Government where men are required to travel and their expenses are not provided for by an appropriation.

Mr. FORAKER. I have been told that that is the case; and if so, they certainly ought to be treated like the others. I thought of moving an amendment to that language, but if the Department construes the language in the way I understand it does, I think the amendment is perhaps all right as it is.

Mr. PENROSE. The phraseology comes direct from the Department.

Mr. BURKETT. I did not understand this amendment as I seem to get the interpretation of it from the Senator from Ohio. I understood that these expenses were to be allowed. For instance, the clerks start on a long run—some of them in our country for a run extending over four or five days. I understand that this is to pay the traveling expenses when they are away from the terminal. They have a boarding arrangement or home arrangements at the terminals, and this is to pay their expenses when they are on duty between the terminals, away from their homes. The Senator from Ohio now speaks of it as paying their expenses to enable them to get to the terminal when they live 25 miles or so in the suburbs.

Mr. FORAKER. Perhaps I am in error in giving it that kind of an interpretation. I spoke of that condition as a fact known to be true. I know in our city most of the clerks live out of the city proper. They are at that expense, whether it is 15 cents, or 25 cents, or half a dollar, in order to reach the terminal. I suspect the Department would construe this to apply to board and lodging and such expenses as they might incur between their terminals when they are actually in the discharge of their duty.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I wish to make one observation in reference to this amendment.

I quite agree, sir, with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY] that this is perhaps the most meritorious amendment that has been added to the bill by the committee. The Post-Office authorities were before the committee and explained the reason for the amendment to my entire satisfaction. For instance, if a railway mail clerk starts out from Washington on his trip and that trip ends at Atlanta or Charlotte, he there remains all night, and, necessarily, he must incur expense at the hotel; that is, he must pay for his board and lodging. The railway mail clerk is the only employee of the Government who has that to do, so far as I know; and the purpose of this amendment is simply to enable the Post-Office Department to pay to the railway mail clerk a sum not to exceed $1 per day when he is away from home.

It was shown to the committee that many of these clerks leave their homes in the morning, make their runs, and return at night. In that case they would get 25 cents for their dinner, and so on. It was estimated that a million dollars would pay the entire expense incurred by the railway mail clerks while away from home for actual board and lodging. Railway transportation has nothing to do with it. That is already provided for, of course. The purpose of the amendment is to put these men upon an equality with all the other employees of the Government similarly situated, it being recognized by the committee, and I think by everyone else, that they are engaged in the most hazardous employment of any employees of the Government. They are discriminated against to that extent. I think the amendment is a good one.

Mr. BURKETT. I want to say to the Senator from Alabama that under his interpretation of what the amendment does I certainly think the amendment is a good one and one that I have favored for a long time, because it has always occurred to me, as the Senator says, that these are about the only Government employees whom we keep away from home and do not provide for any expense account. But upon the interpretation that seemed to be given to it, the amendment seemed to be far different from what the Senator from Alabama has explained it to be.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think that was the way it was explained by the Post-Office Department.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will ask the Senator from Alabama, in view of his very clear explanation of the purpose of the amendment, whether he thinks the word "traveling" ought to remain in?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That depends upon how you construe the word. I do not think it would make any difference whether it remains in or goes out. I am sure the Post-Office Department will construe the amendment to mean just what I have said, because that was the statement made before the committee, that the purpose, and the only purpose, of the amendment was to pay these men while away from home on actual duty something like their actual expenses. It was explained that at these terminal points they had some sort of a dormitory arrangement by which they could get lodging for 25 cents and a meal for 25 cents. Therefore it was said that a dollar a day would meet their actual expenses, not traveling expenses, not railroad fare, or anything of that sort.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. PENROSE. I hope the amendment will not be adopted. The amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment was, on page 28, line 11, after the word "railroads," to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, however, That not to exceed $30,000 of the amount hereby appropriated may be expended, in the discretion of the Postmaster-General, where unusual conditions exist or where such service will be more expeditious and efficient and at no greater cost than otherwise.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, line 17, to increase the appropriation for transportation of foreign mails from $3,508,862 to $4,608,862.

Mr. CLAY. I do not remember this amendment of the committee. I see that the amount is $4,608,862 instead of $3,508,862.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will explain to the Senator that that was a part of the ocean mail bill which passed the Senate, and the committee, as I understand it, agreed to insert that bill in the appropriation bill as an amendment. In preparing the bill the amount was separated from the other provisions of the bill, which will be found on the next page, but the increased amount is a part of the amendment which I offered to the bill.

Mr. CLAY. The amount provided in the amendment?

Mr. CULBERSON. Adding $1,100,000?

Mr. GALLINGER. Adding $1,100,000. That was the amendment which the Committee on Commerce sent to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, which was agreed to, I understand, and was to become a part of the bill.

Mr. CLAY. I will state to the Senator I knew the ocean mail-service measure was put on the bill. I was not aware of the fact, however, that the amount of this appropriation had been changed.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; that increase became necessary.

Mr. CLAY. I see into it now.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is precisely the amount that was passed by the Senate.

Mr. CULBERSON. I understand that the amendment on page 28 is subject to the adoption of the amendment on pages 29 and 30.

Mr. CLAY. Would it not be better to pass over this amendment until that is considered?

Mr. GALLINGER. If that course is desired, I think it would be wise.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 6, after the word "piers," to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That no part of said sum shall be used to pay for the carrying in the mails any malt, vinous or spirituous liquors, or intoxicating liquors of any kind, or any cocaine or derivative thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, after line 9, to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to pay hereafter for ocean mail service under the act of March 3, 1891, in vessels of the second class on routes to South America, to the Philip- pinas, to Japan, to China, and to Australasia, 4,000 miles or more in length, outward voyage, at a rate per mile not exceeding the rate applicable to vessels of the first class as provided in said act, and in vessels of the third class on said routes, at a rate per mile not exceeding the rate applicable to vessels of the second class, as provided in said act: Provided, That if no contract is made under the provisions of this act for a line of ships between a port on the Atlantic coast south of Cape Charles and South American ports, the Postmaster-General shall, provided two or more lines are established from North Atlantic ports, require that one of said lines shall, upon each outward and homeward voyage, touch at least two ports on the Atlantic coast south of Cape Charles, regard being had in the selection of such ports of call to geographical location and to the volume of the export and import business of the ports so selected: And provided further, That the total expenditure of foreign mail service in any one year shall not exceed the estimated revenue therefrom for that year.

Mr. CLAY. I believe this amendment has passed the Senate. I think it is the same measure that passed the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Word for word.

Mr. CLAY. I think that is correct. I made no fight, so far as I am individually concerned, against its passage when it went through the Senate. I believe the bill passed without any division or without any yea-and-nay vote being called.

I voted against this amendment in the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads for the reason that I did not believe it ought to be inserted in an appropriation bill. I believe it to be a bad practice to legislate generally on appropriation bills. We have a fixed rule in the Senate which provides that you shall not insert any general legislation in appropriation bills, and I believe it to be a wise and a just rule.

As a general thing, when appropriation bills come before the Senate they are simply considered in the Senate by the members of the committees from which they come, and other Senators are not expecting to have inserted in appropriation bills general provisions of law not relating to those bills. If this rule was not in force, the result would be that frequently most dangerous legislation would be inserted in appropriation bills which otherwise would be carefully and critically examined by Senators.

It is true that heretofore matters of this kind have been inserted in appropriation bills, legislation of a more grave character than this, but I do not believe it to be a course that ought to be pursued, except where it is of the utmost importance to the country that such legislation shall be inserted and where Congress has not the time to enact it as a separate measure.

Mr. President, this post-office appropriation bill contains more general legislation than any post-office appropriation bill has contained in a number of years. It is true that in all probability the postal laws of the country ought to be revised, but such needed legislation as is required to perfect our postal laws ought to be enacted outside of appropriation bills. I regret that this measure is here on account of the interest felt in it by Senators. I say, when the Senate has taken the matter up and debated and passed it, without practically a division, and it has gone to the House, the question ought to be left to the House, and we ought not to go out of the ordinary rule in order to enact this legislation on an appropriation bill.

Now, take the post-office appropriations and see how they have grown. It is remarkable. There is another thing that you will find. This bill will carry this year for this purpose about $1,000,000, next year probably $2,000,000, and the next year $3,000,000. These items ought not to be charged to the Post-Office Department. Whether this be wise or unwise legislation, it ought not to be charged to the Post-Office Department.

The country's attention will be called to the fact that the post-office appropriation bill is growing each year and becoming larger than it ought to be. Items that do not belong to the Post-Office Department are now gradually being charged to that Department. Let each appropriation bill carry its own burdens, and do not charge the Post-Office Department with $3,000,000 that belong to another Department of the Government.

Mr. President, this bill will amount to about $229,000,000, and the country will say that these are expenses incident to the Post-Office Department and not for the ocean mail service. If the ocean mail service has merit, let it rest upon that merit, and do not charge it to the Post-Office Department.

I insist that this amendment is general legislation not provided by law, and I make the point of order against it.

Mr. HOPKINS. I wish to ask the Senator from Georgia if the amendment is not to provide that the American mails shall be carried in American bottoms and under the American flag? Is not that the purpose of the adoption of this amendment?

Mr. CLAY. That is true; but it is not an ordinary expense incident to the Post-Office Department.

Mr. HOPKINS. It has not been up to date.

Mr. CLAY. It never has been so considered, and it never has been placed in the post-office appropriation bill.

Mr. HOPKINS. Does not every loyal American believe that the American mail should be carried in American bottoms and under the American flag? Is it not as much to the interest of the people of the country that this amendment should be adopted and the mail be carried in the manner provided in the bill as any other provision of the bill?

Mr. CLAY. I know of two or three or half a dozen bills on different subjects pending before the Senate in committee of paramount importance to the country that in all probability ought to be enacted into legislation, but that is no reason why we should place them in this or any other appropriation bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

Mr. CLAY. I withdraw the point of order, if the Senator wants to discuss the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am quite willing that the point of order shall be made, as I feel sure that it is not well taken. First I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Georgia to the fact that he is laboring under a misapprehension when he says that this appropriation does not belong in the post-office appropriation bill.

He will observe, by turning to page 28, line 11, the words "for transportation of foreign mails, $3,508,862." That is the appropriation made by the House for this purpose, and all that is contemplated by the amendment is to increase that appropriation for the purpose of increasing the service. So the contention that this item does not belong on the post-office appropriation bill is a mistake on the part of the Senator from Georgia.

Now, if the Senator has made his point of order, I want to address myself for a moment to that. Did the Senator make the point of order?

Mr. CLAY. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Georgia is unfortunate, I think, in his contention that an appropriation bill ought not to contain general legislation, in view of the fact that he had to confess before he got through that this very bill contains more general legislation than any post-office appropriation bill he had any knowledge of. As we have gone along considering this bill I regret that the Senator from Georgia did not feel it incumbent upon him to make a point of order against several other provisions in the bill that were undoubtedly obnoxious to the rule.

The Senator from Georgia has made a point of order against a provision that is not obnoxious to the rule, as I shall endeavor to show. The amendment was introduced by me and referred to the Committee on Commerce. That committee, after full consideration, instructed me to report it favorably to the Senate and move its reference to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, which was done. Under the rule that effectually disposes of the proposed increase of appropriation, it being provided in Rule XVI that if a standing committee recommends an increased appropriation, and it is referred to the committee having in charge the appropriation bill, it is in order. So the point of order can not possibly lie against the proposed increase in the appropriation.

Now, Mr. President, it has been decided over and over again that when an appropriation is made for a special purpose Congress has a right to define what use shall be made of that appropriation, and that is all that the provision on page 29 does. The amendment provides, in the first place, that we shall increase this appropriation $1,100,000. It then provides that we shall establish additional mail routes for the purpose of expanding that appropriation, and it provides nothing else in the world.

On yesterday a very similar contention was raised in the Senate when the distinguished President pro tempore was in the chair. I will not take the trouble to read the debate. It will be found in the Record of yesterday's proceedings. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] made a point of order against an amendment that it was general legislation. The President pro tempore ruled very promptly, and, in my judgment, very properly, on that point of order, and he said:

It has been held several times in the Senate, when a matter like this has been submitted to it, that it was in order; that the appropriation itself being in order, the disposition of the appropriation is also in order. Therefore the Chair overrules the point of order.

There are many precedents for that ruling. This amendment comes directly in that class of amendments. We have made an additional appropriation; we have provided how that additional appropriation shall be expended, and that is all there is to it.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. CULBERSON. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire a question. The third subdivision of Rule XVI provides that—

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

I will ask the Senator if the proviso at page 29 does not change existing law?

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, Mr. President, so far as that is concerned—

Mr. CULBERSON. So that it will be general legislation amending the act of March 3, 1891.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will suggest to the Senator the change of existing law has no bearing upon the question, because we have no rule on that point in the Senate. That is a House rule.

Mr. CULBERSON. Does the Senator doubt that a provision in an appropriation bill which changes existing law is general legislation?

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, that depends. If it is connected with an added appropriation and simply directs how that appropriation shall be expended, I should say not; that when we increase an appropriation we have a right to specifically define what use shall be made of that added appropriation, and that is all that this amendment contemplates.

Mr. CULBERSON. But the rule I submit to the Senator is very broad:

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. That would apply to an amendment not connected with an appropriation contained in the bill, I will say to the Senator, as I interpret the rule. If we had not increased the appropriation in this bill, beyond a question the Senator's point of order would be well taken, but coupling it with the fact that it is connected with an increased appropriation, the Senator's point is not well taken.

Now, Mr. President, I feel sure that if the Chair will examine the precedents, and they are quite numerous, the Chair will find that the contention as made to-day has been made over and over again on similar occasions, and generally overruled either by the Chair or the Senate. It was made yesterday and was overruled, and I feel quite confident that the Chair will, in his wisdom, overrule the point of order which has been made by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire did not intend to be unjust, I am sure. The Senator says that I said that these were special amendments to this bill which were general legislation and that I had simply selected this one to make the point of order against it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, Mr. President, what did I say?—

Mr. CLAY. One moment; I will go a little further, with the Senator's permission. I believe that one or two points of order have already been made against general legislation in the pending bill, and if the Senator will turn over a little further he will find four or five statutes that have been amended in it. I doubt if that ought to have been done. You take a penal statute and amend it, changing the penalty, and it sometimes will slip through in an appropriation bill, when otherwise it would be most critically examined and carefully debated in the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. I quite agree, if the Senator will permit me, with him on that point, and I have no disposition to criticize the Senator at all.

Mr. CLAY. I know the Senator has not.

Mr. GALLINGER. What I did say was what the Senator himself confessed, that the bill carries more general legislation than any similar bill he had knowledge of; and I meant to express, as a matter of regret, that the Senator from Georgia should select this most meritorious amendment, an amendment that had the almost universal concurrence of the Senate when it was here in the form of a bill, and which purposes great public good. I regretted that the Senator had selected that amendment against which to make a point of order.

Mr. CLAY. I intended to make two or three other points of order. I will say to the Senator that we have passed upon this question on a separate bill in the Senate; it has gone to the House, and if the House passes it or fails to pass it, the House is responsible for it. It is true that by putting a measure into an appropriation bill, whether Congress wants it or not, sometimes you can get it through. I do not desire to criticize this measure. I simply say it is dangerous to place general legislation in an appropriation bill, especially when we expect, in considering appropriation bills, that they contain only the items necessary to carry out existing law. But I do not care to argue the merit of it.

Mr. President, just a minute in regard to the rule, and I am through. The rule contains three provisions. I refer to the first part of Rule XVI:

And no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation—

Stopping there, if nothing else appeared, it would be objectionable to the rule—or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session; or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the Departments.

I concede that the amendment is not objectionable to that rule, because it was referred, I understand, to the Committee on Commerce and the Committee on Commerce reported it back to the Senate favorably and it then went to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, where it was adopted. I concede that it is not objectionable to that part of the rule, but now take the third subdivision:

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill, nor shall any amendment not germane or relevant to the subject-matter contained in the bill be received—

I am not prepared to say that this part of the rule would exclude it—nor shall any amendment not germane or relevant to the subject-matter contained in the bill be received.

But in my judgment this provision of the rule does make it objectionable:

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

Now, what is the amendment? It is general legislation. It is a bill to amend existing law, to change it, and to make material changes in it. How it can be judged as being any other than general legislation I confess I am not able to understand.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. CLAY. Certainly.

Mr. BURKETT. I should like to ask the Senator a question. As I understand the law it now provides that certain rates can be paid to ships of the first class.

Mr. CLAY. Yes.

Mr. BURKETT. In short, if that class of vessels run to the ports of South America there would not be any question about it; that would be just the law as it is, as I understand it. In fact, all the change there is is adding "second class" after "first class." That merely is a provision that in distributing this money for carrying the mails to South America it can be used for second-class vessels just the same as it can be used now for first-class vessels. So it does not change the law, but simply distributes the money in a different way to that class of vessels.

Mr. CLAY. It does change the law. It provides a different rule of compensation.

Mr. BURKETT. Every appropriation bill provides for a different rule of compensation. That is the object of it.

Mr. CLAY. Every appropriation bill carries out existing law, and if this bill simply attempted to carry out the statute as it now exists there would be no trouble about it, but this is an effort to amend and change the existing statute. I do not care to consume the time of the Senate, however, because I know the chairman of the committee is anxious to complete the bill.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, on yesterday there came up a question precisely like this in every regard. It was on the amendment touching the weighing of the mails, and it did change the existing law in many respects. The point of order was made by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] that it was general legislation. I had the honor at the time to be presiding and, without any hesitation, I overruled the point of order entirely on the ground that the appropriation in the bill was legitimate and that it was not general legislation to give the details of how the appropriation should be expended. It has been so held by the Senate at least four times, and never held otherwise but once. It was so held by a presiding officer of the Senate at one time when I offered an amendment to the post-office appropriation bill appropriating a large sum of money for carrying the mails to South America. I do not see that there is any distinction whatever between this amendment and the case where I overruled the point of order made by the Senator from Minnesota. An appropriation is made here entirely in order and entirely legitimate relating to the carrying of the foreign mails. Then this provision simply prescribes how that additional money appropriated shall be expended. I can not for the life of me see how that can be regarded as general legislation, and if I had been presiding to-day, without any hesitation at all I should have overruled the point of order made by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY].

The VICE-PRESIDENT. A similar question has been presented to the Senate a number of times. The question as to whether an amendment substantially similar to the one challenged was in order has as a general rule been submitted to the Senate by other occupants of the chair. The Chair will now submit the question to the Senate. Is the proposed amendment in order?

Mr. CULBERSON. I call for a division, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. A division is demanded.

Mr. FRYE. We had better have the yeas and nays.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CLAY. We have voted on this matter, and I hope we will not have the yeas and nays.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask for the yeas and nays on the point of order.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, may I inquire what is the pending question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is whether the amendment proposed by the committee is in order.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is submitted to the Senate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That question is submitted to the Senate.

Mr. CULBERSON. I understand the question is one of order merely.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is a question of order.

Mr. KEAN. The question, as I understand, is, Is this amendment properly in the bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the effect of the question submitted to the Senate.

Mr. PENROSE. All those who believe the amendment is in order will vote "yea," as I understand?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is correct.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], but I will transfer that to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NIXON] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILMAN], who is detained by illness. I will transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. ANKENY] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. FOSTER (when his name was called). In the absence of my pair, the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KITTREDGE], I withhold my vote.

Mr. FULTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS], who is absent. I will transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. TALIAFERRO (when Mr. MILTON's name was called). I understand my colleague [Mr. MILTON] is paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. WARNER]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. PILES. I desire to announce the illness of my colleague [Mr. ANKENY], who is therefore detained from the Senate to-day.

Mr. GAMBLE (after having voted in the affirmative). I have already voted, but I have discovered that the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] has not voted. I have a general pair with that Senator, but I will transfer it to the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BROWN], and will let my vote stand.

The result was announced—yeas 46, nays 12, as follows:

So the amendment of the committee was decided to be in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads was, under the subhead "Office of the Third Assistant Postmaster-General," on page 31, line 1, before the word "envelopes," to strike out "and official;" and in line 2, after the word "agency," to strike out "at Dayton, Ohio, including expenses attendant on inspection of manufacture of official envelopes at Cincinnati, Ohio," so as to make the clause read:

For pay of agent and assistants to examine and distribute stamped envelopes and newspaper wrappers, and expenses of agency, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, line 8, to increase the appropriation for pay of agent and assistants to examine and distribute postal cards, and expenses of agency, from $6,000 to $8,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, after line 10, to strike out—

For payment of limited indemnity for the loss of pieces of first-class domestic registered matter, $25,000. That hereafter all moneys recovered or collected on account of loss of first-class domestic registered matter which in the course of adjustment are not restored to the original owners, shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States.

For payment of limited indemnity for the loss of registered articles in the international mails, $10,000.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

For the payment of limited indemnity for the loss of first-class domestic registered matter and for the loss of registered articles in the international mails, $25,000: Provided, That all moneys now in the hands of officers and agents of the Post-Office Department and all moneys hereafter recovered, collected, or received from any source on account of the loss of registered mail of any kind, either foreign or domestic, shall be deposited in the Treasury for service of the Post-Office Department; and an appropriation is hereby created, to be denominated "Indemnity for lost registered mail," which shall be credited with all such deposits. All appropriations made for the payment of indemnity for the loss of registered mail, either foreign or domestic, shall be available until expended, without regard to fiscal years, for the payment of indemnity for lost registered mail, either foreign or domestic, and for the reimbursement to the owners of such moneys as they may equitably be entitled to and which have previously been deposited in the Treasury to the credit of this appropriation: Provided, That Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress are authorized to send by registered mail, free of charge, United States maps and other especially valuable Government publications.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, after line 21, to strike out:

For the employment of special counsel to be appointed by the Attorney-General, when requested by the Postmaster-General, and at compensation to be fixed by the Attorney-General not exceeding this temporary appropriation, to prosecute and defend, on behalf of the Post-Office Department, all suits now pending or which may hereafter arise affecting the second-class mailing privilege, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, after line 3, to insert:

Amend section 3847 of the Revised Statutes of the United States to read as follows:

"Any postmaster, having public money belonging to the Government, at an office within a city or town where there is no Treasurer or assistant treasurer of the United States, or designated depository, may deposit the same temporarily, at his own risk and in his official capacity, in any national bank in the State in which the said postmaster resides, or in which his office is located, or within a reasonable radius of his post-office in an adjacent State, but no authority or permission is or shall be given for the payment to or receipt by a postmaster or any other person, of interest, directly or indirectly, on any deposit made as herein described."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, after line 16, to insert:

Amend sections 3646 and 3647 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (as amended by act of June 19, 1906) to read as follows: "Whenever any original check or warrant of the Post-Office Department has been lost, stolen, or destroyed, the Postmaster-General may authorize the issuance of a duplicate thereof within three years from the date of such original check or warrant, upon the execution by the owner thereof of such bond or indemnity as the Postmaster-General may prescribe: Provided, That when such original check or warrant does not exceed in amount the sum of $50, and the payee is, at the date of the application, an officer or employee in the service of the Post-Office Department, whether by contract, designation, or appointment, the Postmaster-General may, in lieu of an indemnity bond, authorize the issuance of a duplicate check or warrant upon such an affidavit as he may prescribe, to be made before any postmaster by the payee of an original check or warrant."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, after line 10, to insert:

The Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster-General shall cause to be destroyed, in such manner as they may deem best, all money-order statements rendered by postmasters and all paid money orders accompanying the same, as well as all descriptive lists of international money orders certified to or by the exchange offices designated for conducting money-order transactions with foreign countries, and all coupons of issued international money orders now filed in the office of the Auditor for the Post-Office Department, or which may hereafter be filed therein, after three years shall have elapsed from the expiration of the period covered by such statements and lists: Provided, That the Postmaster-General, upon evidence satisfactory to him, and under such special regulations as he shall prescribe, may cause payment to be made in the manner prescribed in sections 4 and 11 of the act approved January 27, 1894, of the amount of any domestic money order remaining unpaid after the lapse of three years from the date of its issue. And it shall hereafter be the duty of the Auditor for the Post-Office Department to maintain a complete and permanent record of all unpaid money orders issued by postmasters in the United States, or such of its insular possessions as are amenable to the authority of the Postmaster-General for payment within its own territory, such record to serve as a basis for adjudicating claims for payment by warrant of the amounts of said orders.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, after line 11, to insert:

That section 3893 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following:

"And the term 'immoral' within the intentment of this section shall include matter of a character tending to incite arson, murder, or assassination; and the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to exclude from the second-class mailing privileges any anarchistic publication which contains matter that suggests, advocates, or approves the abolition, overthrow, or destruction of any and all government, or the commission of arson, murder, or assassination."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I observe in line 19 the word "publication" is qualified by the word "anarchistic." It seems to me that that constitutes an unnecessary limitation upon what follows in the section. The provision reads:

And the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to exclude from the second-class mailing privileges any anarchistic publication which contains matter that suggests, advocates, or approves the abolition, overthrow, or destruction of any and all government, or the commission of arson, murder, or assassination.

Manifestly a publication which contains matter of that kind ought to be excluded from the mails whether it can be characterized as "anarchistic" or not. So I move to strike out the word "anarchistic."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 35, line 19, before the word "publication," it is proposed to amend the amendment of the committee by striking out the word "anarchistic."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I will ask what became of the provision on page 35?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It was amended and then agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I will ask that that amendment be considered open.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be considered as open.

Mr. PENROSE. What amendment is that?

Mr. HALE. The amendment at the bottom of page 35.

Mr. FRYE. The first amendment or the last one?

Mr. HALE. The last one.

Now let the Secretary read the amendment beginning in line 15, page 35, and I ask the Senate to listen to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

That section 3893 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following:

"And the term 'immoral' within the intentment of this section shall include matter of a character tending to incite arson, murder, or assassination; and the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to exclude from the second-class mailing privileges any publication which contains matter that suggests, advocates, or approves the abolition, overthrow, or destruction of any and all government, or the commission of arson, murder, or assassination."

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senate will realize what the effect of this will be.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

Mr. KEAN. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that, as I understand, this provision proposes to amend section 3893 of the Revised Statutes. I do not know what the section of the Revised Statutes referred to is; but as this is the only thing that is described as immoral, I should think this is destroying existing law on the subject.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly it is.

Mr. PENROSE. I do not understand the objection and criticism of the Senator from Maine to this section.

Mr. HALE. I only said that I thought the Senate ought to realize the effect of this amendment, amounting, as it does, to a practical censorship of the press by the Post-Office Department. It is a matter entirely for the Senate to decide.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads was, on page 36, line 4, before the word "dollars," to insert "five hundred;" and in line 7, before the word "and," to strike out "four thousand five hundred" and insert "five thousand," so as to make the clause read:

For pay of agent and assistants to examine and distribute registry envelopes, agent, $2,500; chief clerk, $1,000; one clerk, at $900; and one laborer, at $660; in all, $5,060.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, after line 8, to insert:

For pay of agent and assistants to examine and distribute official envelopes, agent, $2,500; chief clerk, $1,000; two clerks, at $900; and one laborer, at $660; in all, $5,960.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, line 9, to reduce the appropriation for wrapping twine and tying devices from $225,000 to $200,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, line 17, to increase the appropriation for the purchase, exchange, and repair of type-writing machines, envelope-opening machines, etc., from $105,000 to $130,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, after line 18, to insert:

To defray the cost of printing a new edition of Street Directory of the Principal Cities of the United States, $12,000.

Mr. BURKETT. I should like to inquire what this item is.

Mr. PENROSE. That is a publication which the Government itself makes. It is not a copyrighted book. It appears that there are a large number of letters addressed with the name of the party and the street, but not the city, the writer carelessly omitting the city. This is a directory which the Government has brought down to date and which indicates what cities in the United States have streets of certain names.

Mr. BURKETT. I understand.

Mr. PENROSE. In that way a great many letters are enabled to reach the addressees which otherwise would go to the dead-letter office.

Mr. BURKETT. The reason why I asked the Senator is that I had some communications saying an attempt was being made to compile a directory of the patrons of the various post-offices, and protesting against it. I did not know but that this would be that sort of a directory.

Mr. PENROSE. This is a work already published and which has been brought down to date by the Government.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, line 12, to increase the appropriation for pay of letter carriers, substitutes for carriers on annual leave, clerks in charge of substations, etc., from $35,573,000 to $39,303,685.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, line 18, before the word "Provided," to insert:

That after June 30, 1908, letter carriers of the rural-delivery service shall receive a salary not exceeding $1,000 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, line 25, after the word "year," to strike out:

Provided, That no part of said sum shall be used to pay for the carrying in the mails any malt, vinous, or spirituous liquors, or intoxicating liquors of any kind.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, after line 6, to insert:

That the account of Edward Rosewater, deceased, late a delegate to the Universal Postal Congress at Rome, Italy, be settled, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, within the amount allotted to him by the Postmaster-General as salary and expenses out of the $5,000 appropriated for the salary and expenses of delegates to that congress, without the further filing of vouchers.

Mr. PENROSE. I think there is some misunderstanding regarding this amendment. There is another person involved in the claim, and I offer an amendment as a substitute for the paragraph just read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania proposes an amendment in the nature of a substitute which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the committee amendment, on page 37, lines 7 to 13, both inclusive, it is proposed to insert:

That the accounts of Edward Rosewater, deceased, and of N. M. Brooks, late delegates to the Universal Postal Congress at Rome, Italy, be settled, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, within the amounts allotted to each by the Postmaster-General as salary and expenses out of the $5,000 appropriated for the salary and expenses of delegates to that congress without the further filing of vouchers.

Mr. CULBERSON. I rise to make an inquiry about this item, small though it be. I will ask Senators on this side of the Chamber who are on the committee if they are able to give me the information. I desire to know why it is that vouchers in this case are to be expressly dispensed with.

Mr. CLAY obtained the floor.

Mr. PENROSE rose.

Mr. CLAY. I beg pardon.

Mr. PENROSE. No; let the Senator proceed. I would rather have the Senator from Georgia explain it.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Rosewater died just after the services had been performed. The Department recognized that the services had been performed; and the money had been appropriated for that purpose, and most of it had been used. They simply ask to close up the account without the filing of vouchers, for the reason that Rosewater is dead and they can not be obtained. There is only $5,000 involved. There were two delegates. The other one paid his money, and the vouchers have been filed.

Mr. CULBERSON. The new provision exempts Mr. Brooks from filing vouchers as well as the estate of Mr. Rosewater. It is a small matter, but I should like to have it explained.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the fact is that the sum of money allotted to these persons for their expenses in connection with the service was actually advanced to each of them by the Treasury Department under and in conformity with the law. They did not understand that any vouchers would be required. They prepared no vouchers, nor did they retain any, as I understand. The amount spent was considerably in excess of the amount delivered to them for expenses. The nature of the employment, the extent of the travel, and the amount of entertaining necessarily involved the expenditure of a sum much larger than the Government allowed.

In the meantime, as suggested, before being called upon for any vouchers with which to make any settlement with the Treasury on account of the advances made, Mr. Rosewater died suddenly. His colleague in that service, as before suggested, failed to retain any vouchers, and it would now be practically impossible for him to do more than to swear to his accounts and submit them to the Treasury Department for adjustment.

Mr. CLAY. I did not understand that Mr. Brooks was involved in this. I understood that this simply had reference to the accounts of Edward Rosewater, deceased.

Mr. CARTER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania, the chairman of the committee, as a substitute for the amendment provides for the adjustment of the accounts of Mr. Rosewater's colleague.

Mr. CLAY. I did not know anything about that. My statement had reference to this item:

That the account of Edward Rosewater, deceased, late a delegate to the Universal Postal Congress at Rome, Italy, be settled, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, within the amount allotted to him by the Postmaster-General as salary and expenses out of the $5,000 appropriated for the salary and expenses of delegates to that congress, without the further filing of vouchers.

That amendment was considered by the committee. My understanding was that for the purpose of paying his expenses the money had been advanced to Mr. Rosewater before he went, or after he went—

Mr. CARTER. Before.

Mr. CLAY. And he then died. He could not file the vouchers after he returned. This is simply to allow a settlement of his accounts. The other matter I had not heard of. That, I presume, has been offered on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. CARTER. It was offered on the floor of the Senate. I will state to the Senator that both accounts were before the committee, but in the hurry incident to closing up the bill only the Rosewater account was acted upon. The Senator is correct in that behalf, but the reasons applicable to the settling of one account apply, of course, equally to the other. The death of Mr. Rosewater renders it utterly impossible for his administrator to submit the vouchers.

Mr. CLAY. I can readily see, if Mr. Rosewater died and his vouchers can not be obtained, why his estate ought not to be required to present them. But if the other party is living and kept an account of his expenses and has the vouchers, it presents an entirely different case.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, I think I can straighten this out somewhat for Senators, because I have been through it, especially with reference to the account of Mr. Rosewater. This appropriation of $5,000 was made for the expenses of the delegate to the International Postal Congress at Rome. Afterwards the letter "s" was added, in order to have two delegates, and the appropriation was not increased. They appointed Mr. Brooks, from the Department, and Mr. Rosewater to go to the conference. Mr. Rosewater had gone to the International Postal Congress before, and had always taken the appropriate tion as it was made and had spent it. He never before had been required to produce any vouchers. That never had been the practice. He just took the appropriation, which is made in full of expenses. The amount that Congress appropriated never has paid the expenses. Accordingly the Department never required any accounting, because it would come short, and the Government would always owe the delegate something.

Last year, when the delegates returned, the Postmaster-General thought there should be an accounting, and he made an order to that effect. Neither delegate had kept any vouchers whatsoever of his expenses, having both of them gone before, and according to custom never before having to account for their expenditures. So neither of them had any vouchers.

I only speak for Mr. Rosewater's estate now because I do not know Mr. Brooks, but I take it he is exactly in the same position. Immediately when Mr. Rosewater was asked for vouchers, he set about to get them. He went back and retraced his steps and sent out letters to get vouchers from every hotel where he stopped and every railroad from which he bought a ticket and from the steamship companies, the stage coaches, the busses, and all such services. He was collecting them together and had a goodly number—I have them here from the Department; he had collected this many [exhibiting] when suddenly, as I think every one in the Senate recalls, about the 1st of August, he died of apoplexy or heart failure. The work of collecting the vouchers had not been finished. He had part of them collected. There the matter ended.

The administratrix of the estate, Mrs. Rosewater, took up the matter to finish the settlement, and of course she has no way of knowing where to get the rest of the vouchers. Accordingly, since the requirement has been made to file the vouchers, the Treasury Department can not settle the account without the vouchers. Therefore it is necessary to have this amendment made authorizing the Auditor to settle without the filing of vouchers.

Mr. Brooks was in a good deal the same condition. It seems he has not been able to get vouchers, and the amendment which is offered by the chairman proposes to include him, he being in the same condition, as I understand, except that fortunately he is still living, while Mr. Rosewater is dead. It is absolutely impossible for Mrs. Rosewater to collect these vouchers, and as I understand it is also impossible for Mr. Brooks to get his together. But with respect to him, perhaps, some one else will speak. I have not been asked to say anything about Mr. Brooks. I have the vouchers as far as Mr. Rosewater located them, written in all kinds of languages. I have here all those he did receive, and they were filed, but they are not complete.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, the matter we are now considering was referred to me as a special committee of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and all the papers in the case, so far as there are any papers, were turned over to me for examination. I went through them pretty carefully. I ascertained that it had not been the custom of the Post-Office Department to require the delegates to the Postal Congress to file vouchers for their expenses. There was $5,000 appropriated. Two thousand two hundred and fifty dollars was turned over to each of the delegates. Five hundred dollars of the amount was retained in the Treasury and is now in the Treasury subject to the settlement.

I apprehend that if the amendment passes, and I think it ought to, it will simply amount to permitting these accounts to be settled without annoyance to anybody, especially to the widow of Rosewater. There is no intention to increase the amount of the appropriation at all. That has been settled. The money was paid to the delegates and was spent by them, except the $500 which is in the Treasury, and doubtless when this settlement is made that money will remain in the Treasury. I have no question about it. This is simply to permit a settlement of these accounts at the Department without further annoyance to these people, and I think the amendment ought to be agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania in the nature of a substitute for the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads was, on page 39, after line 21, to insert:

That the term and authority of the Joint Commission authorized under the act approved March 2, 1907, to investigate the business system of the Post-Office Department and the postal service, and the time for the filing of the report of said Commission, are hereby extended until as soon as practicable after the beginning of the second session of the Sixtieth Congress. And said Commission is authorized to codify the postal laws of the United States and to incur any necessary expense in connection with said work.

And the unexpended balance appropriated for the expenses of said Commission is hereby reappropriated, together with the further sum of $10,000, to be paid out on the audit and order of the chairman or vice-chairman of the said Commission under the method authorized in said act approved March 2, 1907, said appropriation to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, after line 13, to insert:

That enlisted men of the United States Navy may, upon selection by the Secretary of the Navy, be designated by the Post-Office Department as "Navy mail clerks" and "assistant Navy mail clerks," who shall be authorized to receive and open all pouches and sacks of mail addressed to naval vessels, to make proper delivery of such mail, to receive matter for transmission in the mails, to receipt for registered matter (keeping an accurate record thereof), to keep and have for sale an adequate supply of postage stamps, to make up and dispatch mails, and other postal duties as may be authorized by the Postmaster-General, all in accordance with such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the commanding officer of the vessel or of the squadron to which the vessel is attached. Each mail clerk and assistant mail clerk shall take the oath of office prescribed for employees of the postal service, and shall give bond to the United States in the sum of $1,000 for the faithful performance of his duties as such clerk, and shall be amenable in all respects to naval discipline, except that, as to their duties as such clerks, the commanding officers of the vessels upon which they are stationed shall require them to be governed by the postal laws and regulations of the United States. Whenever necessity arises therefor any assistant mail clerk may be required by the commanding officer of the vessel upon which he is stationed or of the squadron to which said vessel is attached to perform the duties of mail clerk. They shall receive as compensation for such services from the Navy Department, in addition to that paid them of the grade to which they are assigned, such sum in the case of mail clerks not to exceed $500 per annum, and in that of assistant mail clerks not to exceed $300 per annum, as may be determined and allowed by the Navy Department.

Mr. SCOTT. Does that provide an appropriation for these naval mail clerks? If a sailor is required to carry a supply of stamps and to perform duties other than his duties as a sailor, I think we ought to provide some extra compensation for him.

Mr. PENROSE. There is such a provision on page 41, beginning in line 14, permitting the Navy Department to allow them extra compensation.

Mr. SCOTT. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 42, after line 12, to insert:

That no part of the appropriations herein made shall be used to pay for the carrying in the mails any malt, vinous, or spirituous liquors, or intoxicating liquors of any kind, or any cocaine or derivative thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. PENROSE. I now ask unanimous consent to go back in order to offer several amendments necessary to perfect the bill, which were overlooked.

I will say, in this connection, that after these few amendments which I shall offer to perfect the bill shall have been passed upon by the Senate, I shall yield to the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT] for the purpose of calling up the pension bills, and then will have the pending bill printed, so that the Senate may have full opportunity to examine it and take it up in the morning.

Mr. HALE. Why not pass the bill to-night?

Mr. KEAN. Yes; pass it to-night.

Mr. CARTER. Let us pass the bill, and then take up the pension bills.

Mr. PENROSE. It occurred to me that there might be other amendments.

Mr. HALE. I think we had better pass the bill to-night.

Mr. PENROSE. All right.

Mr. BACON. Do I understand the Senator from Maine to suggest that the bill be passed to-night? The Senator from Pennsylvania, the chairman of the committee, has suggested that the bill—

Mr. PENROSE. I withdraw the suggestion.

Mr. BACON. Well, I do not want you to withdraw it.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator from Georgia can make the suggestion himself, I withdraw it.

Mr. BACON. I will have my say on it, and then the Senator can do as he pleases. The suggestion was that as a number of amendments had been put upon the bill and Senators had not had an opportunity to properly examine the bill in that condition, it should be printed in order that we might do so.

I am not on the Appropriations Committee, and I presume I am like a great many other Senators who are not on that committee. We know absolutely nothing about the details of bills that are passed here containing appropriations of hundreds of millions of dollars.

Mr. HALE. The Appropriations Committee has nothing to do with this bill.

Mr. BACON. I am using that term in its generic sense.

Mr. HALE. The Senator need not make his customary criticism of the Appropriations Committee. The Appropriations Committee has nothing to do with this bill.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator's colleague is a member of the committee.

Mr. BACON. I am not using that term as specifically applicable to the Committee on Appropriations, but to all committees which have charge of appropriation bills.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator from Georgia has very little confidence in his colleague, a faithful watchdog of the Treasury, who is a member of the Committee on Post-Offices, and usually is one of the conferees.

Mr. BACON. I have every confidence in him, and if the committee had been governed by his suggestions the bill would not carry nearly so much money as it does carry.

Mr. PENROSE. I do not at this time recall any reduction proposed by the Senator from Georgia. There may have been.

Mr. President, I offer the amendments I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania proposes amendments which will be stated.

Mr. BACON. I simply desire to ask that the original suggestion of the Senator from Pennsylvania be carried out—that we may see this bill after it shall have been reprinted.

Mr. PENROSE. I believe I have the floor for the purpose of offering amendments, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania proposes amendments which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 6, line 17, heretofore the committee has recommended striking out "twenty-three" and inserting "fifteen," and it was agreed to. It is now proposed to strike out "fifteen" and insert in lieu thereof "nineteen."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be regarded as open. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 7, line 5, after the word "registry," it is proposed to strike out "thirty-six" and insert "thirty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 7, line 11, it is proposed to strike out "twenty-three" and insert "twenty-two."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 7, line 16, it is proposed to strike out "twenty-one" and insert "twenty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 22, after the words "three hundred and," it is proposed to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "fifty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 16, line 3, before the word "assistant," it is proposed to strike out "ten" and insert "twelve."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. In line 9 on the same page strike out "thirty-four" and insert "thirty-eight."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PENROSE. On page 16, line 16, I ask the Senate to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment was disagreed to, and then I shall ask the Senate to agree to the committee amendment.

Mr. CLAY. I did not catch the Senator's statement on that point. Did the Senator move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was rejected?

Mr. PENROSE. In line 16, page 16, an amendment to insert "eight" instead of "three" was disagreed to.

Mr. CLAY. Yes.

Mr. PENROSE. It was a committee amendment. I move to reconsider the vote by which it was rejected, and if it is so reconsidered I shall ask that the committee amendment be adopted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the vote disagreeing to the amendment is reconsidered, and the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PENROSE. I offer the amendment I send to the desk. It makes the amount the same as the House had it—$400,000. I suppose I ought properly to move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 16, line 23, the committee reported an amendment in the item "for car fare and bicycle allowance," to strike out "four hundred" and insert "three hundred and fifty."

Mr. PENROSE. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the vote will be reconsidered. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PENROSE. It leaves the amount $400,000, the same as the House had it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to an amendment which has been passed over, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 28, line 17, after the word "mails," it is proposed to strike out "three million five," and insert "four million six," so as to read:

For transportation of foreign mails, $4,608,862.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURNHAM. I offer an amendment to come in on page 38.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 38 after the word "dollars," in line 15, insert the following proviso:

Provided, That for the purpose of ascertaining the practicability of establishing the special local parcel-post system on the rural delivery routes throughout the United States, the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized and directed to experiment and report to Congress, not later than January 1, 1909, the result of such experiment by establishing a special local parcel-post system on rural delivery routes in not to exceed four counties in the United States, for packages of fourth-class matter originating on a rural route or at the distributing post-office for delivery by rural carriers to patrons thereof, at such special rates of postage and under such regulations as the Postmaster-General may deem advisable: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be taken as authorizing the acceptance, or delivery at such special rate of postage of any parcel offered by any person acting as agent or representative, upon commission or otherwise, for any person or company not resident on such rural delivery routes or in the town from which the route or routes emanate: And provided further, That only such parcels shall be received for delivery at the special rates of postage as are offered by bona fide merchants or dealers whose regular places of business are on such rural delivery routes or in the town from which the route or routes emanate, in the ordinary and regular course of their business and by residents on such routes or in the town from which the route or routes emanate in their individual capacity.

Mr. HALE. As I listened to the amendment I became aware that it is open to ten or twelve different points of order. I make only a single point of order—that it is an elaborate scheme of new legislation.

Mr. NELSON. General legislation.

Mr. HALE. General legislation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is clearly of the opinion that the amendment proposes general legislation, and therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. GORE. I desire to submit an amendment. On page 22, after line 18, I move to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the Postmaster-General shall not pay more for the transportation of mails than express companies pay for the transportation of express of similar weight and character.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I will state the reason why I offer the amendment. In a great many countries in the world the railroad companies carry the mails free of charge. That is true in France, I understand, except where the cars belong to the Government, in which case a nominal charge is paid amounting to 1 cent per car mile. In Austria-Hungary and in Germany one car per train is carried free of charge on other than Government railroads. In Italy and in Belgium the mails are carried free of charge, as I am informed.

Now, it is not my purpose or the purpose of anyone to ask the railroads of this country to transport mails free of charge; but, sir, the charges received by the railroads paid by the Government are far in excess of that which is reasonable and just.

I will cite a few discriminations based upon estimates rendered a few years ago. The charge from New York to Boston on first-class freight matter was 38 cents a hundred; on express it was 50 cents a hundred, and on mail it was 89 cents a hundred. From New York to Atlanta, Ga., the first-class freight charge was $1.26 a hundred; the express charge was $2 a hundred, and the mail charge was $3.50 a hundred. From New York to Chicago the charge was 75 cents a hundred for first-class freight, $1.25 for express, and $3.56 for mail. The charge from New York City to San Francisco at the same time was $3 a hundred for first-class freight, $6.75 for express, and $13.28 for the mails.

Now, sir, there is no justice and no justification in discriminations of that character, and I therefore move to limit the charge for mail to the charges paid by the express companies to the railroads for similar services.

In the Dominion of Canada mail is classified as freight of the lowest classification and bears the lowest rate. This amendment carries no proposition of that sort, but it seeks to protect the Government against charges which are unreasonable and unjust. If there is any justification for paying so much greater charges for postage than for express, I should like to see some Senator justify it.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, the conditions are so absolutely dissimilar between the character of express and mail matter that I trust the Senate will not agree to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GORE. On page 23 I move to strike out lines 13 and 14, in the following words:

For railway post-office car service, $4,600,000.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. I move to strike out those lines because, as I have suggested, we pay very much more for carrying the mails than is paid for either freight or express matter, and in addition to that we pay an excessive charge for rental of the cars in many instances. I therefore move to strike out these lines. The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GORE. At the end of line 14 on page 23 I move to insert:

That the Postmaster-General shall not pay more annual rental for postal cars than 33½ per cent of the cost of the car.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GORE. I move to insert after line 14, on page 23,

That the Postmaster-General shall not pay more annual rental for postal cars than the cars cost.

I submit that the Government has paid at times practically three times as much annual rental for postal cars as the cars cost. Now, that is a self-evident injustice and extortion. Possibly no Senator will say that these cars ought to realize to the railroads 300 per cent, or even 200 per cent, and not more possibly than 100 per cent. In the interest not of justice, but of common decency, I move to limit the rental to at least the cost of the cars.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the proposed amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 23, at the end of line 14, insert:

Provided, That the Postmaster-General shall not pay more annual rental for postal cars than the cars cost.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. GORE. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CLAY. I send an amendment to the desk, to come in after the word "dollars," on page 21, line 1.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 21, line 1, after the word "dollars," insert:

That the Postmaster-General shall require all railroads carrying the mails to maintain their regular train schedules as to time of arrival and departure of trains, and railroads failing to comply with this provision shall forfeit all pay for each trip where such delay occurs, unless it shall be shown to the Postmaster-General that such delay was caused by unavoidable accidents or conditions.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. PENROSE. I hope that the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. HALE. It is general legislation.

Mr. PENROSE. I make the point of order that it is general legislation.

Mr. CLAY. My recollection is that it went through the Senate at the last session. It was knocked out in conference.

Mr. PENROSE. The point of order must have been overlooked at the last session.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the opinion of the Chair the amendment clearly proposes general legislation, and therefore is in plain conflict with the provisions of subdivision 3 of Rule XVI. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. PENROSE. I hope the Senator will withdraw that motion.

Mr. FRYE. There are a few pension bills to be considered.

Mr. HALE. I will withdraw the motion.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT] wishes to have some pension bills passed to-day, that they may go to the other House to-morrow.

Mr. SCOTT. They must go to the House to-morrow in order to be enacted at the present session.

Mr. HALE. I will withhold the motion for the present.

COMPANIES B, C, AND D, TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY.

Mr. BULKELEY. On behalf of the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] I desire to call attention to the notice he gave that he would call up Senate bill 5729 immediately after the consideration of the post-office appropriation bill was finished. He has been obliged to leave the Chamber on account of temporary illness, and desired to have me give notice that he will ask the Senate to give consideration to Senate bill 5729 immediately after the conclusion of the morning business to-morrow.

PENSION LEGISLATION.

Mr. SCOTT. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of eight pension bills, which are on the Calendar, in order that they may go over to the House. First I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3720) for the relief of the families of certain Indian policemen who were killed during the engagement at Sitting Bull's camp, on Grand River, December 15, 1890, and for the relief of Alexander Middle, who was wounded in said engagement.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the names of the following Indians: Mary Bullhead, widow of Henry Bullhead, late Lieutenant, United States Indian police, Standing Rock Agency, N. Dak.; Annie Shavehead, widow of Charles Shavehead, late sergeant, United States Indian police, Standing Rock Agency, N. Dak.; Shell Pipe (Mrs. James Littleeagle), widow of James Littleeagle, late sergeant, United States Indian police, Standing Rock Agency, N. Dak.; Catherine Akicitch, widow of Paul Akicitch, late private, United States Indian police, Standing Rock Agency, N. Dak.; Red Deer (Mrs. Hawkman), widow of Hawkman No. 1, late private, United States Indian police, Standing Rock Agency, N. Dak.; Edward Armstrong, son of John Armstrong, deceased, late private, United States Indian police, Standing Rock Agency, N. Dak., and pay each of them a pension at the rate of $12 per month; Alexander Middle, late United States Indian police at the Standing Rock Agency, N. Dak.; Bull Snake, Crow Indian Agency, Mont., and Old Coyote, Crow Indian Agency, Mont., and pay each of them a pension at the rate of $20 per month from the date of the passage and approval of this act.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, this strikes me as being a most extraordinary bill. If we are going to commence granting pensions to widows of people who have been policemen—

Mr. SCOTT. A similar bill was passed at the last session, if the Senator will allow me.

Mr. GALLINGER. It does not make any difference if it was passed a thousand times, it is a most extraordinary bill, and I shall vote against it. I will not raise any objection to its consideration.

First, Mr. President, I want to move to strike out the word "twenty" before "dollars" in line 2, page 4, and to insert "twelve." The widows of the soldiers of the civil war have been waiting for forty-odd years to get $12 a month, and that was given to a large portion of them only this year. I do not see why these people should get more than the widows of our soldiers.

Mr. DIXON. Will the Senator from New Hampshire yield for an explanation?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. DIXON. The $20 per month on the last page applies only to two Indians who were shot in the Rosebud fight under General Crook. The widows of policemen who were killed at the Standing Rock fight get only $12 per month under the bill. The $20 per month is provided for the two Indians, Bull Snake and Old Coyote.

Mr. GALLINGER. There are a hundred thousand widows whose husbands incurred disabilities or were killed on the field of battle, and they are getting only $12 per month.

Mr. DIXON. That is all the widows get under this bill. The pension of $20 is for the two last-named Indians, who were shot when with General Crook. I have in my office a photograph of Old Coyote's hip. For twenty-eight years—since the fight left him with one leg—he has never had a pension. He was shot in battle. His hip bone sticks out 6 inches from the body.

Mr. GALLINGER. This is for those Indians?

Mr. DIXON. For two Indians wounded in the Rosebud fight.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then, I will not move the amendment, but will content myself by voting against the bill. The Senate can vote as it pleases.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SCOTT. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 5306) granting increase of pensions to survivors of the Indian wars under the acts of July 27, 1892, and June 27, 1902.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments, in line 9, after the word "same," to strike out "and pension shall continue at this rate until the beneficiary has reached the age of 70 years, when the rate shall be increased to $15 per month, and shall continue at this rate until the beneficiary has reached the age of 75 years, when it shall be increased to $20 per month;" and in line 10, after the word "twelve," to strike out "fifteen, or twenty dollars, according to age, or in accordance with this act" and insert "dollars per month," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of every survivor who is now on the roll or may hereafter be placed on the roll, under the acts of July 27, 1892, and June 27, 1902, to $12 per month from the date of filing application for same: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall prevent any survivor entitled to pension under the aforementioned acts from filing an original application and obtaining a pension at the rate of $8 per month from June 27, 1902, up to the date of filing application for increase when the rate may be increased to $12 per month.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. The bill proposes granting arrears of pension?

Mr. KEAN. Yes; they can make application from June 27, 1902.

Mr. SCOTT. It follows the general law.

Mr. GALLINGER. We have absolutely refused to do that in the matter of special pension bills for survivors and widows of the civil war. The bill provides—

That nothing herein contained shall prevent any survivor entitled to pension under the aforementioned acts from filing an original application and obtaining a pension at the rate of $8 per month from June 27, 1902, up to the date of filing application for increase, when the rate may be increased to $12 per month.

I move to strike out this proviso.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 4, strike out the proviso beginning on that line and continuing to the end of the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. BANKHEAD. On page 5, line 8, before the word "dollars," I move to strike out "twenty" and insert "thirty."

I wish to make this statement briefly. The beneficiary in this case is now 80 years old. He is blind. He was a former governor of Alabama, and one of our most distinguished citizens. He is poor. He owns 15 acres of land, valued at $300, and that is the only property he has. I ask the chairman of the committee to accept the amendment.

Mr. SCOTT. What is the suggestion of the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. BANKHEAD. On page 5, line 8, to strike out "twenty" and insert "thirty."

Mr. SCOTT. I will accept it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, line 8, before the word "dollars," strike out "twenty" and insert "thirty;" so as to make the paragraph read:

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. SCOTT. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 19475) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the civil war, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 1, after line 5, to strike out:

The name of Elizabeth Moody, widow of John R. Moody, late of Captain Robert's company, Florida Volunteers, Florida Indian war, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 18, to strike out the following clause:

The name of Alfred Johnson, late of Troop F, Ninth Regiment United States Cavalry.

Mr. BURKETT. I move that that amendment be disagreed to.

Mr. SCOTT. I would say to the Senator from Nebraska that I have a statement here in reference to that case, but I am probably not as familiar with these bills as is the chairman of the committee, who has been called home and left them in my charge. I find there are objections from the chairman to changing this amendment. It is represented that the claimant was kicked in the leg by a horse, and that he did not make application for a pension until twenty years afterwards. Is that correct?

Mr. BURKETT. I will say that the soldier served ten years in the Army. There does not seem to be any question that he was injured. He has evidence showing that he was kicked by a horse during his enlistment. He is now 55 years of age. The trouble, of course, is that the Pension Bureau will not connect his present lameness with that kick of the horse, but the medical and other evidence he has in reference to this particular disability shows that it came from that. Then, he has affidavits of two persons who saw him injured by a horse at that time. The whole question involved is that it is an injury which the medical examiners in the Pension Bureau can not trace back. The injury came from that kick, and the injury, as he advances in age, has become more serious, so that he has become very lame and very badly disabled.

Mr. SCOTT. I will accept the suggestion of the Senator that the amendment be disagreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, on page 3, after line 20, to strike out:

The name of Flemon Boles, late of Company H, Fourth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Infantry, war with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $10 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 6, to strike out:

The name of Isapheny Hardin, widow of William R. Hardin, late of Company G (Captain Turner's), First Regiment Georgia Volunteer Infantry, war with Mexico, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 11, to strike out:

The name of Priscilla A. Nicolson, widow of John O. Nicolson, late Lieutenant, United States Navy, and pay her a pension at the rate of $35 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Nannie E. Lenderman, widow of John K. Lenderman, late of Company H, First Regiment South Carolina Volunteer Infantry, war with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Mary Fowler, widow of Richard Fowler, late of Company A, Twelfth Regiment United States Infantry, war with Mexico, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Harry A. Bishop, late of Company K, Seventh Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, war with Spain.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. SCOTT. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6983) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the civil war, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place upon the pension roll at the rate per month therein specified the following-named persons:

George Evans, late of Company G, Twenty-fifth Regiment United States Infantry, and pay him a pension of $12.

B. H. Randall, late sutler at Fort Ridgely, Minn., during the Sioux Indian outbreak, and pay him a pension of $16 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Miami L. Pervell, widow of Leighton M. Pervell, alias Charles H. Hunt, late of Company K, Twenty-third Regiment United States Infantry, and pay her a pension of $12.

Sallie Pickett, widow of George E. Pickett, late second Lieutenant, Second United States Infantry, war with Mexico, and pay her a pension of $40.

Vincent A. Witcher, dependent father of Adison Witcher, late of Company F, Ninth Regiment United States Infantry, war with Spain, and pay him a pension of $20.

Joseph L. Cooper, late of Company E, First Regiment Nebraska Volunteer Infantry, war with Spain, and pay him a pension of $12.

Julia M. Tisdale, widow of Ryland D. Tisdale, late lieutenant, United States Navy, and pay her a pension of $35, and $2 per month additional on account of each of the minor children of said Ryland D. Tisdale until they reach the age of 16 years.

Willie C. Wilmot, late of Company C, First Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, war with Spain, and pay him a pension of $12.

Margaret F. Jewell, widow of James M. Jewell, late second lieutenant, Fourteenth Regiment United States Cavalry, and pay her a pension of $25, and $2 per month additional on account of the minor child of said James M. Jewell until she reaches the age of 16 years.

Mr. GORE. I submit an amendment, which I send to the desk, inserting a clause for the payment to Eva Seeley, widow of Oscar Seeley, late paymaster's steward, U. S. S. North Carolina, Connecticut, and Commodore Hull, United States Navy, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 a month in lieu of the amount she now receives.

Mr. SCOTT. I will accept the Senator's amendment if he will make it $24, which is the committee recommendation.

Mr. GORE. I thought the committee recommendation was $30.

Mr. SCOTT. I suggest to the Senator that we should pass a separate bill covering the case to which he refers. This being an omnibus bill, it would be better, in my judgment, that we should pass it without amendment. I think there will be no objection to a separate bill covering the case the Senator has in charge.

Mr. GALLINGER. These are House bills, are they not?

Mr. SCOTT. This is a Senate bill. I am perfectly willing, however, to accept the amendment, if the Senator from Oklahoma desires that it shall go on.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert at the end of the bill the following paragraph:

The name of Eva Seeley, widow of Oscar Seeley, late paymaster's steward, U. S. S. North Carolina, Connecticut, and Commodore Hull, United States Navy, and pay her a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of the amount she is now receiving.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator—the widow seems now to be receiving a pension—if paymasters' stewards are pensionable under the law? Have we ever pensioned one of them?

Mr. SCOTT. No. I will say to the Senator that Mrs. Seeley was pensioned when the Senator from New Hampshire was chairman, I believe, of the Committee on Pensions, and she is now drawing a pension of $16 per month.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then this is simply an increase of that pension.

Mr. SCOTT. This is simply an increase of that, as the widow is totally blind and is the only support of a grandchild, as I understand.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is all right.

Mr. SCOTT. It is a gratuity, I suppose.

Mr. GALLINGER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. WARREN. I do not rise to object to the bill, but, if I may be allowed, I should like to ask a question of the Senator from New Hampshire. Are we in the habit or has it been the general practice to allow pensions to widows of civil employees?

Mr. GALLINGER. It has not been the habit, Mr. President. I am not familiar with this particular bill, but the Senator from West Virginia seems to put the burden on me by saying that it passed when I was chairman of the committee. I have no recollection of it. I know that we were very scrupulous in keeping out that class of cases from pensions.

Mr. SCOTT. I certainly agree with the Senator.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SCOTT. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 3610) granting a pension to James M. Fitch.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of James M. Fitch, late of Company B, Eleventh Regiment United States Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SCOTT. I now ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (H. R. 17874) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers of said war, together with the amendments reported by the Committee on Pensions of the Senate to the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill named by the Senator from West Virginia, the question being on concurring in the amendment of the House of Representatives as proposed to be amended by the Committee on Pensions of the Senate. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee on page 31, line 11, to the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the Senate committee amendments, with the exception of the one which has been rejected, to the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The amendments to the amendment were agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question now is on concurring in the amendment of the House of Representatives as it has been amended.

The amendment of the House of Representatives, as amended, was concurred in.

On motion of Mr. SCOTT, the title was amended so as to read: "An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and other wars and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors."

That Alvah B. #### OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. FULTON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 15372.

Mr. KEAN. If the Senator from Oregon has any intention of making such a motion, I shall move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. FULTON. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 15372. I will say that I intend to ask that the bill be laid aside after it is taken up.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. HALE. I have the floor, I think.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair recognized the Senator from Oregon [Mr. FULTON] in his own right.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. FULTON. If the Senator will just allow me to have the bill laid before the Senate, I will then ask that it be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. GALLINGER. If it is taken up, it will displace the unfinished business.

Mr. HALE. Yes; it will displace the unfinished business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 15372) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Bowman and Tucker acts.

Mr. KEAN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Jersey that the Senate adjourn. [Putting the question.] By the sound the noes have it.

Mr. KEAN. Division, Mr. President.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. A division is asked.

Mr. BACON. I understood the Senator from Oregon to say that he rose to a point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair did not hear him. The Senator will state his point of order.

Mr. FULTON. It is rather a parliamentary inquiry, because I am not certain that I have a right to make a point of order; but when a motion had been put to take up a bill, and the motion has been stated by the Chair, was it in order, before it was voted upon, to move to adjourn?

Mr. GALLINGER and Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. A motion to adjourn is one of the privileged motions.

Mr. FULTON. That is the question I wished to ask.

Mr. CULLOM. I think the Senator from Oregon had better withdraw his motion.

Mr. FULTON. I shall not withdraw the motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. A division is demanded. Those in favor of the motion will rise and stand until counted.

Mr. WARREN. I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon a question.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, what is the motion we are voting on now?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. A division is demanded on the motion to adjourn.

The question being put, there were, on division—ayes 10, noes 16.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. A quorum of the Senate has not voted. The Secretary will call the roll.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, May 12, 1908.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D., as follows:

Infinite Spirit, God, our Heavenly Father, everywhere present, moving upon the hearts of men, upholding, sustaining, guiding in right thinking and in pure living, so move upon our hearts that we may grow day by day into the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ.

We bless Thee, our Father, for that sympathetic chord which when touched by calamity visited upon any people makes the whole world kin. Our hearts go out in sympathy and love to our people everywhere who have been thus visited, and especially do we pray for the people of the young State of Oklahoma, who have thus been bereft of homes and friends. God grant that we, who have escaped, may go to their succor and comfort. Hear us, O Lord, and answer our prayer, in the name of Christ, the Lord. Amen!

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 20471) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June thirtieth, nineteen hundred and nine, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows: That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 8, 12, 14, 15, 28, 36, 61, 71, 72, 73, 74, 100, 103, and 105.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 4, 6, 7, 11, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 31, 32, 33, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 68, 69, 70, 75, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 93, 94, 95, 96, 98, 99, 101, and 107, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "thirty million nine hundred and seventy-four thousand two hundred and twenty-five dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Hereafter all commissioned officers of the active list of the Navy shall receive the same pay and allowances according to rank and length of service, and the annual pay of each grade shall be as follows: For Admiral, thirteen thousand five hundred dollars; rear-admiral, first nine, eight thousand dollars; rear-admiral, second nine, or commodore, six thousand dollars; captain, four thousand dollars; commander, three thousand five hundred dollars; lieutenant-commander, three thousand dollars; lieutenant, two thousand four hundred dollars; lieutenant, junior grade, two thousand dollars; ensign, one thousand seven hundred dollars. There shall be allowed and paid to each commissioned officer below the rank of rear-admiral 10 per centum of his current yearly pay for each term of five years' service in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps. The total amount of such increase for length of service shall in no case exceed 40 per centum on the yearly pay of the grade as provided by law: Provided, That the annual pay of captain shall not exceed five thousand dollars per annum; of commander, four thousand five hundred dollars per annum; and of lieutenant-commander, four thousand dollars per annum. All officers on sea duty and all officers on shore duty beyond the continental limits of the United States shall while so serving receive 10 per centum additional of their salaries and increase as above provided, and such increase shall commence from the date of reporting for duty on board ship or the date of sailing from the United States for shore duty beyond the seas or to join a ship in foreign waters. The pay of midshipmen shall hereafter be six hundred dollars per annum while at the Naval Academy, and fourteen hundred dollars per annum after graduation from the Naval Academy. The pay of all warrant officers and mates is hereby increased 25 per centum, and all paymasters' clerks shall, while on duty, receive the same pay and allowances as warrant officers of like length of service in the Navy. The pay of all active and retired enlisted men of the Navy is hereby increased 10 per centum: Provided further, That the pay and allowances of chiefs of bureaus in the Navy Department shall be the highest pay of the grade to which they belong, and not below that of rear-admiral of the lower nine, and that the pay and allowances of chaplains in the Navy shall in no case exceed that provided for lieutenant-commanders. Aids to rear-admirals embraced in the nine lower numbers of that grade shall each receive one hundred and fifty dollars additional per annum, and aids to all other rear-admirals two hundred dollars additional per annum each. When an officer of the Navy has been thirty years in the service, he may, upon his own application, in the discretion of the President, be retired from active service and placed upon the retired list with three-fourths of the highest pay of his grade: And provided further, That any officer of the Navy who is now serving or shall hereafter serve as chief of a bureau in the Navy Department, and shall subsequently be retired, shall be retired with the rank, pay, and allowances authorized by law for the retirement of such bureau chief. The pay of all commissioned, warrant, and appointed officers and enlisted men of the Navy now on the retired list shall be based on the pay, as herein provided for, of commissioned, warrant, and appointed officers and enlisted men of corresponding rank and service on the active list; and all pay herein provided shall remain in force until changed by act of Congress. Nothing herein shall be construed so as to reduce the pay or allowances now authorized by law for any commissioned, warrant, or appointed officer or any enlisted man of the active or retired lists of the Navy, and all laws inconsistent with this provision are hereby repealed."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"The estimates for the support of the Navy shall hereafter show, under the head of 'Pay of the Navy,' the sums allowed for pay of officers belonging to the line, to the several departments of the staff, and to the retired list; the estimates to show under each head the amount allowed for pay proper, for increases due to longevity and foreign service, and for pay at sea rates to officers employed on shore, together with the total number of warrant and petty officers and seamen of the several grades and designations, including as to each class the amount allowed for pay proper and for longevity or service increases. The estimates shall include a list giving the rates of pay for all petty officers and other enlisted men of the Navy."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lines 2, 3, and 4 of the proposed amendment strike out all after the words "United States" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "is hereby abolished, except for the purposes of safe custody or when part of the sentence imposed by a general court-martial;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 29: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 29, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "fifteen;" and the Senate agree to the same.

C.," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Naval Station, Charleston, S. And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 76: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 76, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "thirty-four thousand five hundred and eleven dollars and twenty-eight cents;" and the Senate agree to the same.

L. P. PADGETT,

Managers on the part of the House.

EUGENE HALE,

GEO. C. PERKINS,

THOMAS S. MARTIN,

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the statement.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to reserve the point of order against the conference report before the statement is read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the statement.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to reserve a point of order before the statement is read.

The SPEAKER. Well, if the point of order is well taken and the gentleman is not too late about it, the Chair does not intimate any question it would or would not be, the reading of the statement would not affect it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The point of order must be reserved under decisions before the statement is read, and I wish to reserve a point of order before the statement be read; that is all. Then we can discuss it.

The SPEAKER. Well, let it be as it may, the gentleman has the benefit of reserving the point of order whether it is too late or not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Reserve all points of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, on page 4 of the conference report on the naval appropriation bill at the bottom of that page, occurs the following language:

In line 7 of the amendment, after the word "commandant," insert "one colonel."

Now, I desire to call attention to what follows:

And at the end of said amendment add as a new paragraph: "To meet the increase in pay of the Marine Corps provided in the act making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and in section 1612 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, for officers on the active list, officers on the retired list, enlisted men on the active list, and enlisted men on the retired list, $892,750.55 is hereby appropriated: Provided, That so much of the foregoing appropriation as is needed to pay the increase for the remainder of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, shall be immediately available."

Now, the point of order that I make, Mr. Speaker, is that that language of that paragraph is not a settlement of any difference by the conference committee between the two Houses, but is legislation ingrafted upon the bill by the conference committee without anything in the bill as it left the House or in the bill as it left the Senate to justify its insertion as a compromise or settlement of any difference between the two Houses?

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. Let the Chair understand the gentleman. The Chair understands the gentleman makes the point of order on—and I will read from the report:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 67, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows.

Then it goes on and states what is agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, my point of order is that there is nothing in the bill that makes the amendment which is inserted there a settlement of any differences which had arisen between the two Houses, but that it is new legislation. Now, if the Chair will pardon me one moment more—

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be glad to have amendment numbered 67 read. The Chair has not been able to get it yet. The Clerk will read the amendment of the Senate numbered 67.

The Clerk read as follows:

No. 67. Page 69, after line 22, insert:

"That from and after the passage of this act, and in order to further increase the efficiency of the United States Marine Corps, the following additional officers, noncommissioned officers, drummers, trumpeters, and privates to those now provided by law for said corps are hereby authorized and directed, namely: One major-general commandant, in lieu of the present brigadier-general commandant; one lieutenant-colonel; two majors; eighteen captains; seven first lieutenants; fourteen second lieutenants; one assistant adjutant and inspector, with the rank of lieutenant-colonel; one assistant quartermaster, with the rank of lieutenant-colonel; one assistant quartermaster, with the rank of major; and three assistant quartermasters, with the rank of captain; one assistant paymaster, with the rank of major; one assistant paymaster, with the rank of captain; two sergeant-majors; fifteen quartermaster-sergeants, five of whom are to serve in the pay department; twenty first sergeants; fifty sergeants; one hundred and twenty-five corporals; ten drummers; ten trumpeters; and five hundred and eighteen privates: Provided, That hereafter the number of enlisted men in the United States Marine Corps shall be such as the Congress may from time to time authorize.

"That the vacancies now existing in the line and staff departments of the United States Marine Corps and those created by this act shall be filled in the manner provided by law."

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands it, the amendment just read is the Senate amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire merely to say something in reference to the point of order, if the Chair desires to hear me.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is trying to hastily examine the bill as it passed the House, together with the Senate amendment, and also the provision reported in the conference by the conference committee. Now, the Chair will be glad, without passing upon the merits of the point of order, which the Chair could do after something further of an examination, to hear from the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] or the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] touching the motion that is pending, namely, to suspend the rules and agree to the conference report.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I think the distinction is clearly this: In the rules of the House and of the Senate there are certain rules that provide what shall be a conference report, and we can not change the nature of a conference report by suspending the rules. Now, the suspension of the rules goes strictly to the procedure in considering a bill. It goes to the procedure as to how you shall consider the proposition. It does not go as to what shall be in a conference report. Now, there is no question that has ever come before this House that the Speakers have regarded with more care and been more careful in reserving the rights of the House in than to see that the conferees are limited strictly to the matters in conference, because that is the only way we can intrust the great bills that come before this House to a conference committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. They have no other jurisdiction.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. They have no other jurisdiction in the matter. If this was called up, Mr. Speaker, as an original bill, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSS] sought to suspend the rules and pass this bill, not as a conference report, but to pass it as an original bill, he could do so, but it would have to go back to the Senate to be acted upon. But when he comes in here with a conference report and submits it as a conference report, before he can make any motion, before anything else can be done, it must have its status before the House as a conference report. Now, under the uniform rulings of this House, it is not a conference report if they submit in what purports to be a conference report new matter that has not been in dispute by either House. And the point of order that is made by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] does not go to the question of how this question shall be considered by the House, but as to whether the paper lying before the Chair is a conference report or not. And it is not a conference report if the conferees have exceeded their authority and brought in new matter that has not been considered by either House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] briefly.

Mr. FOSS. When the House bill went to the Senate and was reported by the Senate committee to the Senate, it reported it with the amendment 67, relating to the Marine Corps, and that provides for an increase in the number of officers in the Marine Corps. Now, during that time there was pending in the Army bill a provision increasing the pay of officers of the Army and the Marine Corps.

It was agreed to here in the House to increase the pay of the officers of both the Army and the Marine Corps, under the provision of the Revised Statutes which is mentioned here on page 4 of the conference report:

To meet the increase in pay of the Marine Corps provided in the act making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909—

And in section 1612 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

This section states that the pay of the officers of the Marine Corps shall be the same as that of the corresponding grade in the Army.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman from Illinois permit a question?

Mr. FOSS. Yes. And the President has signed the Army bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. Conceding that the Army bill does increase the salaries or pay of the Marine Corps, which it does, and that the President has signed the bill, and the statutes referred to authorize an appropriation, where do the conferees get authority to make an appropriation for which there has never been an estimate and which neither House has considered?

Mr. FOSS. These conferees were on the naval appropriation bill, and not the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. Where do the conferees on the naval bill, or any other conferees, obtain authority to incorporate legislation which has never been considered by either House, or authority to insert an appropriation which has not been estimated for or considered by either House? Does not the fact that the conferees do this entirely destroy the conference report?

Mr. FOSS. I want to say to the gentleman that the pay of the Marine Corps, the officers and the men, has always been carried in the naval appropriation bill and nowhere else, and it is the proper place for it to go.

Mr. TAWNEY. That may be, after the matter has been considered by the two Houses. If there is any difference between the two Houses it is within the jurisdiction and power of the conferees to adjust that difference; but the conferees have no power or authority to insert matter in a conference report that has not been considered by either House and which is entirely foreign to the amendment which it proposes to amend.

Mr. FOSS. Well, the gentleman is making a very small point on a very large subject. The Revised Statutes provide that the officers of the Marine Corps shall be paid the same as the officers of the Army. Does the gentleman mean to stand here for a moment and say, after you have provided for an increase in the pay of the officers and men, you shall not carry out that provision in regard to the Marine Corps?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not say that, but I want to state to the gentleman from Illinois that when we provided for an increase in the compensation of the Army the conferees did not go to work to make an appropriation for the purpose of meeting that increase in pay. On the other hand, the War Department has or will submit estimates that are necessary to carry out the increase for the Army, and that is exactly what the Marine Corps would have done if the conferees had not assumed authority to make an appropriation that they had no right to make.

Mr. FOSS. You say the War Department has come to your committee, but has the Marine Corps?

Mr. TAWNEY. There is no authority for an increase as yet, and will not be until this bill is passed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make the further point that a motion to suspend all rules does away with all requirements under the rules, and that the point of order is not in order.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I want to say a word in regard to that. The motion to suspend the rules is for the purpose of considering and passing the conference report. It does not relate to any rule that pertains to the subject-matter in the conference report which might be subject to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from New York. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman from New York touching the effect of the motion to suspend the rules upon this point of order, if it is well taken. The Chair does not intimate any opinion as to whether, under different conditions, it would or would not be well taken.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I think this is one of the most important questions that has been presented for decision in this session of Congress. It affects not only the right of Members to have the rules of the House enforced, but it involves the protection of the privileges of the Members of both Houses. Gentlemen say that this is a motion to suspend all rules. Mr. Speaker, there is one rule of the House of Representatives which provides that the Speaker shall not entertain a motion to permit any persons except certain designated persons to be admitted to the floor of the House. Would any Member contend that if a motion were made to suspend that rule, the Speaker in the discharge of his duty should recognize anybody for the purpose of making such a motion?

But this is outside of the control of the ordinary business of the House. The two Houses of Congress, not by any rules adopted by either House, but by a long series of precedents which have grown up from time immemorial, in the regulation of the conduct of the business of the two Houses, have provided that the men appointed by the two Houses to adjust differences between the two Houses shall not have the power to go outside of the matters in difference so as to incorporate matters not in difference between the two Houses. It has been ruled that it is not in order to ask for a conference in either House when the papers are not before that House. Would the Speaker, under a motion to suspend the rules of the House, hold that, the papers being absent in the possession of the other body, it was then in order to suspend the rules and to ask for a conference?

The precise question before the House has never arisen between the two Houses in the transaction of their business. It has been held that the sustaining of a point of order against a conference report because of the inclusion of matter not authorized in it is equivalent to a vote rejecting the report on the part of the House. And this point of order, if sustained by the Chair, is equivalent to the House itself voting to reject the report. This question becomes of importance principally because of the peculiar conditions existing at this time in this House. Ordinarily the motion to suspend the rules would require the vote of two-thirds of the Members of the House. If this precedent be established, then, by the adoption of a rule making a majority sufficient to suspend the rules, the conferees on any bill may exercise their own sweet will as to the incorporation of matters into these bills in conference, and the House would have no protection against the men selected to protect the interests of the House. This goes beyond the ordinary procedure. It is a question affecting the privileges of the two Houses. The rule binds not only one House; it is a rule that is binding upon both Houses; and I submit that this House, under a suspension of its rules, can not abrogate or do away with the rules which from time immemorial have controlled the conduct of the two Houses in their relations with each other. I have looked hastily and I find that this question has never arisen, but I submit that it is of the gravest importance that these conferees should not be permitted in this way to take advantage of their accidental position; and since the sustaining of the point of order is equivalent to a negative vote, it seems to me that this point of order should be sustained and the conferees restrained and compelled to follow the uniform practice of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is prepared to rule.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, just one word before the Chair rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want to submit this point to the Chair: The request before the House is "to suspend the rules" and pass "a conference report." It is not to suspend the rules and do anything else; it is to suspend the rules and pass a conference report. Now, the point of order made is that a part of the subject-matter considered can not be a part of a conference report at all, and that therefore what has been read is not a conference report, but would constitute a new bill and new legislation. It goes back to the right of the House to legislate, and the logically consequential denial of the right of a conference report to legislate.

Mr. TAWNEY, Mr. FOSS, and Mr. MANN rose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is prepared to rule.

Mr. TAWNEY. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is there or is there not a rule of the House prohibiting the conferees from considering matters not in difference between the two Houses?

The SPEAKER. There is no specific rule. There is a line of precedents of thirty-odd years' standing, that matters not in conference should not be considered.

Mr. TAWNEY. Then the motion to suspend the rules does not necessarily include a suspension of the practice?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will say to the gentleman that the motion to suspend the rules, if agreed to by a proper vote of the House, suspends all the rules which otherwise would prevent the consideration of the pending matter. The Chair will crave the attention of the House for a moment. There is no rule of the House or the Senate, as the Chair is informed, touching this matter. The practice has grown up in the House—and the Chair believes it is a wise practice—that the Chair on a point of order being made that the conferees have acted without jurisdiction, or upon a matter of legislation not before them, shall rule on the point of order, which, if sustained, vacates the conference report as much as a vote of the House would vacate it.

Now, the Chair, acting in harmony with this rule, following the precedents of former Speakers, has rigidly, whenever the point of order has been made, sustained it, where the facts warranted the point of order. The practice in the Senate is different from what it is in the House. A point of order is only sustained by a vote of the Senate on the report itself. The presiding officer does not decide the point of order; it is for the Senate by vote to determine whether or not they will reject a report if the report covers matters not committed to the conferees.

Formerly, the Chair is informed, and that is the Chair's recollection, because this question has frequently been before the House for twenty years, to the Chair's knowledge—formerly the practice of the House was unsettled, but it has been very well settled for almost a generation.

Now, the Chair does not intimate any opinion as to whether this point of order would be sustained or not. He has hastily examined the provision in the House bill, he has hastily examined the Senate amendment, and hastily examined the report that the conferees have agreed upon. If the Chair had to rule upon this point of order, he would require a more careful examination than the Chair has been able to give it to see whether it is well founded or not. But this proceeding is allunde the ordinary proceeding. The motion is under the rules of the House, as they now exist, whereby every day is made a suspension day for the remainder of the session and whereby a majority vote suspends the rules. This motion is to suspend all rules, which otherwise might forbid consideration of the report; and that includes all practice, all parliamentary precedents, if you choose; for a precedent or practice manifestly is not of higher dignity than a formal rule of the House. Therefore, in the opinion of the Chair, the point of order under this condition is not well taken. The House, of course, has its remedy, if it desires to exercise it, by rejecting the conference report, if such is the judgment of the House, or by agreeing to the report. The Chair does not desire now to express any opinion as to whether or not the point of order would be sustained if it was otherwise presented than under a motion to suspend the rules; and for the reason assigned the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules a second is ordered.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The statement has not yet been read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the statement.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Pending that I want to submit a request for unanimous consent. This bill contains 107 Senate amendments. Under the rule there would be twenty minutes debate on each side. Some of these amendments are very important. I ask unanimous consent that there may be one hour debate on each side in the consideration of the motion.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSS. I object.

Mr. PAYNE. I wish the gentleman would not object to that.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. We had that much on the Army bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. I would suggest to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] that he provide for a division of the time to be under the control of the gentleman from Illinois and some minority member of the committee, some man who is against the report.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will modify the request, Mr. Speaker, and ask unanimous consent that the time be extended so that there shall be one hour's debate on a side, and in order that I may divest myself of all interest in the matter, that that time be equally controlled, shared, between the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, under that arrangement, which the gentleman has stated clearly, I beg to say that I withdraw my objection.

Mr. AMES. Mr. Speaker, I object. We might have had an hour that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] took in approving the Journal this morning. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects. Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the remark of the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman objects. That is the material part of it. The Clerk will read the statement.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I raise the point of order that it is not necessary to read the statement. This is a motion to suspend the rules and adopt the conference report. Does the Chair think that it is incumbent upon the part of the House to have read to it the statement under such a motion as that? The statement is simply a supplement to the conference report, made necessary under the rules. The rule is suspended, and without the rule there will be no statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman may be right, and still the Chair is in sufficient doubt, so that the Chair suggests the statement better be read.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw the point of order on the suggestion of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the statement.

The Clerk read the statement, as follows:

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 20471) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and submitted in the accompanying conference report on the amendments of the Senate, namely:

Amendment No. 1 provides for an increase in the appropriation for "Pay of the Navy" of $3,700,024 to provide for the increase of pay of all active and retired commissioned officers, midshipmen, warrant and appointed officers, mates, and all active and retired enlisted men of the Navy, as is provided by amendment No. 2, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 2 provides for the pay of all officers and enlisted men of the Navy. This amendment places the pay of the Navy on the same basis as the Army pay, or as near as it is possible to do so, as provided in the bill H. R. 17288, as amended by the Senate and agreed to in conference by both Houses, making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909. This amendment provides for an increase of $500 in all grades from rear-admiral to ensign, with the exception of the grade of lieutenant, which is increased $600, and that of ensign, $300 per annum. It provides for the 10 per cent longevity up to 40 per cent, provided that the pay of a captain shall not exceed $5,000 per annum; of commander, $4,500 per annum, and of lieutenant-commander, $4,000 per annum. It likewise provides for a 10 per cent increase for all officers on sea duty and all officers on shore duty beyond the continental limits of the United States. This provides for the officers of the Navy the same additional pay as enjoyed by officers of the Army when performing similar duty.

It also provides for the pay of midshipmen at the Naval Academy in the same manner as is provided for cadets at the Military Academy and increases the pay of midshipmen after graduation from the Naval Academy from $950 to $1,400 per annum. It also provides for an increase of 10 per cent for all enlisted men of the Navy on the active and on the retired lists.

The amendment also provides that the chiefs of bureaus in the Navy Department shall have the highest pay of the grade to which they belong, placing them on the same basis as officers holding like positions in the Army, and likewise placing the pay of chaplains on the same basis as provided in the Army. Aids to rear-admirals are granted a similar increase to that provided in the Army.

An officer of the Navy after having had thirty years' service may, upon his own application, in the discretion of the President, retire from active service and be placed on the retired list, thereby placing the Navy on the same basis as other branches of the military service in this respect; and the House recedes from its disagreement and agrees to the Senate amendment as above amended.

Amendment No. 3 grants to the widow of any officer or enlisted man on the active list of the Navy or Marine Corps an amount equal to six months' pay upon the death of such officer or enlisted man from wounds or disease contracted in the line of duty, thereby placing the Navy and Marine Corps on the same basis as the Army; and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 4 provides that the Secretary of the Navy shall send to Congress at the beginning of the next regular session a complete schedule showing the amount in money of all pay under the provisions of this act; and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 5: The House recedes with amendment providing that the estimates submitted to Congress hereafter shall show under the head of "Pay of the Navy" the sum allowed for pay of officers on the active and retired lists and the allowances granted by law.

Amendment No. 6 provides for the sum of $4,564.05 for the equipment and maintenance of the dispensary at the Yerba Buena Island, California. This was urgently requested by the Navy Department in a supplemental estimate, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 7 provides for the increase in the appropriation due to amendment No. 6, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 8 provides for an appropriation of $50,000 for the maintenance of a naval training station at Port Royal, S. C., and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 9 provides for badges and ribbons to be distributed to officers and men of the Navy and Marine Corps who have participated in engagements worthy of commemoration and appropriates $3,500, and the House recedes with the amendment that the words "to be immediately available" be stricken out.

Amendment No. 10 provides for the abolition of the use of irons as a form of punishment in the Navy, and the House recedes with an amendment whereby it is provided that irons can not be used as a punishment for minor offenses, but provides for their use for the purpose of safe custody or when part of the sentence imposed by a general court-martial.

Amendment No. 11 provides for an increase in the appropriation of $65,000 for naval prison at Portsmouth, N. H., and $25,000 for the extension of the quay walls in the navy-yard. The appropriation for the naval prison extension was earnestly recommended by the Navy Department, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 12 provides for a foundry, to cost $60,000, at the navy-yard, Key West, Fla., and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 13 provides for a reappropriation of $114,792 for the improvement of the water front at the navy-yard, New York, and raises the limit of cost of dry dock No. 4 at the navy-yard, New York, to $1,500,000 instead of $1,000,000, and the House recedes, with the amendment that the word "seventeenth," in lines 5 and 6, be changed to "seventh."

Amendments Nos. 21 and 22 provide for improvements to river front at the naval station, New Orleans, La., and the House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 23 and 24 provide for the completion of central power plant extensions at navy-yard, Puget Sound, Washington, instead of continuing same as recommended by the House, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 25 provides for the establishment of a naval station at Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, by the expenditure of $1,000,000, and in view of the fact that the House unanimously passed a bill (H. R. 20251) for the same purpose, the House recedes.

Amendment No. 26 provides for an appropriation of $2,400 for the transfer of the 100-ton shears from the Boston Navy-Yard to the Portsmouth Navy-Yard, which was recommended by the Navy Department in a supplemental estimate, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 27 provides for the increase in the appropriation for public works at navy-yards and stations in accordance with the amendments heretofore stated as agreed to by the House, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 29 provides for $20,000 for officers' quarters at marine barracks, navy-yard, Philadelphia, and the House recedes from its disagreement to the Senate amendment and agrees to the same with an amendment striking out "thirty" and inserting "fifteen," leaving the amount $15,000.

Amendments Nos. 30 and 31 provide for an appropriation of $75,000 for the completion of officers' quarters and marine barracks at naval station, Charleston, S. C., and the House recedes from its disagreement and agrees with the Senate amendment by striking out the proposed amendment and inserting an amendment restricting the expenditure for officers' quarters to $25,000 and $50,000 for marine barracks; in all, $75,000.

Amendment No. 36 provides for the purchase of and feed of horses and cows "other than for hospitals," and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 37 provides for a corps of trained women nurses in the United States Navy, placing such corps on the same basis as now exists for the corps of trained women nurses in the Army, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 38 provides that the enlisted men of the hospital corps shall receive the same pay as that provided for in the corresponding ratings of the seaman branch and other staff corps of the Navy. These men being paid less than the corresponding ratings in other branches of the service under existing law, the House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47 provide for the expenditure out of lump-sum appropriations under the various bureaus of the Navy Department various sums of money for the repairs and changes in vessels specifically set forth wherein such repairs or changes exceed $200,000; and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 60 provides that Navy bands or members thereof shall not receive remuneration for music furnished outside of military posts when such service places them in competition with local civilian musicians, and the House recedes from its disagreement to the Senate amendment and agrees to the same with an amendment by inserting after the word "thereof," in the first line of the amendment, the words "other than the United States Naval Academy Band at Annapolis, Md."

Amendment No. 61 provides for a 20 per cent increase in the pay of draftsmen at the Naval Academy, and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 67 provides for an increase of 750 enlisted men and 50 officers in the United States Marine Corps and gives to the commandant of the corps the rank of major-general, instead of brigadier-general. The increase of enlisted men herein authorized brings the total enlisted force of the Marine Corps to 9,521 men, a greater strength of command than is awarded to the command of a major-general in the Army, and likewise places the commandant of the Marine Corps on an equal footing as regards rank with the chiefs of bureaus of the Navy Department. The number of large ships to be placed in commission in the near future, together with the necessity for the relief of the enlisted men and officers doing duty in the Tropics and for the relief of the present arduous duties performed by the enlisted men at the various shore stations at home, require the increase recommended, and the House recedes with the amendment providing for an additional colonel of the line and for the increase in pay provided in the act making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, as authorized by section 1612, Revised Statutes of the United States.

Amendment No. 76 provides for the increase due to the appointment of these two clerks mentioned in amendment No. 75, and the House recedes with the amendment striking out the words "thirty-five thousand three hundred and eleven" and inserting "thirty-four thousand five hundred and eleven" in lieu thereof.

Amendment No. 86 provides for printing and binding for the Marine Corps, which has heretofore been provided for under the Navy Department proper. The Secretary of the Navy has directed that the Marine Corps provide for the expense of its own printing and binding, and the House recedes.

The House recedes with the amendment by striking out the word "two" and in lieu thereof inserting the word "three" in order that greater competition among the bidders can be obtained.

Amendment No. 92 provides for the conditions under which the contracts for the building of the ships shall be awarded, and the material to be used in construction, and the House recedes, but said amendment is placed after the paragraph in the bill providing for the construction of two fleet colliers in order that said amendment may apply to their construction as well as the other vessels authorized in this act.

Amendment No. 96 provides that one of the fleet colliers be built on the Pacific coast, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 97 provides for the purchase of three new steam colliers of American registry, and the House recedes with amendments. After the word "Navy," in the first line of the amendment, insert the words "in his discretion." In lines 2 and 3 of the amendment strike out the words "ready for service." In line 5 of the amendment strike out the words "six hundred thousand" and insert the words "five hundred and twenty-five thousand." In line 6 of the amendment strike out the words "eight hundred" and insert in lieu thereof the words "five hundred and seventy-five." The effect of these amendments is to leave it in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy to purchase any three new steam colliers of American registry of the designated carrying capacity at a cost not to exceed $525,000 each.

Amendments Nos. 98 and 99 provide for an appropriation of $2,000,000 additional for submarine boats heretofore authorized, which sum was submitted as a supplemental estimate, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 101 is a provision stricken out and reinserted in amendment No. 102, which follows immediately.

Amendment No. 102 makes an appropriation of $7,000,000 toward the construction and machinery and armor and armament of the vessels authorized by this act, and the House recedes with amendment. In line 6 strike out the word "bidder" and in lieu thereof insert the word "bidders."

Amendment No. 103 provides for the expenditure of $500,000 for new trunked-in ammunition hoists for battle ships and armored cruisers, and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 104 provides for the total appropriation under "Increase of the Navy," and the House recedes with the amendment striking out the words "thirty-one million four hundred and seventy-seven thousand" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "thirty million three hundred and seven thousand," leaving the amount $30,307,962.

Amendment No. 105 strikes out the words "at Washington," and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 106 restricts the expenditure of any money under this act to authority given in this act, and the House recedes with the amendment striking out the word "herein," on page 79, line 3, of the bill, and after the word "given" insert the words "by law." This amendment prohibits the expenditure of any money appropriated in this act for expenses at the Navy Department, Washington, D. C., unless specific authority is given by law.

Amendment No. 107 repeals an act whereby monitors of the Navy are named after States and authorizes the President to name the monitors as he may direct, and the House recedes.

The total amount of increase in the naval appropriation bill for this year by Senate amendments agreed to in conference is $17,257,346.60, of which amount $1,575,000 is under "Increase of the Navy" for colliers; $2,000,000 for submarine boats heretofore authorized; $7,000,000 for construction of ships authorized in this bill; $1,000,000 for the establishment of a naval station at Pearl Harbor, Hawaii; $3,700,024 for increase of the pay in the Navy; $1,428,558.55 for increase in personnel and increase in the pay and quartermaster's departments of the Marine Corps; $45,000, public works, Marine Corps; $487,000, public works, Navy; $21,764.05 for miscellaneous items.

GEORGE EDMUND FOSS,

H. C. LOUDENSLAGER,

L. P. PADGETT,

Conferees on the part of the House.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state this report is a full agreement on the naval appropriation bill. This report has already been adopted by the Senate. This bill, if adopted, will carry $122,662,715. This is an increase over the amount carried by the bill as it passed the House of $17,257,346, of which $1,575,000 is appropriated for three colliers which were placed in the bill by the Senate, $9,000,000 for the three ships authorized in this bill and for submarines heretofore authorized by Congress, $1,000,000 for the establishment of the naval station at Pearl Harbor, $3,700,024 for increase in the pay of the Navy, $1,428,558 for increase in personnel and increase in the pay and quartermaster's department of the Marine Corps, $45,000 for public works in the Marine Corps, $487,000 for public works in the Navy, $21,764 for miscellaneous items.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. What is the total amount carried by the bill as agreed upon in conference?

Mr. FOSS. One hundred and twenty-two million six hundred and sixty-two thousand seven hundred and fifteen dollars. Mr.

Speaker, that is a general statement which I desire to make in reference to the bill. We provide here for the increase in the pay of the officers of the Navy and also an increase in the pay of the enlisted men, 10 per cent. The provision for the increased pay of the officers fixes it the same as the Army received under the bill which was passed here the other day. An increase of $500 is made in the different grades from that of major-general, or rear-admiral, down to that of ensign, except second lieutenant in the Army, the corresponding grade, except lieutenants and ensign, which are $600 and $300, respectively. We have provided for 10 per cent increase in the pay of officers and men on board ships and on shore outside of the continental limits, and I may say that in the Army bill a provision was inserted increasing the pay of officers of the Army and enlisted men on transports.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Of this $3,700,000 for increase in the pay of the Navy, will the gentleman state how much is for increase in the pay of officers of the Navy?

Mr. FOSS. The increase in the pay of the officers and midshipmen on the active list is $1,654,121; officers on the retired list, $250,985; retired officers on active duty, $34,000, making in all for officers $1,939,106. The increase in pay of the enlisted men on the active list and retired list amounts to $1,760,918, making in all $3,700,024.

Mr. DRISCOLL. What rate per month of increase do the enlisted men get?

Mr. FOSS. They get only 10 per cent increase. The gentleman will recall that in the Army bill the increase in the enlisted men was, I think, in the neighborhood of 35 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question for information. What is the pay of a paymaster's clerk in the Navy now?

Mr. FOSS. It varies from $1,000 to $1,800, according to the ship or station to which he is attached.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. What is the pay of a warrant officer now?

Mr. FOSS. The pay of a warrant officer ranges from $1,200 to $1,800.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Then this bill increases each of those 25 per cent?

Mr. FOSS. It increases those 25 per cent, and that provision is put in because there is no corresponding grade in the Army.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. We have paymasters' clerks in the Army.

Mr. PERKINS. Will the gentleman yield for one question? Perhaps he has already explained it.

Mr. FOSS. I yield for a question.

Mr. PERKINS. Am I correctly informed that this bill contains a provision that when a naval officer goes to sea and is at sea then he gets an increase of 10 per cent on his pay?

Mr. FOSS. He does.

Mr. PERKINS. Why, is not he paid for going to sea, at any rate?

Mr. FOSS. Let me state to the gentleman that when a naval officer goes to sea he loses all his allowances and all his commutation for quarters.

Mr. PERKINS. He gets free quarters on board ship.

Mr. FOSS. When an Army officer goes to sea on a transport he gets the 10 per cent extra pay, as provided by amendment 33 of the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. PERKINS. The Army officer does not go to sea.

Mr. FOSS. In the transport service he goes to sea. Let me read you this provision of the Army bill, amendment 33, which was adopted by the House:

For additional 20 per cent increase to enlisted men on foreign service, $767,000: Provided, That officers and enlisted men who have served on army transports in the Philippine Archipelago at any time since May 26, 1900—

Back eight years, if you please—

under the control and orders of the commanding general, Philippines Division, or who may hereafter so serve, shall be entitled to receive the same rate of pay as is provided by law for officers and enlisted men serving at shore stations beyond the limits of the United States.

Under the Army appropriation bill they have put in here that an Army officer shall receive all the allowances and commutations for quarters while they are in transit in the transport service, and not only that, but they have gone back eight years and say they shall be reimbursed for all those eight years. Now, that is in the law, and the House has passed upon it.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield—

Mr. FOSS. Now, I want to state another fact. For instance, when an Army officer goes to the Philippine Islands and leaves his family behind him he gets quarters for his family. That is the custom.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think the gentleman is absolutely wrong on that. If the Government furnishes any quarters at all his family is not considered—

Mr. FOSS. This is the statement. If that family goes to the Philippines they get commutation of quarters or quarters by the Government, either one or the other. Now, if an Army officer goes alone and his family stays here, what is the practice in the Army? Let me tell you—

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I should say it was a violation of law—

Mr. FOSS. Let me tell you what the practice is. The Army officers' families are in quarters about all the time, whether the officer is in the field or not; the officer's family retains their quarters at the post. This is invariably the practice.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. You are speaking about commutation; they get no commutation at all under such circumstances.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CAPRON). Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. FOSS. No; I do not. Now, as soon as a naval officer goes aboard ship all his allowances are stopped, so that, as a matter of fact, when that officer goes to sea it takes away from his pay and allowances at least 20 per cent.

Mr. PERKINS. But his salary is fixed on the theory he is going to sea; that is what he is appointed for.

Mr. FOSS. While his salary is reduced, at the same time he has two establishments to keep up. Now, I was about to suggest this, that if you provide for this 10 per cent for officers when they are aboard ship, you will provide about 10 per cent less than the pay for the Army.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman from Illinois answer one question, please?

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Can you state to the House how much the 10 per cent on account of sea service will add to the pay of officers of the Navy, approximately?

Mr. FOSS. Yes. It would require about $295,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. It would add $800 to every admiral of the senior grade when he is at sea.

Mr. FOSS. We have only one or two of those at sea.

Mr. TAWNEY. And the subordinate officers in proportion.

Mr. FOSS. It will add $200,000 or $250,000 a year to the pay of subordinate officers, depending on the number at sea. That would be simply a rough guess, but in view of what the Army has done, I am of the opinion that it is no more than fair and just, in view of the fact that when the officer goes to sea he loses all his commutation for quarters and all his allowances of every character whatever, whereas with the Army officer he generally has them, whether he is on board a ship or transport or whether he is on shore. In view of that fact, I say to this House that it is no more than fair and just that you should pass and adopt this provision.

Mr. FINLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSS. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has seven minutes remaining.

Mr. FOSS. I think, in view of the fact that my colleague desires to speak, I will reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] is recognized.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I did not take an appeal from the decision of the Chair a moment ago, because I regarded that decision as such a grave departure from all parliamentary usage and such a serious crippling of the power of the House itself that I did not want the House of Representatives to approve of it and thereby strengthen it as a precedent. I knew that in the present partisan temper of the House the Speaker's decision would be sustained, right or wrong.

Mr. Speaker, if that decision is to be a precedent, then for the future all that is needed in order to make conference committees of this House legislative bodies is that the Committee on Rules should bring in a rule to permit a bill or bills, or all bills, to go through under the suspension of the rules. How many other things there are upon the bill that are new legislation neither I nor anybody else knows, except perhaps the conferees.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. We have only twenty minutes debate, and amid the hurry and the ignorance of the House concerning this matter, I want to save as much time as possible in order to give it to others.

This is a precedent that will return to plague us. Mr. Speaker, it is a point of honor for members of conference committees not to legislate. They have been appointed by their brethren to settle differences between the two Houses, and, as a matter of honor to the House, in execution of that sole trust, jurisdiction, and authority, they ought not to legislate. And a motion to suspend the rules ought not to be considered of such high importance as to release men from the relation which they bear to the House, a relation of honor not to betray the confidence of the House as conferees and not to legislate, but to confine themselves to the jurisdiction committed to them. Why, Mr. Speaker, this committee might just as well have placed upon this bill the Freeland currency bill. Now, that sounds like an extreme statement, but it is absolutely within the compass and measure of moderation. As I say, they might just as well have placed upon it the Freeland bill as this provision to which I call attention. The one is no more than the other ultra vires of their authority and functions. Why, Mr. Speaker, at the end of every session, to show how far this ruling may go, the last six days are days of suspension of the rules, and hereafter those last six days might be entitled, and properly, too, if this House in its sober second thought ever sustains the ruling this morning, "days for legislation by conference committees." Jobbery, jobs innumerable and unprecedented, and to a large extent undiscoverable by the average Member of the House, will find this precedent their legislative mother.

I am speaking seriously about it. There is but one way for this House now to prevent this precedent from operating, and that is to vote down this conference report, independently of the merits of the report, with 107 differences between the two Houses settled by it. This House can maintain power to handle committees; it can disestablish this new-born precedent giving a right to conference committees to legislate in its stead only by voting down this conference report. If I were in favor of every single, solitary item upon this conference report, I would still vote against it, to prevent the establishment of this precedent. And that is not all. As if the precedent established in the hurry of twenty minutes' debate on a side was not serious enough, the gentlemen objected to the extension of the time of debate and explanation for one hour, and the reason given, as well as my defective hearing could catch it, was that the request had been made by me, although the request was to give the control of the time to two Republican Members of the House. Now, Mr. Speaker, having said that much, I will ask how much time I have consumed?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Six minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I then have fourteen minutes left. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Naval Affairs—

Mr. WILLIAMS. One word. Before the gentleman from Iowa begins, in the interest of clear legislation by the House, I renew my request that the time shall be extended for debate so that it will amount to one hour upon each side; that one half of that time shall be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] and the other half by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Tawney], the time that I have consumed to be taken out of the hour on the latter side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the debate be extended for two hours, one hour to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois, and the other half by the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. FOSS. Do I understand the gentleman's request to be that we extend debate for two hours?

Mr. WILLIAMS. So that it shall amount to two hours' time, and taking the six minutes I have consumed out of the one hour in opposition to the motion.

Mr. FOSS. I have no objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request? [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Iowa, if he desires it. I beg pardon; the control of the time has passed by my own request from me to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. TAWNEY. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I am glad for the extension of this time, as I think a full discussion of all matters in this agreement will result in good and should be had.

I want to compliment the Committee on Naval Affairs on the part of the House, at least, for the good they have accomplished. They have fixed the pay of the officers of the Army and the Navy on substantially the same basis. That is to say, an increase in each grade of a flat $500, the same in this as fixed for the Army. But, Mr. Speaker, some years ago the pay of a naval officer was 15 per cent more at sea than on shore. The naval officers then made the argument to Congress that their expenses were greater on shore than at sea, and that, therefore, they ought to have the same pay on shore that they received at sea; and Congress repealed the act containing that restriction and gave them the same pay on shore and at sea. Now, we have equalized up the two arms of the service, in the first place, and then we go right ahead and restore the old inequality, giving the naval officers 10 per cent more on ship than when on shore. Now, that simply means that in the future we have got the same old fight, to equalize up and never to equalize down.

A naval officer from the time he is appointed a cadet is educated at Annapolis at the expense of the Government; he is taught from the time he takes the oath as a cadet that his duties are on shipboard, and from the minute he goes on a ship he has everything furnished to him but his food. Servants are furnished, his table linen, all his household fixtures, and everything except the bare cost of food. He is given fuel and light, so that his expenses on shipboard are less than at any other time, with the exception, as the gentleman from Illinois referred to—and I want to be entirely frank in this matter—that his family at home have to be looked out for. That is true. The gentleman states that an Army officer, when he goes to the Philippines, when he is on a transport, from the time he leaves San Francisco until he reaches Manila, and during that time, receives commutation of quarters. I want to say that no Army officer on active duty away from his station gets commutation of quarters. Now, it is true—

Mr. FOSS. Does he not—

Mr. HULL of Iowa. One minute. It is true that at Fort Myer and other posts of the country there are quarters; and if his family want to live in them, there is no charge made, if they are available; but he gets no commutation.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. And at Manila—

Mr. HULL of Iowa. At all posts in the United States; but in nine cases out of ten, where a man is gone for two years, his family accompanies him, if they want to; but if they do not accompany him, and do not stay at the post, they get no commutation of quarters, no matter where they go. That is the point I want to make. We give no commutation at any place to any man if he is furnished quarters. If he is located at Washington and there are no quarters here for him, he gets commutation of quarters. If he is ordered from here, the family can remain here, but they get no commutation of quarters.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. How many officers are so stationed at the present time in the Army?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. How do you mean?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. In the field, in a tent, without commutation for themselves or their families.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Very few, but a great many without commutation.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Does the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs know how many?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The chairman knows that every officer at a post gets no commutation.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. He gets quarters, however.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. He gets quarters, but no commutation; and if he is ordered away from there to the Philippines, his family gets no commutation.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. He gets his extra percentage.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. He gets 10 per cent extra while serving in the Philippines.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. The same as the Navy.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. And that is limited to the Philippine Islands and Alaska, and should be repealed since we adopted this increase of pay. If I had known as much about the rules as I do now, I should have stuck on that conference for a repeal of this extra-duty pay in place of continuing it; but it goes to two places. It does not go to Porto Rico, it does not go to Hawaii; while under this provision, I should imagine from your amendment, if an officer gets on shipboard and goes beyond the 3-mile limit, he gets the extra 10 per cent. That would be for your rear-admirals of the senior grade, $800; for your rear-admirals of the junior grade, $600; for your captains, $450 or $500, and so on down the list.

Now, I submit that when an officer is appointed in the Navy he is appointed to go to sea; and to pay him extra for doing that is not a fair proposition, but one that will lead to further trouble.

Now, on your enlisted force, there has been no law of Congress fixing the pay of the enlisted force of the Navy, because the President has had jurisdiction of it. And when we had what is called the "Dick-Capron bill" before us, which dealt with all arms of the service, those representing the Navy stated that they did not need any legislation increasing the pay of the enlisted force of the Navy, that it was fixed now at the full amount for the commercial marine, for the sailors in other lines of life, and it was no trouble to keep their ranks full. Their pay, as the gentleman from New Jersey can show, and will in a little while, is so much higher than the Army even with its increase of 35 per cent, that it is at least one-half more than the pay of the Army now, and they have no trouble in keeping up their enlistments. If we needed 10 per cent or 20 per cent increase in order to enlist the force in the Navy I would be in favor of it, because I recognize that we want to keep the complete full list of the enlisted force of the Navy. But, if it is simply a donation, with the idea of taking from the President the right to fix the pay of the Navy (and I imagine this does that, because the President can not lower what is fixed by law) it is a mistake on the part of the Committee on Naval Affairs to meddle with it. It is fixed now, so that the President can adjust it. It is fixed so that if prices go down he can lower it. If prices go up he can raise it, all the time adjusting it to what is needed for the service.

Mr. DRISCOLL. When the gentleman refers to prices, does he refer to prices of commodities or prices of labor?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I mean the pay of seamen. I do not recognize that the same rule applies to enlistments in the Navy as that which applies to enlistments in the Army. In the Navy you have got to compete with the merchant marine.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield for an inquiry?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. You spoke just now of the pay being about what it should be for the enlisted men, and therefore, as I infer, argued that it should not be increased. Now, if the pay is sufficient, if it is proper and just, why are there so many desertions from the Navy, and why have there been so many from the Army?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I do not think that the desertions from the Army and Navy are controlled or governed in any way by the pay. I think they are due to the conditions in the service.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman from Iowa will permit me, it appeared before the Committee on Appropriations yesterday that the Navy is recruited almost to its full strength and that they have ceased maintaining recruiting stations.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That may be true; they put up beautiful billboards and show them a great big man-of-war, a beautiful flag, entertaining things to the eye, and then they get them in—a great many go from my own State—and yet we have desertions, and I am trying to get at the reason.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The question of desertions has nothing to do with the pay.

Mr. FOSS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa what was the percentage of increase of pay in the Army bill as it became a law?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think it was a little over 27 per cent for the enlisted force.

Mr. FOSS. Is it not nearer 35?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I am taking the statement of the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. PARKER.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. TAWNEY. I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. FOSS. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] says that the increase is 35 per cent.

Mr. HAY. That is the statement of the Paymaster-General. Mr. HULL of Iowa. Then that is correct. We increased it so much a grade and did not increase it by a percentage. The pay of some men was increased 80 per cent.

Mr. MILLER. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MILLER. If the Army bill increased the pay of the enlisted men 35 per cent, why should the naval bill increase the pay of the seamen only by 10 per cent?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. If the gentleman was doing a service for the Government on substantially the same lines as another and getting $5,000 a year, and the other man doing substantially the same service was getting $2,500 a year, and you increased the pay of the $2,500 man 35 per cent, would that be an argument for pushing up the pay of the other man, and especially when his own employer says he does not need any increase, that he keeps the ranks full of men, that they are paid so as to amply compete with the merchant marine? There was not a man connected with the Navy before us that did not state positively that the enlisted force was well taken care of under the present law. The question of percentage has nothing to do with it. It is a question of fair pay, and if the Navy is getting double the pay of the Army—

Mr. MILLER. The Navy does not get double the pay of the Army. That is an unfortunate misstatement by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will say that in some lines the Navy gets almost double the pay of the Army. For instance, a private soldier in the Army, before we passed this bill, got $13 a month. A great many seamen of the Navy get $30 a month. Other seamen that started in as common seamen got $16 a month—men who had no experience at sea. I am not finding fault with it, but if we are to take the statement of the naval authorities as to what they ought to have, there is no excuse for increasing the pay. I am one of those who believe that it is better for the President to have control of it, as he has had for nearly a century. The Navy has got to have men trained for the sea, and they have got to have the pay that they can get in another line of following the sea, and the President can adjust it as the changed conditions arise. If you pass this, no matter how much higher the merchant marine might go, the President can not adjust it, and they are compelled to come back to Congress for it. I think that is unfortunate for the Navy, and is one of the objections I have to this bill.

Now, I want to say one word as to the transport service in the Philippines. When we captured the Philippines the first year we appropriated for the Army, sending troops there, and we did provide that they should have 10 per cent extra for service there. That was supposed to apply to this service of the transports and for those on land. The Comptroller held that up, and we changed it so that it could apply to this service on transports. My own judgment is that this service on the transports should not have had it. My own judgment is that they should not have increased service pay, no matter where they are sent.

Mr. FOSS. They have got it.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes, they have got it; but it is something that will be perpetuated more by raising the pay of the Navy 10 per cent than it would be if you left it out and let us cut it out of both forces. Then it must always be borne in mind that the difference between the Army and the Navy is that the naval officer goes to sea and carries his house with him.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask that the gentleman be given a minute more so that I may ask a question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to yield the gentleman one minute.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I like to start at the ground and go up. The human thought is like cotton, it does not grow until the tap root strikes the hard ground. I would like somebody to tell me how much it costs to maintain a military private—that is, a private soldier, and what it costs to maintain an ordinary seaman—a private, who goes on a man-of-war.

Mr. AMES. Between ten and twelve hundred dollars.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I would like to get that information.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I can not tell anything about the Navy.

Mr. AMES. Between ten and twelve hundred dollars a year.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. For which?

Mr. AMES. Either—well, for a private in the Army.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I now ask for a private in the Navy.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. For maintenance?

Mr. AMES. Yes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I should imagine not.

Mr. AMES. Including the whole Army equipment.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That is a different proposition.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I want to know about a private in the service.

Mr. AMES. That includes the whole Army establishment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, we want to do what is fair on the subject of pay to the enlisted men, beyond all question. Last year I made a short talk on pay, promotion, and retirement and command in the Army and Navy, and added some details, which may be found in the Record of February 12, 1907. I will not now go into those details. Anyone who desires to look at them can do it. At that time I found that the pay of the enlisted force of the Army was wonderfully below that of the Navy. For instance, the highest pay to a very small class of skilled mechanics was $75 or $85 a month—electricians and occupations of that sort. The pay in the Navy went up for chief boatswain to $167.50 a month. They had a system of warrant officers to which enlisted men were promoted, and on the whole it averaged in this way: If all the pay—that is, $14,500,000 in round numbers, the sum that went to the enlisted and warrant force of the Navy—be divided by the number of men, an average of $378 a year is obtained, whereas in the Army, if you take the whole force of enlisted men, sergeants, and all up to sergeant-major and the skilled electricians and divide the amount appropriated by the number of men, it gives an average of only $212 a year. We found that our sergeants and the upper grades were not well paid, and therefore we increased the first sergeant to $45 a month. Compare that with the chief boatswain at $167 a month. We increased the private to $15 a month. Compare that with an able seaman, who when he gets to be a gunner gets up to something nearly double that.

Mr. FOSS. May I ask the gentleman a question right there?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Oh, I will not be able to answer the gentleman's questions about the Navy.

Mr. FOSS. But I want to ask about the Army.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I can give the average. I say we tried to make an increase. This increase they say adds 35 per cent, a little more than a third. Add that to the $212, and you have not got up to $300 on an average. The Navy is getting $378 on an average by the President's order. What is more, they have an arrangement by which the President can put the pay up or down in any particular grade, and by this bill they will turn it into a hard-and-fast arrangement which is not applicable to the Navy. But they propose to make an average all through the Navy of over $400 a man, while our average is under $300 a man all through. That is what I want to get before the House.

Last year I said a word more about the commissioned officers. The peculiarity of every service consists in the fact that it does not make so much difference as to the pay of the man in each class as it does as to how many there are in each class. Over 40 per cent of the Navy officers in number hold a rank equivalent to major or better. Less than 16 per cent of the Army hold any such rank. As a result, even if majors and captains and all officers receive the same pay according to rank in the two services, the men in the Navy get a great deal more. I have figured it out in the remarks I referred to, and it is not worth while going over it again. The principle has been established that we shall try to make the pay the same in the two services. But we certainly do not mean, and we never have meant, that when we send an Army officer out of the country we pay him 10 per cent extra pay. We pay it to him only when he has to live in what we thought was a tropical or unhealthy place, like the Philippines, or where he was absolutely isolated from civilization, like the interior of Alaska. Ten per cent has never been given to a man because of mere absence from the country. I believe I am right in that, am I not?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman from Illinois to use some of his time.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Dawson].

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Speaker, I do not like to divert the attention of the House from this larger subject of the pay of the Navy to other subjects which are perhaps less important, but there are one or two things in this conference report in which I believe the House feels a lively interest. Amendment No. 10, inserted by the Senate, embraces the subject of the barbaric practice of the use of irons, single and double, in the Navy of the United States as a punishment, and I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES], who was making inquiry a few moments ago with regard to desertions from the Navy, that in my judgment the continuation of this outworn, barbaric practice of taking young men who go into the Navy and putting them on a par with convicts and criminals by the use of the ball and chain and the handcuff simply for an infraction of regulations, has had much to do with many of the desertions from the Navy.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Are there any cases like that of such punishment for a mere infraction of a regulation?

Mr. DAWSON. The Navy regulations provide for the use of irons, single or double, in a large number of cases which are not criminal in their character but simply infractions of regulations, disobedience of orders, and other minor offenses. In this amendment No. 10, following the lead of the House Committee on Naval Affairs, the Senate has put an amendment in this bill providing for the abolition of irons as a means of punishment in the Navy. The amendment follows the bill introduced by Mr. Esch, and the House conferees have accepted the amendment, after modifying it in accordance with the views of our committee.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the gentleman mean to say that they have had actual cases in recent years where men have been put in irons for infraction of a rule?

Mr. DAWSON. Why, I might say to the gentleman from Tennessee that it was brought to my attention that an enlisted man in the Navy undergoing punishment for infraction of regulations was actually in bed in a hospital with irons on him.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman from Iowa permit an interruption?

Mr. DAWSON. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does the gentleman from Iowa think for a moment that if the House refuses to suspend the rules and adopt the conference report and this bill goes back to conference again that the conferees on the part of the House will recede from the amendment of which the gentleman is now speaking?

Mr. DAWSON. I hope not.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman knows very well there is no danger of that. I do not know how far he expects that fact to influence Members of the House.

Mr. DAWSON. But I stated at the outset I thought the Members of this House were entitled to know something about some of the other provisions of this conference report, and I was simply showing how certain men were treated in the Navy.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Did the Navy Department recommend the abolition of this kind of punishment of men?

Mr. DAWSON. Not absolutely, although I will say to the gentleman from New York that the committee has safeguarded the proposition so as to meet any objections from that direction, I think. The amendment which was originally inserted provided for the complete abolition of irons in the Navy. The conference committee have modified that so as to permit of their use for purposes of safe custody.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Have they introduced the water treatment or something like that in place of this treatment of irons?

Mr. DAWSON. No.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I do not want to interfere with my colleague, although I know he will have plenty of time; but as I read this amendment as adopted by the Senate they abolish it absolutely.

Mr. DAWSON. But the conferees agreed to an amendment to the Senate amendment providing for its abolition except for the purpose of safe custody, or when part of a sentence imposed by a general court-martial.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I see they have made an exception. What I was going to ask the gentleman from Iowa is, Does not he believe the Senate provision is better than the House, to absolutely abolish such barbaric treatment?

Mr. DAWSON. Cases of mutiny may arise, or other cases where an enlisted man might become crazed by drink or otherwise and run amuck on a ship, and it seems to me this provision here in the conferees report is adapted to such cases and would take care of exceptional cases of that kind. Now, the other provision in this bill in which I think the House will likewise be interested is embraced in amendment No. 37.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FOSS. I yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. DAWSON. Amendment No. 37 embraces a bill which I had the honor of favorably reporting from the Naval Committee to this House, at this session, providing for a corps of trained women nurses in the Navy, and I am very glad that the House conferees have agreed to the amendment which the Senate inserted, which is in the language of the bill previously reported to this House by the Naval Committee.

Everybody recognizes the special aptitude of the woman nurse for taking care of the sick and of the injured. This amendment establishes the corps on the same basis exactly as the corps of women nurses in the Army, and I believe, and all of the authorities in the Navy Department believe that great benefit will result from the establishment of this corps of trained women nurses in the Navy. Their duties will be confined largely to large naval hospitals, although the amendment provides that they may be assigned to hospital ships or to any special duty to which the Secretary of the Navy may see fit to assign them.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, could that woman attendant get on a boat at Manila and bring a lot of invalids across the Pacific back to the United States?

Mr. DAWSON. Under the terms of this bill they are eligible for duty at naval hospitals and on board of hospital and ambulance ships, and for such special duties as may be deemed necessary by the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I think they can do a great deal of good in that long, tempestuous voyage from Manila to San Francisco. I am very glad that the amendment has been made, and I hope it will be elastic enough to cover that kind of a case.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Will the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] now use some of his time?

Mr. TAWNEY. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER].

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, more than ten years have now come and gone since the U. S. battle ship Maine was destroyed in Habana Harbor. That deplorable tragedy wrote a memorable page in our history and a chapter of much moment in the annals of America. The records in the Navy Department show that 231 men were killed when the Maine was blown up; that 24 bodies were immediately recovered and buried in Key West, Fla.; that later 144 bodies were recovered and buried in Habana; that these bodies were subsequently brought home and buried in the national cemetery at Arlington; that at least 63 bodies were never recovered or accounted for and are now entombed with the wreck of the Maine in the mud and muck of Habana Harbor.

For some inexplicable reason the wreck of the Maine has never been raised and these bodies of the nation's dead recovered and brought home for burial. Our dereliction in this matter is little less than a national disgrace. Public sentiment has demanded for years that the wreck of the Maine be raised; that the truth of her destruction be told; that the bodies of these heroic dead be recovered and brought home for burial in Arlington Cemetery. But little or nothing to accomplish this purpose seems to have been done thus far in the matter by our Government.

Sir, in response to what I believe is the ever-increasing public sentiment of this country, I introduced, on the 15th day of February, 1908, just ten years after the Maine was blown up, the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he hereby is, requested, if not incompatible with the public interests, to send to the House of Representatives, as early as may be practicable, all letters and data as to the cost and legal status under which the Congress may exercise immediate or future action for the removal of the wreck of the U. S. battle ship Maine and provide burial for the dead now lying with the hulk in the harbor of Habana, Cuba.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution was favorably reported by the Naval Committee and unanimously passed the House of Representatives on the 10th day of March, 1908, and on the 25th day of March, 1908, the Secretary of the Navy, in compliance with the resolution, sent some of the data called for to the House of Representatives and it is printed as H. R. Document No. 812.

In that document the Secretary of the Navy makes the following statement:

The best information at the command of the Navy Department respecting the probable cost of the removal of the wreck of the Maine and the burial of the dead now lying in the hulk of that vessel, with regard to which inquiry is made in the resolution of the 10th instant, is afforded by an examination of the expenditures actually incurred in the attempt to accomplish those objects and in their partial achievement under the appropriations above cited.

It is a matter of record and tradition that when in February, 1898, this work was undertaken representatives of the wrecking companies visited the Department and suggested that on account of the peculiar circumstances under which the vessel was sunk, the nature of the work, and the conditions existing in the harbor at the time, it would be extremely difficult to name in advance any reasonable lump sum at which the task could be undertaken, or to give assurance that the vessel itself could be raised; and after full conferences it was determined that the work of recovering the bodies entombed in the ship and saving such portions of the armament and equipment as could be reached should be immediately entered upon, provision being at the same time made for the raising of the vessel if found practicable.

I now read a recent letter from the Secretary of the Navy to the Secretary of State concerning the matter. It is as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, March 4, 1908.

Sir: Your letter of the 27th ultimo inclosing a translation of a note from the Cuban minister inquiring "whether the decision reached by this Government recognizing Cuba's rights in the matter of the wrecks of the Alfonso XII and Maine also applies to the wrecks of all the Spanish war ships destroyed during the war of 1898 in Cuban waters," was duly received.

In reply I have the honor to state that the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Shaw, in a letter dated January 9, 1908, said that the Treasury Department did not desire to take further action regarding wrecks in Cuban waters and "was inclined to the opinion that any authority or rights it may have had formerly may properly be considered as having lapsed in favor of the Government of Cuba." (Sec. 3755, R. S.)

On the contrary, however, the Navy Department (letter of July 1, 1902, to Mr. George Richardson, copy herewith, and in other correspondence) has taken the attitude that the disposal of the wreck of the Maine rests with the Congress, and that no Executive Department could give assurance of its abandonment by the United States. With respect to the wreck of the Maine and those of the Spanish war ships destroyed during the war of 1898 in Cuban waters, however, it may be added that the Navy Department is not now engaged in, and has not in contemplation, any work thereupon.

After correspondence on the subject, the Department of State, October 27, 1904, expressed the view that "in order to obtain a valid and effective disposition of the Maine wreck" the matter should appropriately "be settled by a convention with Cuba."

The Navy Department expressed its concurrence in this view; but it is understood that the action thus suggested has not been taken.

Very respectfully,

V. H. METCALF, Secretary.

The SECRETARY OF STATE.

That letter and the report of the Secretary of the Navy made it clear to me that legislation was necessary to accomplish the object desired. Hence, on the 20th day of April, 1908, I introduced a bill which I now send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 21176) to raise the wreck of the U. S. battle ship Maine in Habana Harbor, and remove the bodies therein to Arlington Cemetery for interment.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to forthwith prepare and publish proposals requesting bids for the removal of the wreck of the U. S. battle ship Maine, now sunk in Habana Harbor, and have the bodies therein brought to Washington for interment in the national cemetery at Arlington; and that the contract or contracts for the purposes herein specified shall be let to the lowest responsible bidder.

SEC. 2. That the President be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to make the necessary arrangements, if any be necessary, for the purposes herein designated, with the Republic of Cuba.

SEC. 3. That any money now at the disposal of the Navy Department is hereby made applicable for the purposes herein specified, and if the same be not sufficient to carry out the purposes herein specified, then such sum of money as may be necessary to meet all the requirements of this act is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 4. That this act shall take effect immediately.

Mr. SULZER. That bill, sir, speaks for itself. It is now pending in the Committee on Naval Affairs. I have done everything in my power to get it reported, but thus far without success. It should be speedily reported and passed ere this session of Congress adjourns. It will accomplish the object desired, and it meets with the patriotic approval of the people of this country. The delay has been disappointing to the friends of the Maine's heroic dead. But I am not disheartened. I shall keep working in this matter until the Maine is raised and the bodies of our dead sailors are brought home for interment. These brave men died for their country. In the words of one of our own poets:

Down in that tropic, torpid bay,
In the slime and filth of the Spanish way,
Shall the hulk of the Maine forever stay?
Shall the ship that stood for Freedom rot
In the stench of that unhallowed spot?
No! No! Let the people rise as one,
With a firm demand that right be done,
And the dead be honored—the dead who died
That Liberty should be satisfied.
Take the old ship out of her filthy grave
To the clear blue sea and the white-capped wave,
And there in the depths, serene and pure
Give her a glory sepulture,
And moor above her the flag that waves
Forever above all our heroes' graves.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this naval conference report is before the House, but I have only had time to read it in a very brief way. We can take action now regarding the Maine, if we want to do so. I had indulged the hope that there would be in this conference report a provision to raise the battle ship Maine. I tried to do this, but so far without results. The whole matter is now pending before the committee, and I have been urging action for months. I have tried to get an amendment on the naval appropriation bill, but could not; but I thought something would be done regarding the matter in the Senate, but nothing has been done. The veterans of the Spanish-American war, from one end of the country to the other, are very much in favor of action along the lines of my bill, and nearly every camp has passed resolutions favoring its speedy enactment into law. The neglect of the dead sailors buried in the wreck of the Maine is a shame and a disgrace to the Government. The wreck of the Maine must be raised. The bodies of our gallant seamen must be brought home and interred with military honors in the national cemetery. Let us do our duty to-day. Let the truth be known. No American is afraid of the truth. The raising of the Maine will forever dissipate doubt—forever clear the sky of history.

Mr. Speaker, I do not know just why the Committee on Naval Affairs refuses to take action in this matter. I have done my best to get my bill reported. I would like to have some reason for this delay. The patriotic press of the country rings with commendable editorials day in and day out in favor of this legislation. The Government has been derelict in its duty to these brave and gallant men. The Congress must act. The wreck of the Maine must be raised. The bodies of her heroic dead must be brought home. Gratitude commands it. Patriotism demands it. Let us meet the occasion now and put in this naval conference report a provision to accomplish what the people so urgently request. Is there anyone here opposed to it? If so, let the Member stand up and say so. Now is the time to act. Let us do our duty to the patriotic dead that sleep in the wreck of the Maine in the mud and slime of Habana Harbor.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Have these conferees jurisdiction to do that?

Mr. SULZER. Certainly they have. They have legislated matters in this conference report of much less moment.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Would they not be subject to the same criticism if they did that as they are for what they have now done?

Mr. SULZER. If the conferees are going to legislate on a conference report, I want them to do something in which the people of the country take a deep and abiding interest—to respond to a great patriotic sentiment. I want action this way or some way, and I want action as quickly as I can get it. We must raise the Maine! We must bring home the heroic dead and bury the bodies with military honors in the national cemetery at Arlington! That is the duty of the hour!

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print, in connection with my remarks, a few letters and newspaper comments regarding this matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PRaise FOR MR. SULZER—VETERANS INTERESTED IN HIS BILL TO RAISE THE "MAINE"—SENATOR COLBY'S LETTER.

To the Editor of the News:

SIR: Patriotic organizations, together with survivors of the civil and Spanish wars in this State, numbering something over 100,000, are deeply interested in association and individual effort to remove the wreck of the battle ship Maine and her dead to a final resting place under the flag which was honored by "the Maine and her men." Keenly recognizing the conspicuous national indifference and neglect of a decade in the matter of the sunken Maine, a deep sense of national pride and local patriotism have steadily worked together through the public press, and fraternal organizations, to initiate and support Congressional action, which has now taken encouraging shape and promise, in a bill just introduced by Congressman SULZER.

Thousands of survivors of the civil war, both Union and Confederate, congratulate Mr. SULZER for the introduction of this bill, and they stand ready, with a soldier's welcome, for the success of its purpose and provisions. The drift of sentiment, outside of this, may be seen in a letter from a distinguished State senator. It was written by Senator Everett Colby on April 13, last, and sent to Congressman SULZER. The letter follows:

"MY DEAR SIR: I want to add a word to the many you are receiving in favor of the movement to raise the battle ship Maine. Your efforts are indorsed by the veterans of our State, for whom I am glad to speak."

Thanking you in advance for giving space to this I remain,
Yours, truly,

ARLINGTON, April 27, 1908.

VETERAN.

WOULD RAISE THE "MAINE"—NEGLECT OF SHIP AND THE NATION'S DEAD UNPARALLELED IN HISTORY OF NAVY.

To the Editor of the News:

SIR: Your valued editorial comment on the recent action of the Secretary of the Navy, in sending to Congress all information in the possession of his Department concerning the wreck of the battle ship Maine and the men who went down with her, is read with interest and appreciation in this State by the majority of those who are identified with patriotic and veteran organizations that was ever moved by an appeal to Congress and national honor in behalf of a famous ship and the nation's dead.

The national indifference to and neglect of the Maine since her "terrible taking off" is unparalleled in the history of our Army and Navy, and the repeated charges that the United States feared to face the facts, such as the wounds of the Maine would disclose, have been publicly charged and reiterated to such an extent that popular sentiment has almost surrendered to feelings akin to the humiliation of an apology to the perpetrator of a crime that shocked the civilized world. In this connection it is recalled that after the Cuban war was over and the details of peace were settled in Paris the Spanish commission said to our representative that "the United States had put a stigma on Spain in charging that Spaniards had wrecked the Maine, and they asked the privilege of raising the battle ship and proving that she was blown up from the inside." However, great credit is due to Congressman WILLIAM SULZER for his untiring efforts, up to and including the passage of his resolution in behalf of the Maine and its dead on the tenth anniversary of her destruction.

Survivors of the civil and Cuban wars, together with the membership of a patriotic organization numbering over 47,000 in New Jersey alone, are enthusiastic supporters of the movement to float the Maine and give proper sepulcher to her honored dead—to have them "brought home to sleep under the Stars and Stripes."

Yours, truly,

A. KING (VETERAN 1862-1865).

THE SULZER BILL TO RAISE THE "MAINE."

Representative SULZER, of New York, has introduced a simple and effective measure designed to obliterate a national scandal and disgrace. Mr. SULZER's bill is now in the hands of the House Committee on Naval Affairs. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Navy to contract for raising the wreck of the battle ship Maine and removing the bodies found therein to Arlington Cemetery, to rest hereafter alongside others of the nation's dead. It authorizes and directs the President to make the necessary arrangements for this purpose with the Republic of Cuba.

There should be no partisanship of attitude toward the patriotic, just, decent, and necessary action proposed by Mr. SULZER. The bill represents the common interests and well-nigh unanimous desire of the American people. We are informed that eminent Republicans, as well as Democrats, from this and other States are hastening to assure Mr. SULZER of their approval and support. The sentiment of the veterans, both Union and Confederate, and likewise of the blue and the gray that blended in the Spanish war, is strongly enlisted in the movement.

How could it be otherwise? The thought of those neglected and forgotten bones in Habana Harbor is argument enough. Shall Decoration Day of 1908 pass with the Sulzer bill not yet enacted?

[From the New York Sun, April 13, 1908.]

RAISE THE "MAINE."

If Congress should decide to remove the hulk of the ill-fated Maine from its resting place in the mud of Habana Harbor, painful as that decision might be to the naval bureaucracy, it would probably settle one way or the other some momentous questions.

It has always, for instance, been difficult to understand how it happened that the Spaniards who blew up our man-of-war managed to hold their tongues. It will be conceded that more than one Spaniard must have been concerned in that dark deed, must have shared in making the deadly engine of destruction, and must have had to do with submerging it beneath the fated vessel's hull. Indeed, it would seem that there must have been several persons privy to such an enterprise. When it is considered that the sentiments with which their fellow-countrymen would have varied somewhat from those with which we viewed it here, it is difficult to believe that the conspirators, one and all, have for a whole decade preserved the silence of the grave. It is against human nature. Such secrets are never kept, except when the commission of the act involves its authors in annihilation.

We have stated one of the reasons why we have never believed that the Spaniards had anything to do with the destruction of the Maine in Habana Harbor. We wish we could be as clear in our minds as to what was the contributing and active cause that led to the finding by the committee of inquiry that the Maine was destroyed by an external explosion. The raising of her devastated hulk might afford some clew to the mystery, some fact hitherto obscured or concealed, and so make known the truth.

It is a deplorable confession that for twenty-five years the naval bureaucracy has been in every matter that touched upon its own convenience or selfish advantage a packed jury. However the welfare of the service or the interests of the public might be involved, the bureaucracy has never receded one inch from its selfish autocracy. Was it any easier in 1898 to lay the destruction of an American battle ship at the door of Spain than it is to-day to suppress the evidence of the existing criminal mismanagement of this identical bureaucracy? The raising of the Maine has been steadily circumvented and defeated by the naval bureaucracy. It will be defeated now by the same agency unless Congress proves the stronger. And if Congress prevails the recovery of the hulk will bring no tangible evidence to light unless the most diligent precautions are exercised to the contrary.

The questions which interest the whole American people may be roughly resumed in this fashion: Is it not true that a search of the harbor bottom about the sunken Maine revealed no fragment or trace of the engine by which it was assumed that the ship was destroyed? Is it not true that the nature of the external rent in her structure as reported by the divers gave no indication whatever that the force producing it had operated from without? Was it not, on the contrary, evident, so far as it was possible to ascertain, that it had been produced from within? Was not the Maine structurally defective in that her magazine was inadequately isolated from her coal bunkers? Were not the coal bunkers filled at the time with a coal notoriously liable to spontaneous ignition? Is there not in the Navy Department a record of the discussion of these very points? If so, what was the evidence upon which this discussion was based and in what circumstances did it come before the bureau head? Precisely what obligation rested upon the naval bureaucracy in the early spring of 1898 of according a material and concrete casus belli with Spain? Whence was derived the warlike spirit which construed the Maine's injuries with such convenience to its hot desire? Whose was the hand that dictated the finding that the Maine was sunk by an explosion from without? Whose lust for strife coincided at this critical juncture with the comfort of the bureaucracy of the American Navy?

If Congress can answer these questions by raising the Maine, it will hardly shrink from undertaking the task.

TO REMOVE WRECK OF THE "MAINE."

Editor the Morning Star.

SIR: All survivors of both sides of the civil war feel greatly indebted to Congressman SULZER for his consistent and patriotic efforts in Congress to remove the wreck of the battle ship Maine and its dead from Habana Harbor. To them it recalls a war-time sentiment of respect for the dead, which is, in this case, extended to the wreck itself, and that was always recognized to the exclusion of all other feelings on the battlefield itself. This, together with the unparalleled national neglect which has given the "Old Maine" humiliating prominence before the world for more than ten years, moves every man who has served under the Stars and Stripes, ashore or afloat, to enthusiastic support of Congressman WILLIAM SULZER, who has just had the following amended resolution passed in the House:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he hereby is, requested, if not incompatible with the public interests, to send to the House of Representatives as early as may be practicable all letters and data as to the cost and legal status under which the Congress may exercise immediate or future action for the removal of the U. S. battle ship Maine and provide for the burial of the dead now lying with the hulk in the harbor of Habana, Cuba."

ALFRED KING (1862-1865).

NEW YORK, March 13, 1908.

Much satisfaction is expressed hereabout, and doubtless throughout the country generally, with the action of Representative WILLIAM SULZER, of New York, in introducing a resolution into Congress providing for the raising of the wrecked battle ship Maine, which, with the bodies of seventy-four sailors, has been lying on the slimy bottom of Habana Harbor for the past ten years. It seems incredible that our Government, so great and generous in other respects, should have so long neglected this important work; but it is comforting to think that there is some prospect at last of the bodies of the victims of the famous disaster being given decent burial. Better late than never, and more power to Mr. SULZER.

MR. SULZER AND THE BATTLE SHIP "MAINE."

To the Editor of the Sun.

SIR: An appeal has been made to the authorities in Washington every year during the last five years at least in behalf of the wreck of the battle ship Maine and her dead, which lie with the hulk in the ooze and pollution of Habana Harbor. This appeal has been extended to the President and to the two Senators from Maine by those who have seen service under the Stars and Stripes in two wars, but without avail, until last week when at the earnest request of survivors of the civil and Spanish wars the matter of the Maine was looked into by Congressman WILLIAM SULZER, and if the gentleman had dropped everything else he could not have done more in the time in response to the request than he has accomplished. His characteristic resolution in behalf of the Maine submitted on the tenth anniversary of the destruction of the ship is appended.

ALFRED KING.

NEW YORK, February 21.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he hereby is, requested, if not incompatible with the public interests, to send to the House of Representatives, as early as may be practicable, all letters and data as to the present international status and rights, if any there be, under which the Congress may exercise immediate or future action for the removal of the wreck of the United States battle ship Maine and provide proper burial for its dead now lying with the hulk in the harbor of Habana, Cuba.

[From the Sun, February 15, 1908.]

THE NEGLECTED BATTLE SHIP.

To-day is the tenth anniversary of the destruction of the battle ship Maine. For ten years the hull of that ill-fated vessel has been a nuisance to shipping in a foreign harbor and a reproach to the country whose flag she bore.

An engineer of experience and recognized standing, fully conversant with the condition of the ship, has recently said that for a sum not exceeding $300,000 it would be possible to lift the hull from the harbor bottom and tow it to sea for burial in the deep water of the Florida Straits. Such should be its disposition, whether the expense to the nation is $300,000 or $3,000,000.

The President might well make this the subject of a special message to Congress, and the Congress might well recognize the tenth anniversary of the war with Spain by an appropriation that would remove from sight the most lamentable reminder of the quarrel. The foremast of the vessel should be brought to Arlington and set up as a monument over the graves of the dead seamen. If guns or other equipment suitable for such use could be recovered they also might be used for the same purpose there or elsewhere. The ship should have decent sepulture. If we do not care to do this as a matter of national honor, we should at least do it as a matter of courtesy to a friendly neighbor in whose principal harbor the wreck constitutes a nuisance and a menace to shipping and an obstacle to projected harbor improvement.

The joint resolution which directed and empowered President McKinley to use the entire land and naval forces of the United States to compel the immediate relinquishment of Spanish authority and government in Cuba was passed on April 20, 1898. Before that date this year provision should be made for the honorable interment of the vessel whose destruction was one of the exciting causes of the war.

THE WRECK OF THE "MAINE."

Speaking of the resolution offered by Representative WILLIAM SULZER, of this State, asking the Secretary of the Navy to give his opinion to the Congress on the right of the Government of the United States to raise the wreck of the battle ship Maine and clear the harbor of Habana of the obstruction, the Cincinnati Commercial Tribune, in an interesting editorial comment, says:

"It is altogether probable that Congressman SULZER, with his colleagues of the House, is fully advised of the rights of the United States in the premises. The raising of the wreck might revive the old question of its destruction by connivance or by direct instructions from the Spanish Government, or by an explosion which came from within the Maine and from causes over which the Spanish Government did not and could not control. That the wrecking of the Maine precipitated hostilities is not to be doubted, neither is it to be doubted that hostilities between the two countries were inevitable and would have come about even if the Maine had steamed safely out of the harbor where she never should have been sent. That the explosion was due to connivance or to direct instructions of the Spanish Government is not believed to-day. If the explosion came from the outside, it was the work of Spanish scoundrels determined to bring on the war or the work of hot-headed Cubans who saw in the certainty of war their certainty of independence. But apart from all questions of that nature, the wreck of the Maine should be cleared from Habana Harbor and the causes of the explosion determined if they are possible of determination. It is not altogether creditable that the gallant ship should find burial in foreign waters, and history will not be satisfied without the knowledge of the cause of the explosion. The revival of the question of the cause might be acute for a time, but with all other questions of the war settled the acuteness would neither hurt nor become chronic."

Mr. SULZER's activity in this matter is very generally commended. It is nothing short of a national disgrace that to-day (more than ten long years after the destruction of the Maine) the hulk of that ill-fated battle ship should still be obstructing the harbor of a friendly city—or an unfriendly one, for that matter—and the bones of those who perished in her be left without decent interment.

Nor does it give a creditable—nor, in our opinion, an accurate—impression of American sentiment to have it said abroad that we as a nation are afraid to raise the Maine for fear it will be proved that the explosion was from within.

The American people are never afraid to do the right thing and to stand for truth, right, and justice. If it was an accidental explosion from the inside which destroyed the Maine, all the world is entitled to the knowledge of the fact, and it would set at rest many ugly rumors and hints made at the time of the explosion and since.

[From the Passaic Daily News, Saturday, February 15, 1908.]

"REMEMBER THE 'MAINE.'"

Ten years ago to-day the world was startled by the news that the second-class battle ship Maine, of the American Navy, had been blown up in Habana Harbor with the loss of 260 officers and men.

It does not seem like ten years. The event is as fresh in our minds as though it had happened but yesterday. It came upon us, at first, like a crushing blow. We thought only of the horror of it, of the death of so many brave men, of the widowed wives and childless mothers. Then the nation took second thought, when it was realized that the ship was blown up, and that there was a suspicion that it was blown up from the outside. Wrath took the place of sorrow, and the nation, down to its last man, was determined that the outrage should be avenged. "Remember the Maine!" was the cry that arose from Maine to Florida and from New York to California. It was with this cry upon their lips that men sprang to arms, and alike it was the inspiration of the military and naval operations of the ensuing war—in Manila Bay, at Santiago, as well as in the great camps in the South. It will be years ere the memory of the departure of the Passaic company of the old Second Regiment is effaced. Thousands watched the men depart, and "Remember the Maine!" was the thought in each cheering onlooker's mind.

Many events have taken place since February 15, 1898. By a series of successes upon land and sea America sprang into the first rank as a sea power, and governments over seas realized, as they had not before, that America must be taken into the world's reckonings. From that time on America has forged steadily ahead, and to-day its Navy ranks second in the world in effectiveness and the Republic's possessions beyond the seas are imperial in their dimensions.

But what of the Maine? A fine new vessel—not so new, after all, as is the lot of battle ships—has taken the place of the ill-fated sister ship of the Texas. But the Maine—the original Maine, a battered hulk, still lies, half submerged, in Habana Harbor. Why has the wreck not been raised? Is there a fear that we might be obliged to confess to the world, after all, that the ship was not blown up from without? That Spain was innocent of this heinous crime?

"Remember the Maine?" Rather, raise the Maine! It was one thing for an inflamed nation to jump to an apparently obvious conclusion in the face of a crisis. But history demands that the wreck of the Maine be raised, that historical justice may be done.

[From the Washington Post, February 16, 1908.]

ANNIVERSARY OF THE "MAINE"—HABANA DISASTER RECALLED BY RESOLUTION AND HOUSE CHAPLAIN'S PRAYER.

With the view to the raising of the ill-fated battle ship Maine and "the proper burial for its dead, now lying with the hulk of that vessel in the harbor of Habana, Cuba," Representative SULZER of New York yesterday introduced in the House a resolution calling upon the Secretary of the Navy for papers and correspondence bearing on the international status of the question and the rights of the Government of the United States in the matter.

Chaplain Conden, in his invocation, recalled the destruction of the Maine, and prayed that war may never visit this country again. After referring to the abiding patriotism of the American people, he said:

"We are reminded of the brave men who, ten years ago to-day, went down to death in the ill-fated Maine. Grant, O God, that their sacrifice may be an inspiration to the living. Make us to know that our country is not only worth living for, but if need be it is worth dying for; that vigilance is not only the price of liberty, but it is the price of everything worth while. Help us, therefore, to be patriots in times of peace as in times of war; but we most fervently pray, O God, that war shall never come to us again, but that we may live in harmony with each other and in peace with all the world."

THE PROJECT TO RAISE THE "MAINE."

Secretary Metcalf, in accordance with the Sulzer resolution, has furnished the House of Representatives with a statement of the work done in recovering the bodies of officers and men lost with the battle ship Maine and in saving equipment and machinery, together with a report on the present status of the project.

The total number of bodies recovered was 138, leaving 63 unaccounted for. A balance of $145,000 remains of the $200,000 appropriated by Congress for the purpose in February, 1898, and $3,000 from the additional appropriation of $10,000 for the removal of the bodies to Arlington Cemetery. Some pieces of armament were saved and the loose wreckage dumped at sea.

What is left is a worthless hulk. But sentiment attaches to it as the tomb of American sailors, and considerations of patriotism urge the raising and removal of the wreck, if only to settle finally the causes of the Maine's destruction. If a convention with Cuba is necessary, it can readily be arranged.

AN APPEAL FOR THE "MAINE"—STATE COUNCIL OF THE JR. O. U. A. M. SENDS RESOLUTIONS TO PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT.

To the Editor of the News.

SIR: Survivors of both sides of the civil war and every patriotic American will be glad to learn that the State council of New Jersey, Jr. O. U. A. M., representing over 47,000 members in the State of New Jersey alone, will include in the published report of its recent session at Trenton the following preamble and resolutions as an appeal from all councils to President Roosevelt in behalf of the wreck of the battle ship Maine:

"Whereas the wreck of the U. S. battle ship Maine now lying in the harbor of Habana, Cuba, together with scores (seventy-four) of her dead entombed in the hulk are and have been the object of national neglect and indifference, unparalleled in the annals of our Army and Navy: Therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the State council of New Jersey, Jr. O. U. A. M., hereby respectfully requests the President to include in his recommendations to our next National Congress such measures as may be deemed most practical and effective for the early removal of the battle ship Maine from the Habana Harbor and for the proper sepulture of her dead under the flag of our country, for which they died; and be it further

"Resolved, That the recording secretary of this council be, and is hereby, ordered to send a copy of these resolutions, under the seal of the council, to the President at Washington."

These resolutions are signed by Frank R. Sharp, State councilor.

Yours, truly,

VETERAN, 1862-1865.

THE WRECK OF THE "MAINE."

If we do not err about the temper of the House of Representatives, an appropriation will soon be made to raise the unsightly and melancholy wreck of the battle ship Maine in the harbor of Habana after almost ten years of neglect and vacillation. Mr. SULZER's amended resolution calling upon the Secretary of the Navy to send to the House "all letters and data as to the cost and legal status under which the Congress may exercise immediate or future action for the removal of the wreck," and provide burial for the unrecovered dead, was adopted on March 10, and on March 25 Mr. Metcalf complied. His report was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs the following day.

There was at first no disposition to disregard an obvious duty. Eight days after the blowing up of the Maine, which occurred on the evening of February 15, 1898, Congress appropriated $200,000 to recover the remains of the dead, raise the ship, and save any parts of the machinery and equipment that might be used again. On March 30 the sum of $10,000 was appropriated "for the removal of remains of officers and men who perished by the destruction of the U. S. S. Maine." A wrecking and a towing company contracted to do the work. It was abandoned on April 2, 1898, after a report had been made by a naval board recommending that because the contractors were "disinclined to work during the rainy season" and it would take from six to eight months to raise the shattered hull, it was advisable to suspend operations. Meanwhile the court of inquiry had taken evidence and reported, on March 21, that the Maine had been wrecked by the explosion of a mine "under the bottom of the ship at about frame 18 and somewhat on the shore side of the ship." On April 20 President McKinley signed the joint resolution of Congress declaring war upon Spain.

Of the original appropriation of $200,000, the sum of $54,043.94 was expended in stripping the wreck above water and recovering four 6-inch guns, the paymaster's safe, two 6-pounder guns, two searchlights, a steam cutter, the breech mechanism of the after 10-inch guns, and 100 shells. The naval board estimated the value of material which could be recovered if the ship were raised "in good order" at $670,600. It was the judgment of the board that "the machinery would not suffer from being submerged several months." It went on record, March 28, 1898, with the opinion that it had "no doubt of the ability of a good company to do such work." Of the appropriation of $10,000 for the transfer of dead to the United States and their burial at Arlington, $6,968.72 was expended. One hundred and eighty-eight bodies were recovered and buried, and sixty-three were "not found."

Among the documents in the case sent by Secretary Metcalf to the House is a statement of the date of May 16, 1902, by Charles E. Magoon, who is now the provisional governor of Cuba and at that time was acting chief in the division of Insular Affairs, War Department. Mr. Magoon wrote, in response to an inquiry:

"The military government of Cuba will take no further steps in regard to the Maine, and after the withdrawal of our military forces from Cuba, unless Congress should otherwise provide, any attempt made by this Government to raise the Maine will come within the jurisdiction of the Navy Department."

The Navy Department has steadily maintained (to quote Mr. Metcalf) "that no Executive Department of the Government has authority to dispose of or to abandon the wreck, but that such power rests solely, so far as this Government is concerned, in the Congress." In one instance, when the Hon. William H. Moody was Secretary of the Navy, the Department (December 3, 1902) disapproved emphatically of Senate bill 5806 "for raising the wreck of the battle ship Maine."

"The Department does not regard with favor the raising of the Maine for the purpose of photographing her, with the view of entering upon another investigation as to the cause of her destruction. No reason is perceived why the former investigation is not sufficient. The material of the vessel would not be of value to the Navy Department. The sentimental consideration attached to the raising of the Maine appeals to all, but the Department does not recommend the passage of the bill."

Earlier in 1902 Representative ROBERTS, of Massachusetts, had introduced a bill "for raising the wreck of the battle ship Maine," and Acting Secretary Darling, on behalf of the Department, wrote to Chairman Foss of the House Naval Committee that "no objection is perceived to the passage of the measure." Six months later, when Chairman HALE of the Senate Naval Committee consulted Mr. Moody about a Senate bill, the Secretary overruled his assistant.

In view of the fact that Cuba is now ruled by a provisional governor, with Army officers governing the provinces and an advisory law commission presided over by Col. E. H. Crowder, United States Army, making the laws, the meetings of congress having been suspended by decree of Secretary Taft—in view of these conditions an opinion given by Secretary of State Hay to the Secretary of the Navy on October 8, 1904, is interesting:

"It might be advisable, in order to obtain a valid and effective disposition of the Maine wreck, that the matter be settled by a convention with Cuba, which could be submitted to the Senate of the United States for its concurrence."

Mr. Paul Morton, then Secretary of the Navy, concurred. Cuba is no longer in a position to enter into a subvention on the subject. Her right to do so has been suspended. It is renewable at the pleasure of the United States, and the time of the renewal has not been definitely determined. There can be no doubt that the Cuban people would like to have the wreck of the Maine removed, for the reason, if for no other, that it is an obstruction to navigation. To the American people it is an eyesore when they see it and a heartache when they think about it. Their Government now has the power, if it has the will, to remove the wreck of the Maine without having to ask the permission of Cuba, which would not be withheld if Cuba were articulate politically.

There is no longer any excuse for not raising the Maine. The American people desire that it be done. Let Congress make the appropriation and direct the President to execute the will of the people.

THE RAISING OF THE "MAINE."

We congratulate Mr. John T. Collins, the newly elected commander of the Department of the State of New Jersey of United Spanish War Veterans, that it is highly probable during his term of office, through the New Jersey and associate departments of Spanish War Veterans, the long-neglected wreck of the U. S. battle ship Maine, with the remains of nearly fourscore of her crew, are to be removed from the ooze and sewage of Habana Harbor and, if nothing more, given a sailor's burial in the clean water of the Gulf, suitably marked as the grave of the Maine. To this end the following resolution was adopted unanimously at the State encampment on the 9th instant:

ELIZABETH, N. J., August 9, 1907.

To His Excellency the President of the United States:

Whereas the wreck of the U. S. battle ship Maine, now lying neglected, with the remains of those who went down with her, in the harbor of Habana, Cuba; and

Whereas the neglect of this famous wreck and her honored dead is heartless and a reflection upon our national honor and the spirit of patriotism of this country: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Department Encampment of New Jersey of the United Spanish War Veterans in session at Asbury Park, N. J., August 9, 1907, would respectfully make an appeal, through you our comrade, to the next session of the United States Congress to take action toward the raising of the Maine, and that the remains of her dead sailors be buried with military honors.

TWIN OAKS, NEWPORT, R. I.,
May 5, 1908.

DEAR SIR: Admiral Luce has sent me your letter to him in re raising the Maine. He suggests that as a member of the board of inquiry upon the cause of her loss, that I give you my views in the matter.

I have always held that the ship should be raised and the work be done in a way to allow a thorough examination of her condition as she lies. This would, of course, require the building of a cofferdam which could be pumped out. It should have been done at once after the war. While absolutely sure that the conditions will be found such as described in our report, the question of result should have no bearing in the matter. The board did its duty according to its lights, and I am sure that I can answer for the other surviving members as well as for myself, in saying that we should welcome any new light which exposing the wreck might bring.

Our failure to raise the wreck has undoubtedly given an impression to many of a want of openness and straightforwardness on the part of the Government. It is our duty to remove this. We can afford to say we were mistaken; we can not afford the imputation of fearing the truth.

I am, very truly, yours,

F. E. CHADWICK,
Rear-Admiral, Retired.

ARLINGTON, N. J., May 9, 1908.

HON. WILLIAM SULZER, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I have mentioned the fact that you have decided to speak for the "Maine and her men" in the House to several of my friends who have expressed an interest along the lines of our effort in behalf of the famous wreck and its dead. This information is gratefully accepted by all, many of whom think it most commendable as means to record just what was done from a purely patriotic impulse and sense of honor due the nation and its dead.

If you have not already gotten all the data as to the facts of the Maine when she rode at anchor in Habana Harbor, allow me to say that the ship, as she stood before the explosion, represented an outlay of $5,000,000, according to Captain Sigbee, her commander. Her machinery cost $735,000. The hull represents tons of mild steel. The turrets were steel, 8 inches thick, of which there were two, equipped with 10-inch guns. She was protected for a length of 180 feet amidships with harveylized steel armor 12 inches thick, worth $500 a ton. Her entire equipment was all that is represented by a first-class battle ship of her class at the time. We shall look with interest for all that you may say of the Maine.

Yours,

ALFRED KING.

HEADQUARTERS OF THE DEPARTMENT OF NEW JERSEY,
UNITED SPANISH WAR VETERANS,
Rutherford, N. J., December 26, 1907.

Mr. ALFRED KING, Arlington, N. J.

MY DEAR SIR: I have just learned of your correspondence with Q. M. Gen. Charles Burrows, Grand Army of the Republic, in regard to bringing the question of floating the old battle ship Maine, now lying in the harbor of Habana, to the attention of Congress during its present session. The greatest indifference and neglect seems to be the rule in connection with this famous wreck, and it is certainly comcommendable on the part of the survivors of the Union armies to ask for national legislation in behalf of the Maine. In this connection I desire to say in our own behalf that the Spanish War Veterans are deeply interested, and peculiarly so, in the fate or removal of the wreck of the U. S. battle ship Maine from Cuban waters, and also that we are in hearty accord with this movement or any other that your efforts may adopt to give the hulk, with its honored dead, an appropriate and final resting place under the flag of our country.

Fraternally, yours,

JOHN T. COLLINS,
Department Commander.

ARLINGTON, N. J., April 10, 1908.

HON. WILLIAM SULZER, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Through the public press and private correspondence of those who are taking a personal interest in raising the old battle ship Maine, I learn of your past and continued efforts in Washington in behalf of the survivors of the civil and Spanish wars, who are taking a deep interest in floating this famous wreck and giving proper burial to its dead. I desire to say in this connection, as an ex-soldier of the Spanish war, that your efforts to float the remains of this battle ship have the support and best wishes of all who are glad to be recognized as comrades and ex-soldiers of the war with Spain for the freedom of Cuba.

Sincerely, yours,

FRANK KOCH.

CHICAGO, ILL., May 5, 1908.

HON. WILLIAM SULZER.

SIR: It was a source of pleasure to me to read of your bill in Congress to have raised the battle ship Maine, now lying in Habana Bay. This has been my hope and desire since the destruction of the battle ship on February 15, 1898, and I am sure in that bill you voiced the sentiments of the whole American people. My son, Edward F. Kean, was on duty as a marine guard that night, as I understand, in the lower cabins, and is still among the missing, as also another Chicago boy named Shillington. I trust you will keep the matter of the raising of the battle ship before this honorable session so the work will not be delayed more than is necessary, and, thanking you for your kindly and true American spirit, I remain,

Respectfully,

Mrs. MARGARET KEAN,
Per M. K.

ARLINGTON, N. J., March 31, 1908.

HON. WILLIAM SULZER, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Allow me to most sincerely thank you for your generous package of "Document No. 812" containing the "Sulzer resolution" on the proposition to raise the U. S. S. Maine and provide burial for her dead. The Secretary's reply interests me very much, and will afford great satisfaction to those who hoped for it, but who have long since experienced feelings of "hope deferred," and so forth, in regard to the Maine, and failed most conspicuously to express encouragement in my efforts at this end of the line. Looking over the details of the Secretary's reply, in a general way, it looks to me as if the Sulzer resolution was the first offered under this name in behalf of the Maine. Now we shall all wait with interest for the sequel, which, of course, will follow in speaking to the Secretary's reply and giving your reasons for an appropriation and authorization to float the ship and burial of her dead. Should you refer to personal or special effort in this matter, it will not be too much to say that the movement was led by veterans of the civil war.

Yours,

ALFRED KING.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask how much time I have remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has twenty-nine minutes remaining.

Mr. TAWNEY. How much has the gentleman from Illinois? The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has 39 minutes.

Mr. TAWNEY. I ask the gentleman from Illinois to use part of his time now.

Mr. FOSS. I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I shall not use a great deal of time. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER], who has just taken his seat, criticised the conference committee because we declined, or neglected, or refused, whichever phase of the matter might be considered, to initiate legislation upon which both the House and the Senate had wholly and absolutely refused to take any action whatever. Other gentlemen have criticised the committee because the committee, it is said, had legislated upon some matters on which the Senate had legislated. Some criticism has been offered to the conference report with reference to Senate amendment 67, because the conferees agreed to the Senate amendment with an amendment. I wish to say that in my opinion—

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman from Tennessee will pardon me, the agreement on the part of the conferees was to insert the word "colonel," and then they add at the end of the amendment an entirely new paragraph, which had no relation whatever to the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. PADGETT. It relates to it.

Mr. TAWNEY. It had no relation to anything in difference between the two Houses?

Mr. PADGETT. Oh, yes; I beg to differ with the gentleman. When the bill left the House it contained no provision whatever with reference to an increase of the Marine Corps, either officers or men. The Senate added amendment No. 67, providing for an increase in the Marine Corps of 750 officers and men altogether.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman will permit me, that is a legislative provision.

Mr. PADGETT. That is a legislative provision.

Mr. TAWNEY. And the new matter is an appropriation to meet the increase; and that appropriation is made by the conferees, and not by either House?

Mr. PADGETT. Certainly; and I do not dodge that issue. The naval appropriation bill is fundamentally and substantially—and, I might say, exclusively—an appropriation bill, because under the rules we can only legislate in the House by unanimous consent, as a point of order will eliminate from the naval appropriation bill any legislative provision. In the Senate a different rule prevails; and when the bill comes back from the Senate with a legislative provision upon it it is not subject under the rules to a point of order, because the Senate is competent to place upon the bill any amendment which addresses itself to its discretion and its judgment.

Now, this bill came back to the House with an amendment which is a legislative provision. The bill was sent to the conferees for the purpose of considering the action of the Senate. That provision was for an increase of the Marine Corps. We had the right to complete and perfect that legislation. We had the right to deal with it in such manner as to make it a completed whole and bring it back to this House as a completed and substantial proposition.

Now, then, it is puerile—I speak it respectfully—in my humble judgment, to provide in an appropriation bill, in one body, for an increase of 750 men, and yet to refuse, in perfecting that amendment, to include the appropriation to pay those identical men.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is it not a fact that the Senate not only provided for an increased number of men, but by amendment it also provided for their compensation? What did the conferees do? Why, they provided for additional compensation. That was not in dispute between the two Houses.

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir; we did not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will read the bill in a little while and show that that is what happened.

Mr. PADGETT. I will read it right now.

The Senate provided for an increase in the number of officers and men in the Marine Corps, and in order to perfect that amendment we agreed to accept the Senate amendment with an amendment, which is common in the procedure of the House and in conference committees. That amendment which the conferees propose to the Senate amendment, and which is reported now before the House, is in these words:

To meet the increase in pay of the Marine Corps provided in the act making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and in section 1612 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, for officers on the active list, officers on the retired list, enlisted men on the active list, and enlisted men on the retired list, $802,750.55 is hereby appropriated: Provided, That so much of the foregoing appropriation as is needed to pay the increase for the remainder of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, shall be immediately available.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does the gentleman claim that it was within the jurisdiction of the conferees to enact that separate paragraph?

Mr. PADGETT. I say it was.

Mr. TAWNEY. Then, what is the necessity of either House considering appropriations, either as to their necessity or the amount which should be appropriated, if the conferees can usurp or take jurisdiction of that subject?

Mr. PADGETT. I state that the conferees have neither usurped nor wrongfully taken jurisdiction. We were dealing with a Senate amendment, and this is a germane amendment to that amendment.

Mr. TAWNEY. This is a separate paragraph.

Mr. PADGETT. If we are to authorize the enlistment of 750 men, it is not only germane, but it is sensible to provide for their payment. And the conferees acted fairly on the proposition.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is entirely sensible to provide for their compensation, but that provision should be enacted in accordance with law and in accordance with the rules of the House of Representatives.

Mr. PADGETT. I say it is being proceeded with in conformity with law and in conformity with the rules of the House of Representatives, because it is always proper, it is always pertinent, and it is always in order for the conferees to accept an amendment of the other House with an amendment germane to the original proposition.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Can you put in an entirely new proposition?

Mr. PADGETT. We did not.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is it within the power of the conferees to put in an entirely new proposition?

Mr. PADGETT. It is not.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Then where is the limit? I have listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks of my colleague. Will he tell me where the limitation on the conferees comes in?

Mr. PADGETT. One body or the other must have dealt with the proposition, and then we can amend or perfect that proposition by germane amendment.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The two Houses and the conferees might agree on this increase of the enlisted men, but neither House agree on the question of pay for them, might they not?

Mr. PADGETT. They could do it if they wanted to.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. You did put in the pay?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And that was not considered by either House?

Mr. PADGETT. It is being considered now.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. It was not considered by either House.

Mr. PADGETT. No; but this is an appropriation bill, and must be considered to deal with and perfect the measure.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I will say to my colleague that I myself think, with the greatest deference to the gentleman and the committee, that the practice is mighty dangerous for the conferees to step out and put something in a conference report that neither House has passed on.

Mr. HOUSTON. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. HOUSTON. I should like to ask if the increase you fixed is in accordance with the rate fixed by the Senate in its amendment.

Mr. PADGETT. It is, absolutely. Now, answering the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES], the last proposition he made, that the conferees can put in nothing that either House has not put in and that they must be confined to the very words of one House or the other, would result in this, that the conferees would have no power whatever. They could not amend, they could not change, they could not alter, because if the conferees can not alter the verbiage, if we can not perfect the measures that one body or the other may suggest, there can be no compromise and there can be no common ground of agreement. The conferees must possess the power to change verbiage. They must possess the power to add to or take from the amendment of the other in order to perfect it or to eliminate differences.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Suppose both Houses had agreed to increase the enlistment, but both Houses said "We will do that without making any appropriation for their payment now." Would the conferees have the right to insert it?

Mr. PADGETT. They would not, because it would not have been in conference. There would have been no disagreement between the two Houses. There must be a disagreement between the two Houses. One House or the other must have acted and the other not have acted, or one House must have acted in one way and the other House in a different way, so that there is a difference between the two Houses.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. As I understand the gentleman's proposition, he claims that the conferees practically have the power to make an appropriation.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Well, I will take the proposition of the gentleman from Tennessee. If one House had authorized an increase and the other House had not authorized an increase—

Mr. PADGETT. And had agreed to it.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. No; but the matter came in conference and one House authorizes the increase and the other House has not authorized the increase, the gentleman from Tennessee holds that the conferees have a right to bring the two Houses together and make an appropriation.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. And thereby the gentleman claims that the conferees have a right to appropriate.

Mr. PADGETT. They have a right to add a germane amendment to it. To illustrate, take the concrete proposition here. The House bill contains no provision for the increase of the Marine Corps. The Senate put on a proposition for the increase by 750 men in the aggregate, officers and men. But that agreement was incomplete, to speak respectfully, and we wanted to perfect that amendment. We had a right to perfect it, and in the perfection of it we had a right to add to it any germane amendment. We agreed to the Senate amendment, with an amendment germane that perfected it, and made it a complete proposition.

Mr. TAWNEY. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Tennessee had examined a little more carefully the provisions of the bill, I doubt whether he would have made some of the statements that he has made. The Senate did incorporate in the naval appropriation bill amendment 67, which provides for a certain increase in the Marine Corps. The Senate also incorporated in the bill amendments 64 and 66, and those amendments provided that so much of the foregoing amounts which were for the pay of the Marine Corps should be available to pay the additional men authorized in Senate amendment 67. So that the Senate by its amendment—

Mr. PADGETT. Will the gentleman submit to an interruption?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman said it provided for the appointment of additional men. It says to pay the additional officers, but does not include the men.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let me read it. Amendment 66—

Mr. PADGETT. Sixty-four.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I said amendments 64 and 66.

So much of the foregoing appropriation as is needed to pay the additional enlisted men of the Marine Corps shall be immediately available.

I repeat that if the gentleman from Tennessee had been familiar with the Senate amendment, he would not have made some of the statements he has made. Now, the two Houses agreed to the Senate amendments 64 and 66, so that there was no controversy between the two Houses as to the pay of the men authorized in Senate amendment 67. While this bill was pending in conference the conferees waited to ascertain what the House would do in regard to the conference report on the Army bill. In the Army bill provision was made for an increase of compensation in the Marine Corps; and that having been agreed to, then the conferees on the naval appropriation bill, there being no difference whatever between the two Houses upon the question of compensation, through the pretense of an amendment, provided for an additional officer by inserting the word "colonel" after "one major-general commandant" and before "the lieutenant-colonel," and then, as the amendment shows, provided to agree to that amendment with an amendment. The amendment adds to the paragraph authorizing the appropriation to carry out the provisions of the Army act, which is not yet a law, by the way, but to carry out certain provisions in the Army appropriation bill upon which there was no difference of opinion between the two Houses, an appropriation that had never been considered in either House.

What has been the practice of this House in the past thirty years? There have been times when conferees in meeting would find such a situation as this. They had no jurisdiction; they had no power; they had no authority to insert matters entirely foreign to matters in difference between the two Houses. The practice has been for the conferees to return to the House, explain the situation, and then be authorized by concurrent resolution to make provision in the bill for some matter over which at that time the conferees had no jurisdiction.

This side of the House is more interested in the enforcement of the rule that the conferees shall not exceed their jurisdiction than is the majority. The minority is always in the minority on a conference committee.

Unless these conferees are compelled to adhere strictly to matters within their jurisdiction, not only is the House powerless to protect itself against the conferees doing what they please, but this side of the House particularly is helpless against legislation which it should have an opportunity to consider and to discuss. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that anybody who will examine these separate amendments will see that there has been incorporated here an appropriation for a matter which neither House has considered and which both Houses should for their own protection have an opportunity to consider before it is incorporated in this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FOSS. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT].

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, replying to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], who has just taken his seat, and who refers to amendments 64 and 66 in the bill, a reference to those amendments will show that it has reference to pay of the additional men authorized in amendment 67, according to the old schedule, but the Senate had put on amendment No. 2, which the gentleman entirely ignores. Amendment No. 2 provides for the increase of the pay of these men.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But the gentleman does not mean to say—

Mr. PADGETT. Oh, I have only three minutes and I can not yield. Nos. 64 and 66 provided for the pay of these men authorized by No. 67, according to the old schedule, but when the conferees agreed to Senate amendment No. 2, which changed the pay and made an increase of pay, then it became necessary for the conferees to modify Senate amendment No. 67 to conform to Senate amendment No. 2, which had been agreed to by the conferees.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman knows this amendment 67 particularly provides money to carry out the provisions of the Army appropriation bill, not of amendment No. 2 in this bill, but of the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. PADGETT. But the Marine Corps, which is increased 750 men, occupy a dual relation. Their appropriation is always carried in the naval appropriation bill while they are under the jurisdiction and control of the Army department.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But Senate amendment No. 2 does not in any way affect the compensation of men in the Marine Corps. That is what you appropriated for in the amendment to Senate amendment 67.

Mr. PADGETT. The Senate amendment 67, the modification of it, was made necessary because of the passage of an agreement to Senate amendment No. 2, and in order to perfect the whole scheme and arrangement of reclassifying the pay of the officers and the men in the Navy and Marine Corps.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. TAWNEY. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DRISCOLL].

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this report, and believe that it should be sent back to the conference and to the Senate, not because the gentlemen of the Military Affairs Committee are attacking it, for in my judgment they set a bad example along the same lines and in the same direction. The House passed a fairly liberal bill for Army appropriations, and they came in with a report carrying about ten millions increases from their conference with the Senate conferees. The confirmation of this report should be denied because it is unreasonably extravagant. It contains an increase of expenditures which is entirely unnecessary. As nearly as I can figure it out, we are running behind about $108,000,000 during the present fiscal year, and with that deficit staring the country in the face these gentlemen increase their appropriations by leaps and bounds—about $17,000,000 in the Army appropriation bill—and now this committee comes in here with a report and asks for its confirmation, containing an increase of seventeen and a quarter millions of dollars, put in by the Senate and consented to by the House conferees. Nearly two millions of this increased appropriation are for officers in the Navy—$500 to each man, practically, all along the line—and then 10 per cent additional when they are on their ships at sea and doing exactly what they are hired to do, exactly what they were sent to the Naval Academy to learn how to do, exactly what they were educated to do, and exactly what they profess to do, and what they are expected to do if they do anything to earn their money. There are altogether too many of them here in Washington and in other large cities, enjoying social life instead of being with the fleets and on the seas where their profession calls them.

Again, this report proposes to raise the salaries of the midshipmen just as soon as they leave the Naval Academy from $950 to $1,400 a year in one jump. What necessity is there for this? Why not let them serve for the compensations heretofore paid them, and if they are to be advanced, why not do it gradually, in the manner we advance officials and employees in the civil service of the Government?

Mr. OLCOTT. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. DRISCOLL. I have only a few minutes.

Mr. OLCOTT. I only wanted to know whether the gentleman had any idea of what uniforms cost.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker, the cost of a uniform can not have advanced $450, and no new law has been enacted requiring different uniforms from those heretofore worn. But this is a Republic, and not a kingdom or an empire. Cheaper uniforms would last as long and serve the purpose quite as well; but perhaps more gold lace and gilt buttons would appeal to the belles of social life more effectively. I believe in the simplicity of the Republic all along the line, and not in the show, style, and grandeur which seem to be taking possession of our people.

We should continue to esteem simplicity above splendor, peace above war, and honor above glory; and should endeavor to keep before the minds of the people, and before the minds of our military and naval officers, the ideals, traditions, sentiments, and principles on which the great Republic was founded.

These cadets and midshipmen are taken from farms, stores, and other ordinary vocations, and from schools, and sent to the Military and Naval academies. I make all my appointments in pursuance of competitive examinations. Any boy, whoever he may be and whatever his antecedents, who wins out in a fair competitive examination receives my recommendation. You make your recommendations arbitrarily, as a matter of favor or in any way you please. But I can say, to the credit and honor of the boys in my district, that all they ask is a fair chance in the examination, and those who fail never grumble or pout.

A boy taken from the farm and put through the Naval Academy, at a cost to the Government of perhaps $30,000, gets a thorough education and accomplishments for social life. If he has aptitude and fitness for that profession, his appointment means more to him than anything that can come to you or me at our time of life. Some of them leave the service after they have received their education and can earn larger salaries in civil life. That should not be done or permitted if possible to prevent it. I make all the boys who enter my examinations promise that, if successful, they will enter the academy and never voluntarily leave the service. That pledge may not mean much, but they can not enter the examinations until they make it.

A young man of good, fair, average ability, who works hard and behaves himself, can keep up his studies and graduate with his class; and with the same ability and attention to his duties he will receive his promotions in regular order. Some of them may, in later years, regret that they chose that profession. They may think they might have made more money in some other profession or in business. That is true. They might have done better and they might have done much worse. Some professional men earn larger incomes. But the average lawyer, physician, minister, journalist, and teacher makes much less. Most business men fail some time during their careers, and the most successful of them have years of worry before they reach easy circumstances. Our military and naval officers have no occasion to worry about the future. They are assured of life work and of a livelihood. If they are injured or their health fails, they are retired on a comfortable pension. And when they become a little enfeebled by age and service they are also retired with three-quarters pay during life. When they die their widows are fairly well taken care of. Their Uncle Samuel is a kind and considerate master. In what other profession or business is a man so fully assured of agreeable work and a comfortable living while on earth?

I make these suggestions not in a spirit of censure or criticism. I take off my hat to the brave, patriotic, and efficient officer or enlisted man, on land or sea. But I do not admit that theirs is a life of self-abnegation and sacrifice for the good of the nation; and when they are demanding more pay the plain people throughout the country, who are slaving and economizing to make ends meet and pay their taxes, should be considered.

Of the $3,700,000 put on this bill by the Senate for increase of pay in the Navy, about $2,000,000 thereof go to the officers and about $1,700,000 to the men. I respectfully submit that the men do not get their share. In the Army bill a few days ago the salaries of Army officers were raised $500 all along the line, and in this bill the salaries of naval officers are raised to equalize those in the Army; and when they are on sea they get 10 per cent additional. Next year the Army officers will demand 10 per cent additional when they are on land. They all want bonuses for doing what they are hired to do.

This bill was large when it left the House, and has been made larger in the Senate by $17,357,346.60, and is now upward of $123,000,000. When and where will this wild reign of extravagance stop? It ought to be checked right here. This report ought to be rejected by such an emphatic vote that the conferees will understand that the House will not submit to many of these unnecessary and wasteful expenditures.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record exactly upon this point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER]? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, what is the condition as to time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Each side has twenty-one minutes remaining.

Mr. FOSS. Well, I yield six minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS].

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Speaker, I have been interested in the remarks just made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DRISCOLL]. I think no one will doubt that he believes in simplicity, but simplicity in the military service means regulation, and when we provide by regulation that officers shall provide themselves with uniforms and other necessary things for their service they have to pay for them, and everyone knows they have to pay more for them now than they did ten years ago, while their pay is exactly what it was ten years ago. Therefore that is a reason why their pay should be increased. I have not had the time to go over all the details of this conference report, but there is one thing in it which specially appeals to me, and that is the provision which provides for the increase of pay of officers serving on board ship, on seagoing ships, and those serving in sections outside continental limits. The Army provides that officers serving beyond the limits of the United States shall receive 10 per cent increase in their pay. There is no such provision in the Navy pay table to-day. There ought to be, for there is exactly the same reason why the naval officer serving in Manila or Porto Rico should receive additional pay that there is for an Army officer. But in addition to that the officer who serves at sea should receive an increase in his pay, because when he is on shore he receives commutation for quarters or quarters. He receives his light and his heat, but when he goes to sea his family has to leave the quarters which he has occupied and move to private quarters for which he has to pay.

Therefore that additional burden comes on him at once, and in addition to that he has to pay his mess bill which largely increases his ordinary expenses of living. Further than that, most of the Members in this House, in my judgment, do not appreciate the burden which is placed on officers at sea and serving in foreign countries for entertaining purposes. I have had a little experience in that way, and the necessary expenses which the officers are put to for entertaining purposes are so considerable that they become a real burden unless the officer has means outside of his pay. For that reason I sincerely hope that that provision which provides for 10 per cent increase in the pay for officers serving at sea and outside the United States will certainly be adopted. I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that probably 90 per cent of the officers of the Army are receiving either commutation for quarters or are serving beyond the limits of the United States where they receive this extra pay, while 60 per cent at least of the officers of the Navy are serving on seagoing ships where they do not receive any additional pay, certainly no pay commensurate with the increased expense to which they are put on account of the manner in which they are obliged to live. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I hope there will be no failure in adopting this provision of the conference report. [Applause.]

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, if the House defeats the motion to agree to suspend the rules and adopt the conference report, it will not interfere in the least with a final agreement on any meritorious proposition now involved in the report. If the conference report is disagreed to, the next step would simply be for the House to vote to further insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendments. The bill with the amendments would go back to conference and perhaps, when it comes to the House again, the House will have an opportunity to consider, independent of the meritorious propositions that are bottled up in the report, these propositions which the House as yet has had no opportunity to consider.

I am referring now to the legislative provisions embodied in the Senate amendments. I insist in all seriousness, gentlemen, that when we are enacting legislation that will impose upon the people a new tax burden, not for next year alone, but for all time to come, it should have the most serious consideration of both branches of Congress before it becomes a law. I criticised the conference report on the Army bill a few days ago for the same reason. At that time none of us were informed as to what that conference report embodied. We, or some of us, are just now beginning to discover what was included in that report. Much to the surprise of Members of this House, we now find that by adopting that conference report en bloc, embodying the legislation it contained, imposing a permanent burden upon the people and the revenues of the Government, we not only increased the pay of the officers of the Army, but we also automatically increased the pay of about 280 officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service and 61 officers on the retired list.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in consequence of the result of that action the officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service have had their salaries automatically increased by our adopting a conference report embodying this legislation, concerning which we were all ignorant. The House had no opportunity to consider that legislation. We did this, too, notwithstanding the fact that at this very session of Congress we passed a bill, and it became a law on the 16th of April, increasing the rank and pay of some of the officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service. In adopting the conference report on the Army bill we gave some of the officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service two increases of pay at this session. This fact alone should be sufficient to prompt the House to reject this report, in order that we may investigate what it does and then consider some of its provisions upon their merits. Otherwise we may again unconsciously create permanent obligations against the revenues with no knowledge as to their extent or the necessity for so doing. The Committee on Appropriations to-day was called upon to consider an estimate for an appropriation of $20,000 for the balance of this fiscal year because of the increase of pay in the Army conference report to the officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service.

The legislation which is embodied in this bill goes into effect immediately. It does not go into effect when the appropriations become available on the 1st of July. Consequently, we will have, because of changing the law on an appropriation bill regarding the pay of officers of the Army, the Navy, and of the Revenue-Cutter Service, to carry deficiency appropriations for the remainder of this fiscal year.

Mr. Speaker, I submit that when the conferees agree to legislation of this character, proposed by the other House, that that is bad enough, but when conferees representing both Houses incorporate in a conference report legislation which has not been considered by either House, it becomes the duty of both Houses to resent the unauthorized action of the conferees in that respect and assert their right to insist that their conferees shall not, upon their own motion, initiate or agree to legislation that has not been proposed or considered in either House.

Let me read the provision which the conferees have enacted—not the House nor the Senate. A conference is for what purpose? It is for the purpose of bringing the two Houses together on matters that are in disagreement between them. A conference is not for the purpose of initiating legislation. In this case the Senate added to the naval appropriation bill a provision creating a new marine regiment. Has any Member of this House considered the necessity of creating this new regiment of marines? Has the subject been discussed here to-day? And yet when we adopt this conference report we are imposing upon the revenues of the Government a perpetual charge to meet the pay of the enlisted men and officers of this new regiment. Has anybody stated to the House why we should have a new regiment of marines?

Mr. FOSS. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; not a word [laughter] as to the necessity, and no opportunity is afforded us to consider the question of the necessity for this additional regiment. Gentlemen, that is not the way we should legislate or vote away the people's money. I now yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSS]. I am answering my own question, Mr. Speaker, and not the inquiry of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSS]. [Laughter.]

Mr. FOSS. I want to ask the gentleman whether as a conferee he has not many a time agreed to Senate amendments without bringing them back to the House for consideration?

Mr. TAWNEY. Unquestionably. Conferees agree to Senate amendments, but when a Senate amendment involves legislation of the character carried in this bill and on the Army bill, which imposes an additional burden, not for next year alone, but for all time, I say that in all good conscience the conferees ought to give their House an opportunity to consider the proposition. But that is not what I was discussing. I was asking why is it necessary to increase the Marine Corps by adding to it an additional regiment, and thus imposing this permanent charge upon the people and the revenues of the Government of the United States?

The Senate did it, and the conferees on the part of the House agreed to it. Then what follows? A proposition was originated by the conferees appropriating the amount necessary to enable the Department to pay the enlisted men and officers the increase of pay thus authorized, without authority of either House. This proposition reads as follows: "Add at the end of amendment 67 a new paragraph;" not an amendment to amendment 67, but a new paragraph. Just as would be done in considering a proposition here on an appropriation bill. If a gentleman has an amendment to offer to the paragraph, he offers it as an amendment to the paragraph; but if he has an entirely new proposition he must under the rules of the House offer it as a separate, distinct paragraph; and here in this instance, the conferees on the part of the House and the Senate added to the amendment which was in disagreement between the two Houses an entirely new proposition, a proposition which is intended to and does appropriate the money to meet the new authorization in the form of legislation that has just been agreed to between the two Houses.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is no man on this floor who knows better than the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs that the proposition to appropriate, in conference, for the increased pay for the Marine Corps was not a matter in difference between the two Houses, and was therefore beyond the jurisdiction of the conferees. But notwithstanding that, they not only propose to appropriate, but they propose also to legislate. Let me read this new paragraph:

To meet the increase in pay of the Marine Corps provided in the act making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909—

They knew that the bill for the increase of the pay of the Army was signed yesterday, before this conference report was submitted to the House; but in anticipation of that they wrote in a proviso for the increased pay of the Marine Corps, authorized by the act which was signed only yesterday by the President of the United States.

Mr. FOSS. May I ask the gentleman—

Mr. TAWNEY. One minute.

And in section 1612 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, for officers on the active list, officers on the retired list, enlisted men on the active list, and enlisted men on the retired list, $302,755.55 is hereby appropriated.

Then—

Provided, That so much of the foregoing appropriation as is needed to pay the increase for the remainder of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, shall be immediately available.

Who ever heard of a conference committee adopting an original proposition of this kind, appropriating, upon their own motion, for an increase of pay to any branch of the public service for the next fiscal year, and then by a proviso making a deficiency appropriation by making so much of the appropriation as is necessary immediately available? Now, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. FOSS. I want to ask the gentleman whether or not the Army bill did not carry an appropriation for the increase of the Marine Corps, and if the Committee on Naval Affairs should not make this appropriation for it on the regular appropriation bill, where it is always made, where, in what bill, and by whose committee would it be made?

Mr. TAWNEY. It matters not, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. FOSS. It does matter a good deal.

Mr. TAWNEY. It matters not whose committee makes it. I simply say that the conference committee has not the power to make it; it requires the action of both branches of Congress. No conference committee has the power to make an appropriation unless authorized by law. If you state that the conferees had that power, then when legislation is enacted creating a new service or legislation changing existing law to increase salaries and neither House appropriates for the increase, the conferees, upon their own motion, may make the necessary appropriation.

In other words, according to the logic of the gentleman from Illinois, it would be entirely competent for the conferees on the part of the House and the Senate to say how much shall be appropriated to meet the requirements of any law if neither House had previously considered the matter.

Why, it is the most illogical and most indefensible proposition that I have known to be urged by any man upon this floor.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I submit that in view of our experience the other day on the Army bill; in view of the fact that the new legislation has not been discussed, that the necessity for many of these increases has not even been mentioned, this House is not justified in indorsing the action of the conferees in so far as they have adopted this new legislation creating permanent charges against the revenue of the Government, but especially should the House reject the report on the ground that the committee has exceeded its jurisdiction. To do otherwise would be equivalent to our abdicating all of our legislative functions.

Mr. Speaker, if you concede that the conferees in this instance were justified in doing what they have done, then here in the closing hours of the session, when conference report after conference report will have to be considered by the House, if the conferees exceed their jurisdiction as they have done in this case, none of us will know until after the adjournment of Congress what provisions have been enacted by us or what the effect of their enactment will be.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that it is of the gravest importance, and that no one will suffer any loss, and no meritorious provision in this bill will have to be eliminated from the final report if this report is now rejected. The House conferees will continue their conference, while on matters the conferees had no right to consider and on matters of legislation permanent in character this House ought to have and would have an opportunity to consider. We should do this for the purpose of determining, first, whether there is any necessity for this increased service, and if there is any necessity for it, the extent to which that service should be increased.

Therefore I hope that this House will vote down the report and give the House an opportunity further to insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendments, when we will then have an opportunity to consider this question.

One word more. I call attention to the fact that the House bill, as it came from the conference, is increased $17,000,000, which will make our naval budget for next year as great as that of any country of the world. We have criticised the Senate, the public has criticised the Senate for voting millions upon millions of dollars without any consideration whatever. What man on the floor of this House has had any opportunity to consider the necessity for this proposed increase of $17,000,000? I submit, and I express the hope, that the House will reject the report and further insist upon its disagreeing votes.

Mr. FOSS. How much time have I left, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has sixteen minutes remaining.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman allow me to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. FOSS. Not in my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota has three minutes remaining.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the gentleman contend that the appropriation of money to pay for these increased officers, made by the conferees, is not germane to the subject of increasing the number of officers?

Mr. TAWNEY. It is germane.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Then wherein have the conferees done wrong on that particular point?

Mr. TAWNEY. Is it competent for the conferees to make an appropriation that has not been submitted to either House?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I do not think it is.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is what they have done. The law provides a method for giving to these officers and enlisted men of the Marine Corps their increased pay when the law is enacted and approved. No gentleman of this House need fear that any officer, either in the Army, the Navy, or the Marine Corps, will fail to get his estimate here for this increased pay before we adjourn. Why, within twenty-four hours after the ink was dry that wrote the signature of the President to the Army bill, we had an estimate here for the increase of pay to the officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service and officers of the Army. There is no trouble about that, and they will be carried in the deficiency appropriation bill, where they belong.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I should like the attention of the House for a few minutes. The gentleman from Minnesota seems to object because the House conferees have come back here with a full and complete report on the naval appropriation bill, which has already been adopted by the Senate. I ask the gentlemen upon this side of the Chamber whether the condition of affairs in this House is timely for the opening up of all these matters for discussion before the House? If you vote down this conference report it may mean 108 roll calls here upon this floor, and I want to say to the gentleman from Minnesota that he will come back here as a conferee upon this bill with a full and complete agreement before this House, and ask this House to adopt that report. The condition of affairs in this Chamber is such that that must necessarily be so. Why does the gentleman stand here and object to our agreeing to a provision increasing the Marine Corps?

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. FOSS. I can not be interrupted now.

Mr. TAWNEY. I want to answer the gentleman in regard to the number of roll calls. The gentleman can not scare me or any Member of the House.

Mr. FOSS. The "gentleman from Illinois" does not want to scare the gentleman.

Mr. TAWNEY. He knows that if this conference report is voted down that the motion will be to further insist on the disagreement, and he takes it back to conference, and he can bring in a complete agreement as to all matters.

Mr. FOSS. Yes, but the House will not have any time for the consideration of the provisions separately. The gentleman says "come back again with a complete agreement," and he would be the first man to say "Why did you agree in full to these amendments?" I want to say to the gentleman from Minnesota that he is quibbling over a very small matter. If we do not appropriate for the increased pay of these men this House has already enacted into law in the Army bill, what committee will report it? The Committee on Appropriations. The Committee on Naval Appropriations, and that is the only question before this House. It is simply what committee shall make the appropriation—the Committee on Appropriations or the Committee on Naval Affairs, which has always made the appropriations for the pay of the officers and the pay of the men. It is nothing but a mere squibble, and that is all.

Now, we agreed on this provision as to the Marine Corps. The officers of the Marine Corps came and said they wanted 3,000 men. We reported a bill making provision for 1,500 men, but we could not get consideration of it. The Senate put on a provision for 750 men, and that 750 we have agreed to in conference. So much for that part of the bill.

Now, there is another thing I want to say here, that we have not put in a single provision in this bill that gives the Navy one penny more than the Army, not one single dollar. We have increased the officers just the same as the Army conferees increased it in the Army bill. The conferees on the naval bill waited for the action of the House the other day. We would not consider the increased pay of the officers until after the action of the House on the Army bill, and then we took the provisions of the Army bill and wrote them into the naval bill, and if there is a man here who says that we did more for the Navy than was done for the Army, let him stand up and say so now.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Well, I say so.

Mr. FOSS. All right, in what respect?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. You give to that part of the Navy sailing out from the shores of the United States a 10 per cent increase.

Mr. FOSS. And the Army bill gives the Army 10 per cent increase—

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; but we limit it to certain localities.

Mr. FOSS. I will read it and let the Members on the floor decide whether or not you do. I read from the Army bill:

That increase of pay for service beyond the limits of the States comprising the Union and the territory of the United States contiguous thereto shall be now as provided by law.

That is 10 per cent. Now, let me read another section, Senate amendment 33, agreed to in the Army bill, adopted by the House, whether the House knew anything about it or not.

For additional 20 per cent increase to enlisted men on foreign service, $767,000: Provided, That officers and enlisted men who have served on Army transports in the Philippine Archipelago any time since May 6, 1900—or who may hereafter serve, shall be entitled to receive the same rate of pay as is provided by law for officers and enlisted men at shore stations beyond the limits of the United States.

There it is written in the law; 10 per cent increase the moment the Army leaves the continental shores of the United States. That is all we have done for the Navy. As has been stated here, the moment a naval officer goes aboard his ship all allowances are cut off, whereas the Army officer has his allowances or his family occupies Government quarters. When a naval officer goes onto a ship, all allowances are cut off; he has to provide for his family, and he has to provide entertainment for foreign officers and officials in foreign ports. He is at a great expense. If we should increase it 20 per cent, they would not then receive any more than the Army, because they get allowances if they do not have Government quarters. Now, what more have we done? We have increased the enlisted men 10 per cent. What did the Army do? Why, the gentleman from Virginia told us a moment ago, and it stands here undisputed. You increased the pay of the enlisted men 35 per cent, and all we are asking is simply 10 per cent for the seamen of the Navy.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Will the gentleman state just how much difference there is in the pay? Do not talk about per cent, but talk about what the pay is.

Mr. FOSS. The pay of the landsman in the Navy when he enters is $16. When he becomes an ordinary seaman it is $19. Now, the private got $13, and then he gets an increase of 35 per cent under this bill. If you compare the seaman with the private on the shore, that is the situation; but in the Army transport service, where they employ seamen, what do they pay their seamen? Thirty-five dollars a month. I have it here.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They are not part of the Army; they are not enlisted at all. They are hired men.

Mr. FOSS. The Revenue-Cutter Service give their seamen anywhere from $30 to $37. The Coast Survey give them from $25 to $40.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. But there are no allowances with that at all. They are simply hired men.

Mr. FOSS. In the Light-House Service $30 and $40, and even $50 a month, whereas the enlisted man enters the Navy at $16, and when he becomes an ordinary seaman he gets $19, and we are increasing his pay 10 per cent. Now, in view of the fact that we are equalizing the pay of the Navy and the Army, and it is an equalization, and I stand here to say it is nothing more than equalizing the two, I ask this House to stand by the conferees and adopt this report. Mr. Speaker, I call for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to suspend the rules and agree to the conference report.

The question was taken.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 139, nays 124, answered "present" 4, not voting 120, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

CHILD-LABOR BILL.

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules, take from the Speaker's desk Senate bill 4812, popularly known as the "child-labor bill," insist upon the House amendment to the Senate bill, and agree to a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves to suspend the rules and take from the Speaker's table the bill indicated, popularly known as the "child-labor bill," insist on the House amendment, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The bill (S. 4812) to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I demand a second; but it seems to me the Speaker ought to order the Senate amendments to be read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the action of the Senate on the House amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate disagrees to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4812) to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia and asks a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That Mr. DOLLIVER, Mr. PENROSE, and Mr. DANIEL be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Attest:

CHARLES G. BENNETT, Secretary,
By H. M. ROSE, Assistant Secretary.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second, for the purpose of getting an explanation of the exact status of the matter.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules a second is ordered. The gentleman from New York is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Mississippi is entitled to twenty minutes.

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. WILLIAMS. This is the bill we passed the other day?

Mr. OLCOTT. This is the bill we passed which was a substitute for the bill that the Senate had passed. It went over to the Senate, and the Senate declined to accept the bill that we passed for theirs, and now they simply send it back to us and ask for a conference.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then the whole result of this motion to suspend the rules would be to grant that conference—

Mr. OLCOTT. That is all.

Mr. WILLIAMS. So that the House could insist upon its bill?

Mr. OLCOTT. That is all.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I shall surrender all the balance of my time, and I hope that the motion will pass at once.

The question was put, and, in the opinion of the Chair, a majority having voted therefor, the rules were suspended and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the following conferees.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. OLCOTT of New York, Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio, and Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 6190. An act authorizing a resurvey of certain townships in the State of Wyoming—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 20784. An act to authorize additional aids to navigation in the Light-House Establishment, and for other purposes.

PROVIDING ADDITIONAL PROTECTION FOR OWNERS OF PATENTS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the following bill with one amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska moves to suspend the rules and pass the following House bill with an amendment. The Clerk will report the bill as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7653) to amend section 4919 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to provide additional protection for owners of patents of the United States, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4919 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following:

"And whenever an invention described in and covered by a patent of the United States shall hereafter be used by the United States, without license of the owner thereof, such owner may recover reasonable compensation for such use by suit in the Court of Claims: Provided, however, That in any such suit the United States may avail itself of any and all defenses, general or special, which might be pleaded by a defendant in an action for infringement, as set forth in title 60 of the Revised Statutes, or otherwise."

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. KÜSTERMANN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second, and I understand there is an amendment. Has the amendment been read?

The SPEAKER. Under the rules a second is ordered. The gentleman from Nebraska is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Wisconsin is entitled to twenty minutes.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, this bill as originally introduced contained a provision—

Mr. WILLIAMS. Was that amendment read?

Mr. HINSHAW. Yes; I will explain it—contained a provision, "and whenever an invention described in and covered by a patent of the United States has been or shall be used by the United States." The amendment made by the Committee on Patents, unanimously reported, struck out the words "has been or" and inserted the word "hereafter," so that it will read, "and whenever an invention described in and covered by a patent of the United States shall hereafter be used by the United States," and so forth.

The object of this bill is to provide a remedy for the owners of patents which have been appropriated by the United States Government without compensation. It simply provides that the Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine and assess the amount of damages which the patentee has suffered by the unjust appropriation of the patent. All other civilized countries, I think, provide this by statute, but in this country the United States Government has been in the habit of appropriating the patents of men who have made inventions of great merit and value, which have been used in the Navy and in the Army, in the Post Office Department, and in various other governmental functions, without the slightest compensation. The law only authorizes the payment of these damages where there is an express contract between the United States Government and the patentee, or where there are such relations existing between the patentee and the Government as will imply a contract.

The result, however, has been, under the management of affairs by our executive officers, that patentees have never, or in rare instances, been able to recover any damages whatever. This does not provide for condemnation proceedings on the part of the United States Government, but it simply provides that the Government may take possession of a patent and use it, and the patentee may have his recourse only in the Court of Claims, and there the amount which the court shall find as a just and reasonable compensation shall be allowed.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Can the gentleman give the House a case of that kind, or of any kind, that this bill will cover—an Army officer or Navy officer?

Mr. HINSHAW. Oh, I suppose patents in relation to guns, ammunition, cannon, and these devices for selling postage stamps, and devices for the catching of the mails by trains as they pass stations, and such devices as that.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman knows we passed a resolution here last session directing the Bureau of Commerce and Labor to investigate the ownership of a number of patents claimed by Army officers and naval officers that were discovered in line of duty and when they were working by the direction of the Government of the United States and using the fuel, money, time, opportunity, and so forth, of the Government.

Mr. HINSHAW. That is not covered by this bill, I think.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. By what the gentleman says, I think it is.

Mr. HINSHAW. This simply provides that when a man has made an invention and has received a patent for it and it is appropriated by the Government he shall have the same chance for a remedy that he now has against an infringer who is not the United States Government.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman, as I understood him, said an Army officer or naval officer.

Mr. HINSHAW. I said where some one had made an invention for the Navy or for the Army, for the Post-Office Department, or for any other of the great Departments of the Government.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Suppose he is a naval officer, and with the time, machinery, and opportunity, and by direction of the Government he has discovered something and takes a patent out in his own name and the United States Government claims it, then what?

Mr. HINSHAW. The bill which the gentleman refers to may possibly cover that proposition.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. HINSHAW. Yes.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Does this bill cover cases in the past or in the future?

Mr. HINSHAW. Only in the future. I said a moment ago that that part as to the past was stricken out of the bill. It was urgently sought that this should cover a period of six years backward, but our committee thought that it would open a wide field for controversy, and we provided only for the future.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Why do you not leave the patentee to the remedy he now has? He comes before Congress, his claims are here presented and passed upon by the Committee on Claims or such other committee to whom the claim may be referred.

Mr. HINSHAW. Because he practically has no remedy at all at the present time.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Congress has the remedy in its hand.

Mr. HINSHAW. Congress has plenary power, but rarely exercises it.

I want to yield five minutes to the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. CURRIER], and I will reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CURRIER. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is simply to give some compensation to the owner of a patent which has been appropriated by the Government by permitting him to go to the Court of Claims. The Court of Claims now has jurisdiction only of matters of contract, express or implied. The courts hold that an infringement of a patent is a tort; so that the Court of Claims has no jurisdiction whatever. The gentleman from Tennessee—

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question there?

Mr. CURRIER. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I assume that the gentleman is familiar with the provisions of the bill. The language of the bill, in line 7, seems to indicate that it is in the power of a person having a claim against the United States to make a claim for things used in the past.

Mr. CURRIER. Not at all. That has been amended. It is now made so that it is for patents "hereafter" used. This bill has been twice unanimously reported from the committee.

Now, the question that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] referred to. Let me say that the Supreme Court of the United States passed on a matter of that kind, and held that the Government has the right, without compensation, to take the patents that are secured by men in the Government employ, using the Government's time, the Government's material and money.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And yet to such parties as obtained these patents the Government is paying for the use of the patents.

Mr. CURRIER. The only thing that the court guards against—that is, when the United States issues a patent to the inventor it gives him certain property rights, and the Government ought to respect its own grant and be the very last to infringe upon it.

Mr. GARRETT. Is there any danger that if this bill passes the Government will not wait and make a contract with the owner of the patent, but will just go on and take it?

Mr. CURRIER. That is what it does now; not merely in guns, but in everything.

Mr. GARRETT. I understand the rule in regard to the Army and the Navy.

Mr. CURRIER. I am speaking of patents generally; anything that the Government thinks is useful and appropriate. It is said that the Government ought to have the right to appropriate all patents that are needed for the national defense or for any other object, and nobody questions that right, and this bill seeks in no way to restrict it.

Mr. GARRETT. I question the right, but do not question the power.

Mr. CURRIER. No one desires to enact any legislation which will allow an inventor to enjoin the Government or its officers from appropriating his patent. This bill recognizes and concedes that right. But we do feel that there ought to be legislation which, when the Government has appropriated the patent, will allow the inventor to go to some court somewhere for reasonable compensation.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Can the gentleman give the House a single case where the Government has appropriated a man's patent and he has not been compensated for it thereafter?

Mr. CURRIER. Surely; and let me cite a case now. The case of Russell against the United States (182 U. S., p. 516, 1900).

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What was that?

Mr. CURRIER. It there appeared that at the Government's invitation Russell exhibited his patented invention to a board of officers appointed by the Secretary of War. The Government announced that it would adopt and use a device embodying his invention. Prior to the adoption and use of the device Russell communicated his patent to the War Department, showing that his patent covered the device and tendered the use of his invention to the Government for reasonable compensation. The Government proceeded to use the device without denying Russell's right to compensation, but with the remark that he should seek his remedy by some means other than Executive action. And the Russell case is only a sample case; one of many.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Did we not make an appropriation to pay Russell not long ago?

Mr. CURRIER. I am not sure.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I think we did.

Mr. CURRIER. I do not know; I do not remember any case since I have been here of Congress appropriating money or compensation to an inventor except some matter that went through the Court of Claims in which the gentleman from New York took an interest.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HINSHAW. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to ask a question: Does this bill provide that the Court of Claims shall give a judgment or simply a finding of facts, leaving a subsequent appropriation by Congress necessary?

Mr. HINSHAW. The bill does not provide anything on that subject. It provides that the owner may recover reasonable compensation for the use by a suit in the Court of Claims.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. That implies a judgment, does it not?

Mr. WILLIAMS. From that I take it that the court would merely make a finding, because a court can not order money paid out of the Treasury of the United States, the Constitution providing that all money paid out shall be by course of law.

Mr. PERKINS. Does not the gentleman know that it is the practice when the Court of Claims has awarded any judgment against the United States, for Congress to appropriate for it as a matter of course, on judgments of the Court of Claims?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am very sorry to say, Mr. Speaker, that I do not know that to be a fact. There are hanging up now against the Government of the United States many claims where there is a favorable finding by the Court of Claims, and Congress subsequently does not make appropriations, or else in the slowest possible sort of a way. That is especially true when the claims are Southern war claims.

Mr. TIRRELL. Or French spoliation claims.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But I do not want to take up time on that question. I am in favor of this bill. I do say that a great government ought to be honest, just like anybody else. The Government ought not to take the fruit of a man's intellectual labor away from him without giving him compensation for it. It is absolutely thievish and dishonest for the United States to use a man's idea for the benefit of the United States Government and give him no sort of way for being compensated for the benefit which he has conferred upon the Government and upon the people.

Mr. KÜSTERMANN. Mr. Speaker, being somewhat versed in foreign languages, let me give you a translation of this bill in plain English: "We, the Government of the United States, through our agents, the heads of the different Departments, have not given to some firms holding numerous patents as much as they demanded. We are sorry for it. We repent. We want to change our ways, and being afraid that we might again fall into temptation to do wrong, we authorize the courts to make us do what is right."

I am entirely against the provisions of this bill. I am not in favor of putting more work upon the already overburdened Court of Claims. This is not a bill that concerns the people of the United States. It is not for the general benefit of our people. Only a few people are concerned in it, and to judge from parties who called on me regarding this bill I have an idea that it is solely in the interest of one or two firms that through this bill are trying to get more than they are entitled to. If that is the case, if only one or two firms seek relief in this way, this should have been put on the Private Calendar and not on the House Calendar. It is class legislation pure and simple.

A poor man can not go to the Court of Claims and pay the expense of a lawyer admitted to practice in that court. Those lawyers are expensive luxuries. But you may say that a poor man does not hold a patent, and you are right. Under our very defective patent laws no poor man can hold a patent for any length of time against the wishes of a man of wealth. While he may rejoice over the document that he receives from the Patent Office; while he may admire the gold seal; while he may dream of riches that are coming to him, of silk dresses for his wife and pie for his children, his dreams will cease when, only a few days later, letters reach him saying, "You will be sued for infringement if you put your patent on the market," and he will either drop it or accept a paltry sum for it.

I do sincerely hope that the time may come when the fruits of genius will be reaped by the real inventor. What we need as much as a tariff revision is a revision of our patent laws.

But to return to the bill. Let me say that our Departments are already doing their best to protect the owners of patents. I hold in my hand a contract which the Post-Office authorities enter into with those who furnish articles used in the Department. It says:

That the articles herein agreed to be supplied shall not infringe any patent of which the said party of the second part is not the patentee or assignee, and which he is not lawfully entitled to sell or transfer for the purposes of this contract, and that the said party of the second part will at all times well and truly save, keep, and bear harmless and fully indemnify the United States, and any and all of its officers and agents, from and for all damages and claims for damages, costs, and expenses, in law and equity, that may at any time arise or be set up on account of any infringement of the patent rights of any person or persons by the use by the Post-Office Department, or any of its officers or agents, of any of the articles agreed to be supplied under this contract.

If there is any further protection provided let us give it to the Government of the United States. Look at our canceling machines. We are being robbed; we are paying exorbitant prices for the rent of those machines, and the Government should be protected instead of those who have gathered up a lot of patents so as to extort unreasonable profits. I sincerely hope that this bill will not pass. [Applause.] I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the provisions of this bill, if enacted into law, would work serious damage to the Government. To-day the Census Office is using tabulating machines. I do not know who the patentee of these machines is, and I do not pretend to know, but they have already endeavored to embarrass the Government by compelling it to discontinue the use of these machines. I have a recollection of numerous cases being called to the attention of the Committee on Appropriations by men who have said that they were the authors of certain patents that were being used by the Government, and demanding from the Government fabulous fees as due them because of the fact that the Government was using what they claimed to be theirs.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman permit me an interruption?

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Granting all that is true, does not the gentleman think for that reason there ought to be a court where these people could enter and where the Government could be heard upon evidence, and if they were pretenders and trying to get something for nothing, that would appear?

Mr. MADDEN. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that if we are to enact a law on the subject at all it ought to be enacted so that every person who is called upon to vote on the question will understand just what is sought to be secured by the enactment of the law. My judgment is that under the language of this bill the Government would be called upon to pay not only for the use of patents in the future, but for any use it may have had in the past.

Mr. HINSHAW. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. MADDEN. If the Government is using a patent belonging to anyone to-day, the continuance of the use of that patent from to-day on, assuming that the bill should become a law, would compel the Government to begin to pay from to-day at least, and perhaps compel it to pay for any use it may have had of the patent in days gone by.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Why should not the Government pay?

Mr. HINSHAW. It may be that it should, but this only provides that it should pay for use hereafter.

Mr. MADDEN. It does not seem to me that the bill is sufficiently clear as to what the Government would be obligated to do, and until we have a bill that does make it clear no legislation should be enacted on the subject.

Mr. KÜSTERMANN. I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES].

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the House that this bill is a step in the right direction, but it is not worded right and does not go far enough. When the Government takes a man's property the Government should pay for it, but there is no discrimination here at all in this bill. It says "whenever an invention described in and covered by a patent of the United States." Now, the Government is claiming the right to use the smokeless-powder patents, powder patents taken out by an Army or a Navy officer in line of duty, and the Government issued a patent in the name of that officer. He claims to be, and would be, under the words of this bill, the "owner," but the Government of the United States also "claims" to be the owner, but its patent reads otherwise.

There are similar instances, and only last session, Mr. Chairman, the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee [Mr. TAWNEY], or the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH], after the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HERBURN] and myself had discussed the smokeless-powder patent matter, thought so much of it as to refer the matter for full investigation to the Commerce and Labor Department to investigate and report, and that has been done, I am told, but the Department has not reported. Why no report to Congress?

Mr. SHERLEY. The bill itself gives to the Government the right to plead any such defense, and that cures such a case as the gentleman suggests.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. But here is a man that claims to be the owner. The statute says the owner, and yet the Government of the United States claims to be the "owner," and he has even gone so far as to take his patent and sell rights in it to foreign nations, and they to-day are making smokeless powder and may use it in wars against the United States Government.

Mr. MADDEN. The Government of the United States paid this man for his time while he was claiming to make the patent.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Exactly. He was doing the Government's work and the Government told him to do it, and yet he is claiming all the benefit, and under this statute he can go into court and sue the United States Government because on the face of the patent he is the "owner" and the Government of the United States is not. Now, the United States has some rights, and that is what I speak for. If this man is the owner, let us have that point adjudicated, but this says if on the face of the patent—

Mr. DALZELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. DALZELL. I think the point that the gentleman attempts to make is covered by the bill, the last proviso of which says:

Provided, however, That in any such case the United States may avail itself of any and all defenses, general or special, which might be pleaded by a defendant in an action for infringement, as set forth in Title LX of the Revised Statutes, or otherwise.

And the Supreme Court of the United States has held that it would be a defense to a suit that the party made the invention out of the time or means of the party sued.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. But there are no words here that expressly protect and literally give the Government of the United States that right, and that I want, and made sure. The language may do it, and yet here we are, innocently trying to be honest with everybody and with the Government, about to pass a law that I should say may, in all probability, mulct the Federal Government in millions of dollars. Give the right to sue, but do not limit the Government to pleas, as in cases of "infringement," which this bill does.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KÜSTERMANN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE].

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, the bill carries with it the implication that the Government is dishonest enough, or, as the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] expressed it, is thievish enough to appropriate to itself, without right, inventions that are valuable to the inventor. I have been a member of the Committee on Claims for many years in this House, a committee to which is referred claims against the Government. Yet in the course of about eight years I can only remember—and I think my memory serves me well—that there were but two cases in which inventors presented to Congress claims based on the allegation that our Government unjustly appropriated to itself the use of the invention, and one of those two cases—

Mr. McGAVIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. For a question; yes, sir.

Mr. McGAVIN. Having served during the last Congress with the gentleman on the Committee on Claims, I want to ask him if it is not a fact that the Krag-Jørgensen people have a claim before that committee and have been presenting that claim for fifteen years, and the Government has mulcted them out of something like $300,000, and all they wanted was an opportunity to go into the Court of Claims, and they have been refused that right?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, that claim is probably one of the two to which I was about to refer. Congress has ample power to pass on these questions. Its committees can either recommend a direct appropriation or send the claim to the Court of Claims for findings or adjudication. The employees of the Government have been knocking at our door year in and year out, endeavoring to secure the passage of a bill that would afford them relief in cases of accidents in which they were injured through the fault or negligence of the Government. Yet no relief could be obtained. Numerous cases have arisen in which some unfortunate employee has been injured—some crippled for life—yet they can not get Congress to heed their meritorious claims or even get an opportunity to go to the Court of Claims. Before we oblige one or two inventors or persons succeeding to their interests, and whose claims are exceedingly doubtful, I believe we ought to throw open the doors of the Court of Claims to a more deserving class of people—the employees and workmen of the Government who, being injured in the public service without fault on their part, and through the neglect or perhaps recklessness of the Government, come to us with meritorious cases for relief.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. May not the reason that they do not have any more claims of this character down there in that committee grow out of the fact that it is almost impossible to get the Government to pay a claim?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. No; if they had a just claim they would come here and present it.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, they have been knocking at the doors of the Committee on Claims, to my knowledge, for years, and have failed to receive that justice to which they are entitled.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The gentleman is a very useful and efficient member of the Committee on Claims, and belongs to the majority. Why does not the Committee on Claims act?

Mr. GRAHAM. Because Members like the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE] would oppose those things.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Not at all. I never have opposed a just claim in the Committee on Claims. I have endeavored to pass on each case upon its merits and on that alone. I have favored every good bill and opposed every bad one. I will be the first one to stand in favor of a claim if the evidence shows the claim to be just.

Mr. GRAHAM. I may be misleading in making the statement that the gentleman opposed these claims.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I accept the gentleman's apology.

Mr. GRAHAM. I say they have been opposed, and opposed vigorously, so much so that these claims are pigeonholed in the committee.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I think we paid the Russell claim a short time ago.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I must decline to yield further. Mr. Speaker, the time allotted does not permit a careful examination of the bill, such as should be given to it, nor can we know the motives that may underlie the measure. I do not wish to impugn the motive. I do not wish to question it, and have no desire to do that, but I do believe there is time enough between now and the next session of Congress to carefully consider the advisability of passing such a measure as this. This bill deserves more careful thought than can be given it in the hurried way in which it necessarily must be considered now. We are almost in the closing hours of the session. Who will say that we are not venturing on a kind of legislation which if passed now, hastily and hurriedly, we will later on have cause to regret? I am opposed at this time to the passage of this bill, which, it seems to me, is pressed on our attention in favor of a favored few.

Mr. KÜSTERMANN. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WASHBURN].

Mr. WASHBURN. Mr. Speaker, the issues in this case have been a little obscured by some things that have been said. I do not profess to rival my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. KÜSTERMANN] in his knowledge of foreign tongues, but I have some acquaintance with the teachings of the Ten Commandments, and I want to say to him that this bill says to the United States, "Thou shalt not steal." [Applause.]

This bill provides for amending section 4919 of the Revised Statutes, in order that owners of patents may be provided with a remedy for the unauthorized appropriation of their property by the Government of the United States.

When the Government grants letters patent for an invention it confers upon the patentee an exclusive property, which can not be appropriated or used by the Government itself without just compensation any more than land which has been patented to a private purchaser can without compensation be appropriated or used by the Government.

If the United States should appropriate the patented invention of another and declined to pay for its use, the injured party would have no remedy except by an appeal to Congress, because the United States Government can not be sued in its own courts without its consent, and the Court of Claims has no jurisdiction under any existing statute of an infringement suit brought against the United States. The infringement of a patent is a tort, and the Court of Claims has no jurisdiction of claims for mere torts. Some element of contractual liability must lie at the foundation of every action.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WASHBURN. I will.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. How many cases does the gentleman know of that have arisen, say, within the past six years of the Government appropriating unto itself the use of the invention of another?

Mr. WASHBURN. There have been several cases in the Court of Claims, as I understand—

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. How do they get there?

Mr. WASHBURN (continuing). Arising under implied contracts.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. How did the claims get into the Court of Claims?

Mr. WASHBURN. Arising under an implied contract between the Government and another.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Well, it was simply a breach of contract, or possibly the matter was presented upon the—

Mr. WASHBURN. Well, my friend, that is a slow way to get relief. How long did it take Ericsson to get his claim recognized by Congress, the man who contributed more to the advancement of the Navy of the United States than any other man who ever lived up to his time?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Can you cite another case beside Ericsson's?

Mr. WASHBURN. Many, and recent. Now, my friend, I can not yield any longer.

Article 5 of the Amendments to the Constitution provides as follows:

Nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation.

To secure to owners of patents the rights thus guaranteed by the Constitution, it is proposed to amend section 4919 of the Revised Statutes by adding the following:

And whenever an invention described in and covered by a patent of the United States shall hereafter be used by the United States, without license of the owner thereof, such owner may recover reasonable compensation for such use by suit in the Court of Claims: Provided, however, That in any such suit the United States may avail itself of any and all defenses, general or special, which might be pleaded by a defendant in an action for infringement, as set forth in title 60 of the Revised Statutes, or otherwise.

The patent laws of nearly all the foreign countries contain provisions for the purchase of patents by such government for state purposes. The character of these provisions is exemplified in the patent laws of Great Britain, Ireland, and the Isle of Man, as follows:

29. A patent shall have to all intents the like effect as against His Majesty the King as it has against a subject: Provided, That any government department, by themselves, their agents, contractors, or others, at any time after the application, use the invention for the services of the Crown on such terms as may, either before or after the use thereof, be agreed on, with the approval of the treasury, between the department and the patentee, or, in default of agreement, as may be settled by the treasury after hearing all parties interested.

Substantially the same provision appears in the patent laws of New Zealand, Queensland, Tasmania, Victoria, and Western Australia. Several of the countries provide for a compensation to be fixed by agreement, and in default of reaching an agreement, by the courts. The countries in the laws of which this provision exists are as follows: Austria, Germany, and Sweden.

The laws of Canada provide that—

The government of Canada may at any time use any patented invention, paying to the patentee such sum as the commissioner reports to be a reasonable compensation for the use thereof.

The laws of Ceylon provide that the compensation shall be reached by agreement with the inventor, approved by the governor in executive council. The laws of Denmark provide for a compensation fixed by mutual agreement, and in default thereof, by the estimate of a commission of four experts—two appointed by the minister of the interior and two by the holder of the patent—together with an umpire unanimously chosen by the four experts, or, in default, by the court at the domicile of the patentee. The laws of Finland have the compensation fixed by the Emperor or grand duke. The laws of Japan provide that the indemnity shall be fixed by the minister of state for agriculture and commerce. The laws of Norway provide that the compensation shall be fixed by agreement, or, in default thereof, the indemnity shall be determined by arbitration. The laws of Switzerland provide that the indemnity shall be fixed by the federal tribunal.

In view of these provisions of statute of the various countries providing for the use of any invention for state purposes it does not appear that an unauthorized appropriation by the government of any of these countries is possible.

In this country the power of the United States to secure to inventors exclusive privileges is derived from the eighth section of the first article of the Constitution:

Congress shall have the power to promote the progress of science and of the useful arts by securing for limited terms to authors and inventors the exclusive right to their respective writings and discoveries.

If it should be argued that because this right is conferred by the Government a limitation might equitably be placed upon the grant that the Government should have the free use of any patented invention, it might properly be said in reply that if all pecuniary reward is withheld from inventors who patent devices which the Government finds useful, the incentive is largely removed for making such inventions; and that the Government would be the loser in the event that this policy were followed is apparent when it is realized how large the number is of inventions of use primarily to the Government, some of which are:

1. Ordnance, comprising forty-seven subclasses and including heavy guns, rapid-fire guns, machine guns, sights, submarine guns, and loading and firing devices.
2. Ammunition and explosives, including cartridges, primers, projectiles, shells, torpedoes, submarine mines, and line-carrying projectiles.
3. Buoys and life-saving apparatus.
4. Ships, including war-ship construction, rams, turrets, armor plating, submarine boats, torpedo boats, torpedoes, torpedo launching, torpedo guards, and gun ports.
5. Military implements, including swords, intrenching implements, and bayonets.

Mr. KÜSTERMANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts referred to the Ten Commandments, especially to that part which says, "Thou shalt not steal." Now, indirectly, he says that to Congress, but directly he is saying it to the heads of our Departments. Now, I for one have implicit confidence in the heads of our Departments and I believe that they all are straight, honorable, conscientious men who wish to be fair with everyone they are dealing with. Now, why not leave these matters for them to settle?

Mr. WASHBURN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KÜSTERMANN. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. WASHBURN. Here is what an executive officer of the United States did say to one of these people:

An executive officer, without hazarding the interest of the United States by agreeing to pay more than he has a right to, can not use this. The executive officer can not be brought into the court. You can not sue or restrain him. The remedy for you is to appeal to Congress; now, go there.

Mr. KÜSTERMANN. An executive officer should certainly not pay more than he considers fair and right.

Mr. WASHBURN. He simply told him he had no remedy except to come to Congress.

Mr. KÜSTERMANN. Well, having come to Congress, I hope that he will receive the right answer, a refusal to pass the bill drawn up in his interest.

Mr. HINSHAW. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], who introduced the bill.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, this seems to me to be a very plain proposition. Under the Constitution to Congress is delegated the power to pass laws to protect a patentee in the exclusive use of his patent. We have a Patent Office, and the United States Government issues patents, and it insures to every patentee the exclusive right to use his invention. The Supreme Court of the United States says that a patent is property. The Supreme Court of the United States says also that it is within the constitutional provision that protects property from appropriation without compensation, and yet in the very same sentence it says that the patentee can not protect his property, because there exists no court into which he can go. The Court of Claims has no jurisdiction except as to matters that rise in contract. The infringement of a patent is a tort, and therefore of all the citizens of the United States, the one only citizen who has no protection to his property under the law is the owner of a patent.

Nobody denies the right of the United States Government to appropriate a patent that may be useful to it for governmental purposes in time of peace or in time of war, but every honest man ought to deny the right of the Government, after the appropriation of that patent, to deny to the owner the fair compensation to which he is entitled. Every civilized government on the face of the earth, with the exception of Russia and the United States, has provided a tribunal where a patentee and his government may settle the question as to their respective rights one against the other—the right of the patentee as against the government—for the appropriation of his patent. This is a measure that is in the interest of justice—justice to the only citizen, I say, who, without the passage of this measure, has no relief except in the generosity of the Government.

Mr. MADDEN. Why does not the bill except the men who are in the service of the Government from the right to claim against the Government?

Mr. DALZELL. It does.

Mr. MADDEN. It does not.

Mr. DALZELL. I say it does.

Mr. MADDEN. It does not.

Mr. DALZELL. The last proviso points out—

Mr. MADDEN. It simply gives the Government the right to contest the right of another person.

Mr. DALZELL. The Supreme Court has said that which under this bill would respond to the claims made by the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired. All time has expired.

The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill. The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

RECESS.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, pending that, I move that the House take a recess until 11.30 a. m. to-morrow.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 141, nays 94, answering "present" 6, not voting 146, as follows:

Mr. TELLER. I wish the Senator who reported the resolution would explain what it means. I do not understand it.

Mr. FULTON. It is a bill which was sent to the Court of Claims, I think, several sessions ago, and it went on the calendar for dismissal. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read to the Senate for information.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask the Senator in charge of the bill if it does not amount to a reorganization of the militia?

Mr. HEMENWAY. It changes the Dick bill, which was passed several years ago, but is reported by the unanimous action of the Committee on Military Affairs both of the House and Senate. Of course, if the Senator desires to discuss the bill, or if any Senator desires to discuss it, I will not press it now.

Mr. CULBERSON. I have not had time to read it.

Mr. KEAN. I wish the Senator from Indiana would withdraw his request at the present time.

Mr. HEMENWAY. If there is to be any discussion, I will withdraw the request.

Mr. KEAN. I should like to state that the military board of the State of New Jersey object to several features of the bill and I have some amendments to offer, but I have them not here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made to the consideration of the bill. The introduction of bills and joint resolutions is in order.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BURKETT introduced a bill (S. 7109) granting an increase of pension to James W. Coburn, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 7110) to aid in building a memorial to Abraham Lincoln on the site of the Lincoln birthplace in Kentucky, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. PILES (for Mr. ANKENY) introduced a bill (S. 7111) for the relief of the Alaska Terminal and Navigation Company, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. NEWLANDS introduced a bill (S. 7112) providing for the appointment of an Inland Waterways Commission with the view to the improvement and development of the inland waterways of the United States, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BURKETT introduced a bill (S. 7113) making appropriation for repairs and reconstruction of buildings destroyed by cyclone at Fort Crook military post, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. TALIAFERRO submitted an amendment proposing to pay Maj. G. S. Bingham a sum equivalent to the amount of pay withheld from him because of the acceptance of the quartermaster's steamer Joseph E. Johnston, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Military Academy appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DICK submitted an amendment relative to the amounts found due the several States for expenses incurred and paid by them under the act of July 27, 1861, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which was ordered to be printed and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

COL. WILLIAM F. STEWART.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is closed.

Mr. RAYNER. I call up Senate joint resolution No. 82.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland calls up a joint resolution, which will be read by title.

The SECRETARY. Table Calendar 17, a joint resolution (S. R. 82) relating to certain charges against Col. William F. Stewart, of the Coast Artillery.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I would be perfectly willing to forego the present consideration of the joint resolution and permit it to go to the Committee on Military Affairs if I had any assurance from the Military Committee that in some shape or another they would give me a report on it by the end of the week.

That committee meets to-morrow, and if the chairman of the committee will state that either in the form that I offer it or in some other and modified form they will make either a favorable or an unfavorable report on it, or that some action will be taken on it by the end of the week, I am perfectly willing that the joint resolution shall go to the Military Committee. If no such assurance is given, I propose to press the presentation of the joint resolution in a little different form from the way in which I offered it yesterday.

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator wish some explanation now?

Mr. RAYNER. I do. I would be much obliged to the Senator.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the joint resolution is, of course, tantamount to a bill, and the regular course is that it should go to some committee. I want to say to the Senator from Maryland that if he thinks there is any standing committee of the Senate which is more appropriate or which he feels would be less apt to be prejudiced than the Committee on Military Affairs, I shall not object to its going to some other standing committee. I shall, of course, object to its being taken from the table and passed by the Senate without going to committee, because I think that is a dangerous way of legislating.

Now, as to what the Military Committee will do with it, I want to ask the Senator if that committee has ever been, to his knowledge, accused of pigeonholing or being unduly slow in the consideration of any matters intrusted to it by the Senate?

Mr. RAYNER. Does the Senator want me to answer now?

Mr. WARREN. I do.

Mr. RAYNER. I do not make the slightest suggestion that the joint resolution shall go to any other committee. If it goes to any committee, I prefer the Military Committee. But that is not the question. The question I ask the Senator is whether as chairman of that committee, not speaking for the committee but speaking simply for himself, he will give me assurance that in some shape or another the joint resolution will be reported before the end of the week.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, I desire to suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs that that request is unusual, and it seems to me that it ought not to be made by the Senator from Maryland. The Military Committee, as every other committee of the Senate, is composed of men of high character and patriotism, men who are as quick to look after the interests of every citizen as the Senator himself.

It seems to me that it is a little unseemly for him to attempt to interrogate the chairman of the Military Committee as to what that committee will do in advance of any evidence being presented to it. The Senator has made his speech here upon the floor, and has had the benefit of that both in the Senate and in the country. Now, if this matter is to go to the committee, it should go there untrammelled by any prejudice, either for or against this officer.

The Senator and the friends of this officer will have an opportunity there to present their facts, and after all these questions are considered in that committee the question then will come as to the report and when the report shall be made. It may be that facts and circumstances will develop before that committee that they can not report in a week. It may be that they will be able to report in two days. But it should be left entirely open, so that every member of the committee will feel free to act as he believes in the interest of justice.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, with great respect to the Senator from Illinois, I do not think it was necessary for the Senator from Illinois to answer the question I addressed to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will say to the Senator, if he will allow me—

Mr. RAYNER. One moment. I have the floor, and just a moment. I think the Senator from Wyoming is capable of answering the question. I made no request that the Military Committee should speak. I asked the Senator from Wyoming whether, speaking for himself as chairman of the committee or as a member of the committee, he could give me any reasonable assurance that the joint resolution would be reported by the end of the week. I will supplement that by saying, reported within such time, one way or the other, so that I can arrive at some consideration of it in the Senate.

The situation here is entirely different from the situation on ordinary bills and resolutions. As I understand it, the Senate will adjourn in about ten days. I am perfectly willing to change the nature of the resolution, and instead of being a joint resolution to be passed by the Senate and House I am willing to put it in such shape that it will only give expression to the opinion of the Senate, and instead of directing the President to proceed in the matter I will submit a resolution to authorize and request him to proceed. I have a resolution of that sort and I will read it to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President—

Mr. RAYNER. I have the floor. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming, as I think the Senator had better answer the proposition, and then I will yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. HOPKINS. The Senator from Wyoming, of course, is able to do that, but at the proper time I desire to submit a remark or two on the subject.

Mr. RAYNER. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming. I want to hear what the Senator from Wyoming has to say about it.

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to me now to complete my answer to his question?

Mr. RAYNER. Certainly. I did not interrupt the Senator. The Senator from Illinois interrupted him.

Mr. WARREN. I thank the Senator from Illinois for protecting the Military Committee and the rights and privileges of all the committees of the Senate. Why do we have committees if not to consider these questions?

If the Senate sees fit to instruct the Committee on Military Affairs, the chairman and the committee will undoubtedly follow its instructions. If uninstructed, the chairman of the committee will without delay bring the matter before the committee, and if that committee does as it has always done since I have been connected with it, it will consider in due season, and in a proper way, this whole subject exactly as it has considered other matters heretofore.

I am unable to promise whether the joint resolution can be reported to-morrow or next week. All I can say is that so far as I am concerned, individually and as chairman of the committee, I shall hope to become so well acquainted with the facts in the case that a report will be made in season to accomplish the Senator's purpose. But I can make no further promise, for the reason I shall state:

Here is a matter which comes before the Senate that is not alone a reproof and a direction to the President, but it is an attack upon the discipline of the Army, and likewise, although indirect, upon the Navy. It is an attack upon the President as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, and under it lies the fact that this case has been passed upon by all the general officers from the Chief of Staff down to this officer, and that the President has merely approved what they have recommended.

Presidents may come and Presidents may go, and we will undoubtedly have some other man in the Presidential chair after the 4th day of next March, but the officers of the Army are there for life. The discipline of our fighting force must be such that it shall remain a virile and forceful force, and there must be loyalty, subordination, courage, and a patient bearing of all the ills incident to both war and peace conditions, even though discomfort and hardship follow.

When this matter is taken up, I want to say to the Senator that I shall look for precedents, and I shall look a little to the hereafter, because, even since this matter has been talked about, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs has been approached by officers of the Army and indirectly by others in the interest of officers of the Navy, desiring to correct alleged wrongs which, while not exactly like this alleged wrong, are nevertheless along similar lines. For instance, it is reported that the commander of the vessel Mayflower ran the boat aground. Officers examined into it and reported that there should be certain action taken. The President disapproved of some of the terms of the finding, as I understand it, and reduced them in severity so that he was removed from command of the Mayflower and placed as a subordinate officer on another boat.

Now, Mr. President, I do not want to establish here a precedent whereby when a man is sent to a post in Alaska which may be thousands of miles away from railroads instead of hundreds, or is sent some place where he has no command or the command of only a few people, he can knock at the door of the Senate and ask that some one shall propose a measure and demand that it shall be passed off the table, without committee consideration, to give him relief, regardless of what may be the consequences of the hereafter, or regardless of what might possibly be an attack upon the discipline of the Army or Navy. The only assurance I am able to give the Senator is that we will take the case under consideration and treat it with the consideration which the committee has accorded all the business that has come before it, and I hope that we may be able to make an early report.

Mr. RAYNER. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. HOPKINS. The Senator from Wyoming has answered the very proposition I desired to suggest to the Senator from Maryland. I was not coming to the rescue of the Senator from Wyoming, the chairman of the Military Committee, because in my service in public life I have always found that he was able to take care of himself and the interests of the committee he represented. My objection was that this request was an unseemly one in the Senate and one that ought not to be made to the Military Committee or any other committee formed of Senators. These committees have jurisdiction over various subjects, and it is a violent presumption to assume that the committee will not discharge its duty. From my experience here in the Senate I have always found that the Military Committee was quick to respond to its duty on any subject presented to it. I do not know why this case should take any different course from any other question that goes to the committee.

Assuming the statement made by the Senator from Maryland to be correct, I believe that prompt action should be taken here, but I do not think that he ought to interrogate the chairman of the committee or any member of the committee to learn in advance of the joint resolution going there what the action of the chairman or of the committee will be.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, we were interrupted on this side of the Chamber when the Senator from Wyoming was making an explanation. I would be glad to ask him a question, therefore, in order that we may understand him.

Mr. WARREN. I was not aware that I was making any explanation.

Mr. CULBERSON. The Senator was making a reply, then, to a question addressed to the Senator by the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. CULBERSON. I understood the Senator from Wyoming to suggest that if the joint resolution was referred to the committee without instructions, as chairman of the committee, he would submit it promptly to that committee at its next meeting and have the matter acted upon by the committee, but he could not make any definite promise as to when a report would be made by the committee, whether to-morrow or the next day or next week, or any particular time. I then understood the Senator to go further, though I may have misunderstood him, to argue against the passage of the joint resolution by suggesting that it was an attack upon the authority of the President as Commander in Chief of the Army.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me?

Mr. CULBERSON. I simply rose to make that inquiry.

Mr. WARREN. I want to say to the Senator from Texas that it will not matter to me what the Senator from Maryland or any other Senator may in a speech say or set forth regarding this Stewart case. I know nothing about it. I do not wish to know anything about it until it comes to the committee—other than what may come in the regular way—because if the committee is to take this subject up, it ought to take it up entirely unprejudiced as to the case of Stewart. But I say it is a wrong procedure to take from the table and pass resolutions here upon the statement of a single Senator that may affect the well-being of the Army and Navy and the discipline thereof. I object to that mode of legislation; that is all.

Now, if this matter comes to the Committee on Military Affairs, so far as the chairman is concerned it will come to him without any prejudice for or against this man, and he will intend to get at the bottom of the facts surrounding the case. If it can be done to-morrow or next week, it will be done then; and if it can not be done for a week or ten days, the chairman will not consent to have it done until the committee can get the facts, which I understand are here in the city—the papers and all the matters that surround it. I do not believe in ex parte legislation, and therefore my remarks are directed to that and not to the conduct of the committee.

If the Senator wishes to commit me to the statement that I will promptly bring it before the committee to-morrow, and that to-morrow it will act, I shall not go that far. But we meet in regular meeting to-morrow; and if we have a quorum there for business, this matter will be mentioned; and if the committee wishes to proceed with it, there will be no delay offered on the part of the chairman further than that we shall have all the facts that are considered necessary in weighing out this question.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I stated to the chairman of the committee that in consequence of interruptions and conversation on this side of the Chamber we were unable to hear his statement, and I asked him, in effect, if I was correct in my statement of what he had said. I do not desire to commit the Senator to any proposition. I simply wanted to understand what the Senator had said and how far he was willing to go with reference to the matter; that is all.

Mr. WARREN. I am entirely willing that the Senator shall interrogate me upon that point; but I want that Senator and every Senator to understand that so long as I am chairman of the Military Affairs Committee it will proceed in the way that that committee deems best and most proper in the examination of all questions, unless the Senate shall direct it to do otherwise when the matter is sent to it or thereafter before a decision is reached.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. RAYNER. Certainly; I yield to the Senator from Georgia. I will be glad to yield to him.

Mr. BACON. This case presents several questions. The matter of influence which brings it here is one doubtless personal to Colonel Stewart. Questions, however, have been raised by the discussion and by the communications which have been sent to the Senate which are very much graver than any question which can concern any individual, whether he be a military man or a civilian.

I am very frank to say that so far as the individual is concerned I am not very favorably impressed; and I make this allusion because the remarks of the chairman of the Military Committee seemed to be addressed almost exclusively to the question of those matters which will concern him individually. I think that so far as the individual is concerned, while I recognize his right to a trial, the presentation is not one which commends him to me very strongly from a personal standpoint.

But there are two questions which are raised here which are of the most vital importance, not simply in their effects upon the individual, but upon the country at large, upon the principles of our Government, and in the effect upon the maintenance and the security of our institutions. These questions are, first, as to the rights of a man to a trial. However we may be satisfied of the guilt of a man, or whatever may be the charge against him, or by whomsoever it may be made, the fundamental principle in this country and in the country from which we derive our institutions is the right of a man to a hearing and a fair trial.

Again, one of the very gravest of issues is raised by the attitude of the President, in which he directly takes the position that, holding the office of Commander in Chief of the Army, that he is not responsible to law; that no statute law can control him, because he holds his position as constitutional Commander in Chief of the Army; that matters affecting the authority of that office are within his exclusive discretion, and that he can say to the Senate and to the Congress of the United States that no statute passed which interferes with his discretion in the management of the Army is a statute which he is bound to obey. That is to me a most astounding proposition. That is the great issue, one of the greatest of issues that this committee will be called upon if it passes upon all of the questions which are raised in this case.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator from Georgia thinks, and if he is right about it, that the law should be construed by that committee, does he think the matter ought to be foreclosed by the promise that a report will be made to-morrow or the next day?

Mr. BACON. So far as that branch of it is concerned, I must unhesitatingly say, "No." That was the purpose I had in the very few remarks which I propose to submit to the Senate. I am not going to discuss that question. It is too broad a question, too big a question, too grave a question, too vital a question to be treated lightly or in any offhand manner.

Mr. WARREN. The chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs had that in view, as well as the more practical points which he stated in his remarks a few moments ago. The Senator from Georgia is right.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I am so impressed with the gravity of this proposition that I am unwilling that it shall go to the committee under the remark which has been made, with apparent acquiescence on the part of the Senate in the suggestion, that the question was one which related simply to the character of Colonel Stewart and to whether or not he was a worthy and meritorious officer. Of course, I think that so far as Colonel Stewart is concerned this committee ought to act promptly, because, if he is being treated with injustice, that injustice ought to be rectified. I regret exceedingly that it is so near the end of the session, because the questions raised are questions which go to the very fundamentals of our Government, and I wish that time remained for its full discussion and settlement.

If it be true that our fathers, freed, as they had been, after seven years of struggle, from the domination and tyranny of one-man power, erected a government and designedly and purposely put at the disposal of one man the Army and Navy of the United States, and in its control freed him from the control of the law, then certainly it is the greatest anomaly in the political history of the world. It is impossible that this can be so. As I have said, I regret that it is so near the end of the session, because such an issue when raised ought to be settled, and ought to be settled by the Congress of the United States in the most emphatic and positive terms. I recognize, Mr. President, that it can not be settled if there is any controversy over it in the limited time which intervenes between to-day and the day which is generally understood to be the one upon which we are to adjourn. But, so far as the particular rights of Colonel Stewart are concerned, whether or not he is, in fact, in prison, whether or not he is being meted out punishment without a trial—

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. WARREN. Now, upon the question of the punishment of this officer; as I understand, he is under no sentence, is not imprisoned, and is under no duress. He is sent to that post just as he would be sent to any other post, to remain there subject to orders, and to carry his communications and work through the War Department in the usual way. He might be sent to Barrancas; he might be sent to other posts; but in each and every case it is the act of the Commander in Chief, or some officer under him who has the authority, to detail an officer to a certain post, to take command there if there is a command to take, or to remain there. So that technically, so far as sentence or punishment is concerned, there is nothing in it. The most that can be said is that it incidentally is a punishment that he is given an inferior post without the command of troops, as compared with others who occupy the same position as a lieutenant-colonel, we will say, at larger posts where they do have commands. But he receives his full salary, all of his allowances and rations, and all the personal freedom that he would receive anywhere else. He is simply at that particular post, instead of at a better one.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I think those are questions which the committee is to consider, but I did not understand that the Senator was prepared to express a definite and final opinion about the case, because, if that is so, there is no use for the resolution to go to the committee.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator does not do me justice. I stated it as it appears from what comes before us through the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] and from the letter read at the desk yesterday. That is all.

Mr. BACON. Well, now, Mr. President, I am not endeavoring to present a conclusion on the facts. I am speaking of the question which is to be before the committee, if there is a reference of the resolution—whether it is or is not true that, under the guise of an order to a post, this officer is not in fact in prison. That is the question for the committee to determine; and I say that is a question that ought to be determined without delay, if the committee has to sit night and day until it is done, because the liberty of a citizen is involved; and the question of whether or not a citizen is being deprived of his liberty without due process of law, either civil or military, is a question which, if it is submitted to the Senate for determination, is one not to be delayed.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the Senator is almost convincing me that possibly this matter ought to go to the Committee on the Judiciary on law points. Is that the intention of the Senator?

Mr. BACON. I had no such thought in my mind.

Mr. WARREN. I should be perfectly willing to have it go there.

Mr. BACON. We can very readily understand that it is not a pleasant task for anybody. Nobody would suggest, except the Senator from Wyoming, the possibility of this matter going to any other committee than the Committee on Military Affairs. Everybody recognizes the propriety of its going there, if it is referred at all. There has been no suggestion to the contrary by anyone except the Senator himself.

I was simply trying to differentiate in what I said as between these grave questions, the gravest, I think, that could be presented to the Senate of the United States—the question of the right of a man to trial before punishment, the question whether the President of the United States, by reason of the fact that the Constitution places in him the command of the Army, is by virtue of that freed from the control of the law and is above the law. That is the great question, although I can imagine but one answer to it. I do not suppose it is possible, however, that that can now be disposed of, but the question of personal liberty is one which can now be disposed of. While we may not be in a position to determine these graver questions, nevertheless whether Colonel Stewart is legally imprisoned or whether he is imprisoned at all or whether or not he is entitled to a trial, these are things which can be determined without undue delay.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, as to whether Colonel Stewart is imprisoned or not will depend upon the character of the order that sends him to this post, will it not?

Mr. BACON. It will depend on all the circumstances; yes.

Mr. HOPKINS. Now, is there anything in the order assigning him to that post which would indicate that he is deprived of his liberty?

Mr. BACON. I will answer the question when the Senator has completed it. I am waiting for the Senator to conclude the question, because I wish to answer it.

Mr. HOPKINS. That is all there is to my question, is there anything in the order showing that Colonel Stewart is deprived of his liberty?

Mr. BACON. I do not propose to be the judge in that matter. That is a matter to be determined, if it goes to the committee, by the investigation of the committee. If the Senator wants my impressions, however, I do not hesitate to give them.

I repeat that, so far as Colonel Stewart is concerned, I am not favorably impressed with his record, although I know nothing personally. I recognize the fact that he has gone from post to post, and that he has not been deemed a desirable officer at the various posts where he has been on duty. I am not concerned personally in his favor, except to see that he has accorded him the right that every man in this country has. The fact that I have no personal interest in him makes all the stronger my view that he should be accorded a trial of the charges on account of which he has been thus exiled.

As to whether the power of the President has been exercised in an undue degree, the impression on my mind is that there has been an attempt to coerce this man into an application for retirement, and that, as an alternative, in the absence of any consent on his part to such an application, he has not simply been ordered to an undesirable post, but he has been placed where he is practically in prison, and that he is where there is no military duty to perform.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. BACON. The Senator will pardon me until I finish the sentence. Then I will yield with great pleasure.

It seems to me that Colonel Stewart is not only where there is no military duty to be performed, but that he is where there is no association; that he is put in a position the most disagreeable that it is possible for a military officer to be put in; and, in order that it may be complete in all its features short of actual imprisonment, he is confined to that post and not allowed to have that post occupy the relation to the commanding general that all other posts in the United States occupy in relation to the commanding general in charge of particular divisions of the territory of the United States; but that it is segregated and that he is allowed to communicate only with the War Department.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Mr. President—

Mr. BACON. I say that it strikes me—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. BACON. I promised to yield to the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] first.

Mr. WARREN. I simply want to ask a question.

Mr. BACON. I want to say, before the Senator asks the question, that while these are my impressions, I am not presuming to pass judgment upon the matter.

Mr. WARREN. Possibly the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] will answer if the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] will permit. The Senator from Georgia makes the statement—and I know he wants to be accurate, and perhaps he is, and I am asking for information, and not undertaking to destroy the force of the Senator's argument—as I understand it, from the reading of the matter yesterday, the first talk of retirement came through the application of this officer to be retired as a brigadier-general. That application was denied, and out of that grew this proffered retirement.

Mr. BACON. I think, if the Senator will pardon me, if what is said about him is correct, the promotion as a brigadier was properly denied.

Mr. WARREN. Let me say one word more. The Senator is, as he ought to be, a great stickler for law. The President of the United States has not the power under the law to retire Colonel Stewart as a brigadier-general.

Mr. BACON. I am not contending that he should do so.

Mr. WARREN. He has the power to make him a brigadier-general in the active force, if the Senate consents, but under a law passed two years ago an officer can not be raised in rank to brigadier-general and retired until after he shall have served one year in that grade, or because of his disability or arriving at the age limit in the meantime.

Mr. BACON. The Senator does not understand me—

Mr. RAYNER. I have no objection to the Senator from Georgia interrupting me, but I do object to other Senators interrupting him and going on with an argument.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. RAYNER. I yield cheerfully to the Senator from Georgia, but the Senator from Wyoming is making an argument.

Mr. WARREN. I beg pardon of the Senator from Maryland. I supposed the Senator from Georgia was occupying the floor in his own right.

Mr. RAYNER. I have not yielded the floor except to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. WARREN. Very well; I had another question, but I will not ask it as the Senator from Maryland objects.

Mr. RAYNER. I have no objection to yielding to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. RAYNER. Senators will have their own time. We are going ahead and the Senator from Georgia is discussing the case, but I do not desire any discussion irrelevant to the issue. I should like to hear the Senator from Georgia, and then, when the Senator from Georgia is through, I will yield to the Senator from Florida. That is the proper way to do.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order. Is it to be understood when a Senator yields the floor to another Senator that he can do so with the understanding that that Senator can not allow an interruption? I should like to know what the rule is on the subject. I wish to interrupt the Senator from Georgia, and the Senator from Georgia is willing to be interrupted. Can the Senator from Maryland, who has yielded the floor to the Senator from Georgia, object properly under the rule to my interrupting the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. RAYNER. I should like to be heard on that proposition.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If the Senator from Maryland yielded the floor for a temporary interruption, the Chair is of the opinion that he may resume it. If he has yielded unconditionally, then the Senator lost the right to the floor.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. The Senator from Maryland, Mr. President, has said to the Senate that he yielded the floor to the Senator from Georgia to discuss this case and that he wished to hear the Senator from Georgia in that discussion. Now a Senator desires to interrupt the Senator from Georgia, perchance to correct him on some point in his discussion or to bring out some points for the Senator from Georgia to elaborate or elucidate, and the Senator from Maryland undertakes to say to whom the Senator from Georgia should yield and to whom he should not yield and the order of his yielding.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks under that statement of the situation—the present occupant of the chair having recently resumed the chair—that the Senator from Georgia had the floor, and that the Senator from Georgia would have a right to yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I have not yielded the floor except for an interruption. If the ruling of the Chair is correct, I respectfully submit to the President that a Senator who was allowed to take the floor could yield to every Senator in the Senate.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I regret very much that I had not concluded, but I yield to the Senator now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia yields to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia was stating that the order assigning Colonel Stewart—

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, as I hold the floor by the courtesy of the Senator from Maryland and as he objects, I will yield the floor altogether.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, what is before the Senate? Mr. RAYNER. Senate joint resolution No. 82 is before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the present discussion is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. BURKETT. That is as I understand it. So I do not see how anybody has the floor practically except by the unanimous consent of everybody else.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there is objection, the debate can not proceed.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER], when this matter was up before, asked that the joint resolution lie on the table. He made no request that it should be subject to his call. I know of no way under parliamentary law by which it can be brought before the Senate for consideration without a motion, and, in my judgment, when the motion is made that the Senate proceed to its consideration, that motion is not debatable. So clearly this discussion now, under my opinion parliamentarily, is proceeding only by unanimous consent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair entirely agrees with the Senator from Maine, and stated that the debate was proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. WARREN. I agree with the Senator from Maine, but I want to ask him if a motion to bring up the joint resolution for consideration does not leave it yet subject to the rules of the Senate, so far as its going to a committee or elsewhere is concerned, unless some motion of a special nature is made.

Mr. FRYE. It can not be sent to a committee without a motion to refer it to a committee, and such a motion has not been made by anyone.

Mr. WARREN. But it can not be considered finally without going to a committee, if a motion is made to send it to a committee, until that motion be settled.

Mr. FRYE. That would be for the Senate to say, of course.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, I will simplify the situation. The Senator from Georgia declines to continue, in view of my interruption and the objection of the Senator from Maryland. I therefore withdraw my request to interrupt the Senator from Georgia, and if I have anything to say further on I will say it in my own time and in my own right.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I move that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. I do not do that to cut off debate, but in order that the motion may be before the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator can not cut off debate by that motion.

Mr. WARREN. I do not wish to do so.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I rise merely to call attention to the status of this joint resolution of the Senator from Maryland. On yesterday, at the conclusion of his speech, he asked that the resolution, which was at that time before the Senate for consideration, might lie on the table until to-day, when he would call it up for further consideration. The Record bears out that statement, and it seems to me that, while in a technical sense possibly the resolution may not be before the Senate, yet really and according to our practice it is before the Senate for such consideration and such further discussion as any Senator may see fit to engage in with respect to it.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, if it is necessary, I ask unanimous consent to make a statement. I think that I have a right to bring—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair would say that the pending question is on the motion of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] to refer the joint resolution to the Committee on Military Affairs. That motion is debatable.

Mr. WARREN. Certainly; and the Senator can proceed under the motion.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I desire to inquire—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. RAYNER. I do.

Mr. BAILEY. I rise to a question of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his question of order.

Mr. BAILEY. Do I understand the Chair to rule that this joint resolution of the Senator from Maryland is not now before the Senate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair so understands.

Mr. BAILEY. With all due deference, I submit that if the Chair will examine the Record, the Chair will withdraw that ruling. The Senator from Maryland, as indicated by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], undertook to leave the resolution for consideration to-day. He resumed his seat with that understanding, I have no doubt.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has not now the Record containing the statement made by the Senator from Maryland before him, but he has the notice which appears upon the Calendar of business. It reads as follows:

That Wednesday, May 13, at the conclusion of the morning business of that day, he would ask the Senate to consider Table Calendar No. 17, S. R. 82, "Joint resolution relating to certain charges against Col. William F. Stewart, of the Coast Artillery." (May 12, 1908.)

If that is a correct statement, it amounts simply to a notice and does not bring the resolution automatically before the Senate.

Mr. BAILEY. But my understanding is, as the Record will show, that the Senator from Maryland resumed his seat with that understanding; and I should regret very much to see it become the practice of the Senate that a Senator must be absolutely and technically accurate or else have his resolution lose its place in the consideration of this body.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, it seems to me that the statements made by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] and my colleague [Mr. BAILEY] are correct, as shown by the Record, and that in every substantial sense the Senator from Maryland asked that this resolution lie on the table subject to his call. I will read that part of it. It is on page 6384 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. WARREN. The present request is simply that it lie on the table?

The Senator from Maryland then answered:

That it lie on the table, and I shall call it up on Thursday.

He did not ask generally that it lie on the table subject to his call, but went further and stated specifically that it would lie on the table and he would call it up on that particular day.

Mr. RAYNER. And then, at the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio, I changed it to to-day.

Mr. BAILEY. Then, a little farther on, Mr. President, the Senator from Wyoming asked the Senator from Maryland this question:

Does the Senator from Maryland mean that he expects action upon the joint resolution without its going to a committee?

The Senator from Maryland replied:

I make the request that it now lie on the table, and I shall call it up on Thursday for the action and consideration of the Senate.

It is perfectly plain that the Senator from Maryland expected his resolution to be before the Senate to-day.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I merely wish to call the attention of Senators to the fact that the joint resolution is now before the Senate, upon the motion just made by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], to refer the joint resolution to the Committee on Military Affairs. That motion, as I understand, is open to debate, and that is the present parliamentary situation. I will ask the Chair if that is not true?

Mr. BAILEY. That, Mr. President, is true. The Senator from Maryland in the discussion with the Senator from Wyoming stated that when he had his joint resolution before the Senate to-day the Senator from Wyoming could make the motion to refer; but if the joint resolution is not now before the Senate the Senator's motion would not be in order.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator has already made his motion, I think, and that motion is subject to debate. I ask if that is not the parliamentary situation?

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Wyoming can not make that motion and thereby take from the floor the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly not.

Mr. MONEY. Then the motion of the Senator from Wyoming is not before the Senate, and the Senator from Maryland is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If the Senator will permit me, on the contrary, I understand this is the parliamentary situation: The motion of the Senator from Wyoming gives the Senator from Maryland no right to the floor at all, since we are now proceeding under unanimous consent. The parliamentary situation, as I understand it to be—and the Chair can state whether my understanding is correct or not—is that this resolution is now properly before the Senate upon the motion of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] to refer it to the Committee on Military Affairs. It was up to that moment before the Senate merely by unanimous consent. That motion has been made; it is subject to debate, and therefore we can go on in the regular way.

Mr. BAILEY. I am not willing to concede the point that this resolution is only before the Senate this morning as a matter of unanimous consent. It is before the Senate in pursuance of the unanimous consent given yesterday. Just a little further down—I have been glancing over the Record hurriedly—the Senator from Wyoming again put the question:

The present request is simply that it lie on the table?

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] replied:

That it lie on the table, and I shall call it up on Thursday—

The Senator from Maryland plainly thinking that he was keeping his resolution before the Senate, and his request was at least equivalent to a request that it lie upon the table subject to his call this morning.

Mr. WARREN. I should like to ask the Senator from Texas a question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. Then, as I understand the Record, the Senator from Maryland did not ask and did not receive unanimous consent for anything. He simply gave a notice, as is often done. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. FULTON] gave a notice a few days ago that he would ask the Senate to take up a certain bill at a certain time if the Senate should choose to take it up. There was no unanimous consent. Now, to show—

Mr. BAILEY. If the Senator from Wyoming will examine the Record he will find that the Senator from Maryland expressly says "I make the request." He did prefer a request.

Mr. WARREN. The Chair did not put it as a request for unanimous consent. When unanimous consent is given by the Senate, it is usual for the Chair to state that unanimous consent is asked, so that opportunity may be given to object if there is objection. To show that I understand it in the same way—and it will be remembered that I did not participate in the debate at all—after there was a request made that it go to the table I asked if the Senator from Maryland meant that he expected to act upon it without its going to the committee, and he said:

I make the request that it now lie on the table.

And after that paragraph I said:

The present request is simply that it lie on the table.

That is my understanding as expressed at that time.

Mr. BAILEY. But the Senator from Maryland then added to what the Senator from Wyoming says the additional statement that he would call it up.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair would call the attention of the Senator from Texas to the concluding statement upon this subject made by the Senator from Maryland, which clearly indicates that the Senator regarded the matter as in the nature of a notice and not as governed by an order. He says, quoting from the Record:

Mr. RAYNER. I will change my notice that instead of calling it up on Thursday I will call it up to-morrow. I shall call up the joint resolution to-morrow.

There was no order of the Senate made upon this subject; and, in the absence of an order of the Senate, the Chair does not understand that the request or notice would have the effect of an order.

Mr. BAILEY. Half of the Senators in this body believe to-day that is precisely what the Senator intended to do, and that that would be sufficient. Now, I am not willing to see the rule established here that a Senator must reduce his request to writing with the precision of a law pleading or else lose his place. To obviate it, however, I am going to ask—

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President—

Mr. BAILEY. Or, if the Senator from Rhode Island is on his feet for the purpose of asking that this matter be laid before the Senate—

Mr. ALDRICH. That is my purpose.

Mr. BAILEY. That is all right.

Mr. ALDRICH. I propose to ask unanimous consent—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair would state to the Senator from Texas that he has no doubt that the Senator from Maryland understood his notice would have the effect now claimed. Now, plainly, the Chair, of course, is governed by the strict letter of the rule. The considerations suggested by the Senator from Texas appeal, of course, to the Senate strongly in favor of granting unanimous consent.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution referred to be taken from the table for present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island asks unanimous consent that the joint resolution, the title of which will be read by the Secretary, be taken from the table for present consideration.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (S. R. 82) relating to certain charges against Col. William F. Stewart, of the Coast Artillery.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. WARREN. I move that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. TELLER. The claim made by the Senator from Maryland—

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, is the joint resolution before the Senate?

Mr. TELLER. It is.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution by the motion—

Mr. KEAN. The Chair has not announced it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair did announce it.

Mr. TELLER. The claim made by the Senator from Maryland that the joint resolution was before the Senate previous to the request of the Senator from Rhode Island is entirely in accordance with the practice of the Senate. Whenever a Senator introduces a resolution and says "let it lie on the table subject to my call," it has been understood that he was entitled to call it up.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator added the significant and necessary words "subject to my call."

Mr. TELLER. This joint resolution is properly before the Senate. I think it was before the Senate prior to the suggestion of the Senator from Rhode Island. It certainly was so considered by the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee, or he would not have moved to send it to the committee. This is an important joint resolution. It is just as important as an ordinary statute, and in this case perhaps more so.

I am in entire sympathy with the Senator from Maryland in this matter. I myself believe that he was justified in presenting to the Senate the matter he did in the way he did. I was glad that he did. Colonel Stewart disappears in some respects from this controversy. The question is, whether we shall pass a law of a certain character which shall call upon the President to do certain things. In my judgment that question ought to go to a committee. I do not believe we ought to pass joint resolutions in the nature of laws without reference to a committee, except in extraordinary cases. If we do that, we will incur some very unfortunate consequences. While I am in entire sympathy with the proposition of the Senator, I shall feel compelled, as a question of order, to vote to send the joint resolution to a committee. As to what the committee may do, we may say that the committee shall report immediately. It is simply a question of propriety whether we shall direct the committee to report to-morrow or the next day or in a week. The power exists in the Senate. It is a great, big question. It involves, as the Senator from Georgia has said, more than the question whether this man has been improperly treated or not. It is a question of law. The question is exceedingly plain to me.

The President evidently believes that he has the power to do this. I do not believe he has. I do not believe any committee of the Senate will ever agree that he has the power. I do not care to go into a discussion of the details as affected by individual interest we may have in Colonel Stewart. I do not believe the President has the power. I myself believe it would have been better to have sent this matter to the Committee on the Judiciary. It is a question of law. But it is a question of military law, which, I think, the Committee on Military Affairs is competent to decide. In voting for the motion to refer I do not want anybody to think that I think Colonel Stewart has been treated as he ought to have been treated. I do not inquire what is the man's character. The question is whether the President has the power to impose the punishment without any tribunal having passed upon the case. It is contrary to my ideas of justice. No matter what the character of the man may be, no matter how offensive he may be, he has certain rights under the Constitution and the unwritten law which have accrued ever since King John granted the Magna Charta. It is contrary to that as well as the plain words of the Constitution. I think we should proceed in an orderly way, and that the committee should take up this question, and therefore I shall vote to send the joint resolution to the committee.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, not by the slightest insinuation have I cast any reflection upon the Committee on Military Affairs or any member of that committee. I prefer that the joint resolution should go to the committee. The Senator from Illinois and the Senator from Wyoming are entirely mistaken in the view they have taken. I am absolutely satisfied the committee will give it the consideration it deserves. The only matter that concerns me now is the matter of time. The Senator from Wyoming must realize of course that unless I get some action now it will be impossible to have any action upon the joint resolution at this session. I should like in this connection—although of course I have no right to interrogate the Senator—to ask the Senator from Wyoming whether he will permit me to appear before the Committee on Military Affairs to-morrow, if I consent to let the joint resolution go there?

The Senator from Wyoming has spoken of certain facts. I have not presented a single fact to the Senate. I have not a single fact which I could present to the Senate. I have not a witness on behalf of Colonel Stewart. I do not know what his own testimony would be. It has been impossible to communicate with him. Therefore there has not been a single fact on behalf of Colonel Stewart presented to this body. The prosecution has been heard. The defense has not been heard, and there has been no opportunity given to the defense to be heard.

I know the Senator from Wyoming will give the joint resolution all the consideration it deserves. I have the utmost faith that he will treat it in a spirit of justice. The urgency of the joint resolution comes from the fact that whether restrained of his liberty or not, whether punished or not, it is proposed to keep Colonel Stewart there until he sends to the President an application for his retirement; and unless there is some action by the Senate, he will stay there. He asks for a court of inquiry. I will be satisfied if the President shall be authorized to give him a court of inquiry. I have no hostility to the committee or any member of the committee. What I want is urgent action, and if the Senator from Wyoming will permit me to appear before the committee to-morrow I shall be satisfied. I am not able to present any facts at all. I know nothing about the merits of this controversy.

I will go so far as to say that the man may have committed the offenses charged. That is not the point. The Senator from Wyoming has not directed himself to a consideration of the point. It is not a question whether he is being punished. I tried my utmost to differentiate the question before the Senate from the question the Senator from Wyoming submits to it. Suppose he was not punished. Suppose he was not sent up here into the clouds, with his reputation clouded, two or three thousand feet above sea level.

Mr. WARREN. I will not interrupt the Senator again unless he wishes me to, but he appears to be addressing his questions to me. I desire to say that the inhabitants of many of the States of this Union represented on this floor live at greater altitudes than this post. The post is nearly a thousand feet lower than the average altitude of Colorado or Wyoming.

Mr. RAYNER. That just shows how little the gravity of the situation has appealed to the Senator from Wyoming. What is the difference where he is, or how high the altitude, or how salubrious the climate may be?

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Maryland raised the question of altitude, not the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. RAYNER. Very well. The Senator corrects me on the question of altitude. The question of altitude is not germane to this discussion at all. Colonel Stewart has to stay there until the President retires on the 4th of March. Unless the Senate passes some resolution or gives some authority or makes some regulation, he will stay there. Let us look at this matter practically for a moment. It is not a question of sentiment. Unless the Senate shall do something, the man will stay there so long as the President remains where he is.

Colonel Stewart will stay there as long as the President remains in the White House if nothing is done by the Committee on Military Affairs. He is there in captivity. He has been stripped of his command. He is humiliated. He is degraded. He can not leave there. He has no department commander. He is not within 25 miles of a railroad station or 75 miles of a surgeon. It is proposed—according to the President's letter—to keep him there unless he sends in a letter of retirement. Five times the President states in his communication that he is punishing him. He has repeated it five times. It is a punishment which he has no right to inflict. I have no facts. I have not a single witness. I have never seen Colonel Stewart. I never knew he was a colonel or an officer of the United States Army. I have purposely had no communication with any member of his family. I have never seen his wife. I do not care what the man is. He is entitled to a trial. All I ask is for the passage of this joint resolution through the Senate and the House.

This is a practical proposition with which we are dealing. If it is referred, I shall have to get it out of the committee. I do not know what the committee in the House may do. I may have to endeavor to pass it over the President's veto. I realize that that is impossible in the few days which remain of this session.

I want to read to the Senate, because, if adopted, it will save me the trouble of appearing before the committee, what I would be perfectly willing to take as a substitute:

Be it resolved, That in the opinion of the Senate Col. William F. Stewart, of the Coast Artillery, is entitled to a court of inquiry to investigate the charges and accusations that have been made against him, now on file in the War Department, or that may be contained in the report of the same heretofore submitted to the President of the United States, or any other charges affecting the character or qualifications of the said Col. William F. Stewart as an officer of the United States Army, and that the President is authorized and requested to convene such court, to consist of not less than five officers of the Army, and that the said Col. William F. Stewart have the right to appear in person and be represented by counsel and to be confronted with the witnesses against him and to have a copy of the specifications containing such charges in the proceedings before such court, and that the said court report its opinion upon all the facts and specifications before them, as is usual in the procedure of courts of inquiry.

It is further provided, That the court be convened as soon as possible and that the said Col. William F. Stewart shall be allowed the same right of challenge as is allowed by law in trials by court-martial.

The President need not obey that resolution. He need not avail himself of the authority it contains. He need pay no attention to the request embodied in this, but I hope that the Senate will express its opinion that this man is entitled to what every citizen in the land is entitled to; that he is guaranteed, as a citizen, under the Constitution, against being deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. The fact that a man is an officer in the Army does not divest him of his constitutional rights.

I have not the slightest feeling of hostility to any member of the committee. I know the committee will deal with this question fairly; and I will consent to the motion to refer it to the committee if the Senator from Wyoming will permit me tomorrow to submit some further authorities in support of the proposition I have advanced, and give me the privilege of appearing before the committee to-morrow.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Maryland says he has no difference with the committee or any of its members. I wish to assure the Senator from Maryland that I have no differences with him. I honor the Senator for his loyalty to a friend and his desire to help a friend. That, to my mind, is one of the finest traits of character human nature can possess. The Senator will understand that I do not attack him for his personal love of a friend or his personal desire to defend him; but, Mr. President, this question now raised is bigger and broader than friendship for or the personal convenience of any one man. It affects fundamental principles of government.

The Senator from Maryland says this officer is at a certain place and must stay there. I take it the same authority that ordered him there can order him away at any time.

I have had no conference at the other end of the line regarding the Senator's letter. I am uninformed. I want to inquire whether the public prints were correct—and they usually are as to substance—and whether or not the Senator from Maryland approached this question with a threat that if this officer was not removed from this post a resolution would be introduced in the Senate?

Mr. RAYNER. I want to answer that question. I utterly deny that proposition, and I hope the Executive has not made that statement. I have not seen the Executive of the United States, I think, for two years. I have had no occasion to see the President. Upon Friday of one or two weeks ago I received a letter from him, to my surprise, to come up to see him. I had not intended to see him. I had not any idea when he asked me to come up to see him what would be the subject-matter of the conversation. He had a large number of pages containing charges against Colonel Stewart. He ran over them rapidly.

He sent me those charges at my request. I regarded them as a confidential communication. I did not have them copied for that reason. Therefore I am without a copy. So far as concerns threatening the President, I should like the Senator from Wyoming to tell me what sort of a threat I could make against the President.

The letter I read to the Senate yesterday embodied the suggestion that I would be compelled to ask Congress to pass a resolution. There is no threat contained in it. It is worded in the most deferential terms, and is in quite a different spirit from the letter to me and other Senators. I told him there was no recourse left if he would not give a court of inquiry. There is no civil court that can grant a writ of mandamus in such a case. There is no tribunal that can prevent the President from keeping Colonel Stewart in exile.

This is not a political question. I have not any feeling against the President. It matters not to what political party he may belong, I think the President has fallen into one of the greatest blunders in his whole Administration in conceiving that the Commander in Chief is not subject to the Constitution and the laws.

At no time did I make a threat. I made the statement that if no court of inquiry was granted there was no recourse but Congress. The President in his last statement said that he would consider the matter. I wrote him another communication asking him to delay the matter, and I would wait during the whole of last week, which I did.

The question before the Senate is not political in the slightest degree. The question is whether the President shall keep this man where he is, in banishment or exile, and compel him to remain there unless he sends in his application for retirement three years before the time arrives for him to retire under the laws of Congress.

Mr. WARREN. I asked the Senator the question because I was uninformed. The Executive has never, to my knowledge, said—certainly he has not said to me, and I do not know that he has said to anybody else—that the Senator from Maryland approached him with any threat. I was speaking of the newspaper reports, and I asked in the gentlest manner whether they were right about it or not.

Mr. RAYNER. I hope the Senator does not hold me responsible for all the newspaper articles published in the United States.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I understood the Senator to state that Colonel Stewart might be ordered from Fort Grant at any time. I should like to ask the Senator from Wyoming if as a matter of fact Colonel Stewart has not been ordered from Fort Grant since he was first assigned there when he was given to understand that he would be kept there until he retired.

Mr. WARREN. It was somewhere in the South, above sea level.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. That order assigned him to St. Francis Barracks, which place can not be described at least as the Senator from Maryland has described Fort Grant in Arizona. It is one of the most delightful winter resorts in this country, and in the State of Florida is regarded as one of the most delightful and desirable summer resorts in that State. It is almost immediately on the seashore, and there reside in St. Augustine many of the best people in the State of Florida. So Colonel Stewart could not justly complain of the quarters at St. Augustine, and he certainly could not justly complain of the environments in any respect.

I now send to the desk, with the permission of the Senator from Wyoming, a letter from the adjutant-general of the State of Florida, which I used as a basis of a protest filed with the President against assigning Colonel Stewart to St. Francis Barracks and against taking these barracks from the State for any Government purpose whatever, unless there should be a great military exigency.

I should have protested against any other officer going there just as I protested against Colonel Stewart going there. This is the information that I tried so hard to get before the Senate yesterday during the eloquent address of the Senator from Maryland. If he had asked me the question which he put to the Senator from Ohio, whether it was for or against him, I would have been able to answer that its purpose had no relation to the immediate case of Colonel Stewart, but was sent here solely and purely in the interest of the State of Florida.

If the Secretary may read, with the indulgence of the Senator, I should be obliged.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

STATE OF FLORIDA, MILITARY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE ADJUTANT-GENERAL,
Tallahassee, April 23, 1908.

HON. JAMES P. TALIAFERRO,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have to appeal to you again to assist me in a matter of vital importance to the military department of Florida. As you know, the legislature of 1907 passed a bill requesting the War Department to turn over to this State, for use as an arsenal and general military headquarters, St. Francis Barracks, at St. Augustine, Fla. Under this act the governor took the matter up with the War Department, with the result that on August 15, 1907, a lease was entered into by the terms of which all of the buildings and property included in this reservation were turned over to the State to be used for the purposes named, with the exception of the national cemetery and one building to be retained for the use of the superintendent of the cemetery.

Under these conditions the State took over the property and commenced the letting of contracts for repairing and properly equipping the buildings. This has already and will still involve heavy expense, for while the exterior of the buildings was repaired during the early part of last year, nothing was done to the interior, and all of the buildings were in very bad condition and unfit for occupancy. This work has been proceeded with as fast as possible and is now in progress. The State has had a paid custodian in charge of the property, and about two weeks ago Maj. H. M. Snow, the acting quartermaster-general, occupied the quarters which had been assigned him and took charge, preparatory to receiving the stores which were to be shipped from Tallahassee and other points.

Of course it was necessary to plan out in advance how the buildings could be used to best advantage. It was planned to use the barracks proper for storerooms, etc., and the large building outside for offices.

The woodwork of all these buildings has already been repainted and the walls are now being finished. It was necessary to pipe all of the buildings for gas and to wire them for electricity. The water pipes had rusted out, and the sewerage was so out of repair that most of it had to be replaced. Considerable carpenter work has also been done and remains to be done in order that the buildings may be properly equipped for arsenal and office purposes. Furniture and fixtures have even been ordered to suit the size and purposes for which each building was to be used. You will note that the State has already gone to considerable expense in this matter, and, under the terms of its contracts, is bound for much more.

In the meantime, the general, if not the specific, terms of the lease were departed from by the Government by, first, request for additional quarters for family of an enlisted man; second, request for use of large building formerly used and designated as the quartermaster's storehouse, and, third, by request of superintendent of cemetery for quarters for laborer employed by him. On April 18 the press dispatches contained the item which I have clipped and inclose herewith (marked "Inclosure A"). Upon this being brought to my attention, I immediately wired the Secretary of War, and copy of my telegram is inclosed (marked "Inclosure B"). To-day I have received in reply a letter, copy of which is inclosed herewith (marked "Inclosure C"), and this letter having been laid before the governor, he replied by telegram, a copy of which is also inclosed herewith (marked "Inclosure D").

The inclosures speak for themselves, and I wish to ask that you take this matter up and endeavor to have the Department recede from its action, which seems so unfair under the circumstances mentioned. The State took these buildings over in good faith, and has spent a great deal of money in equipping and repairing them. To be able to use them for the purposes contemplated and for which they were granted it is absolutely necessary to know that uninterrupted occupancy is assured. It was certainly not thought that the provision of the lease to which the Secretary refers in his letter would be construed to apply to anything less than extreme military necessity; such necessity as would counterbalance the good results to be gained for the military service by providing an arsenal and general headquarters for the organized militia of the entire State, and such as to warrant a forfeit by the State of so considerable a sum as has already been expended. Of course, with no assurance of uninterrupted occupancy, the State could not afford to move offices and supplies from the capital, nor to go to further expense, and three of the buildings originally granted have already been asked for before they could even be gotten in condition for occupancy.

I will greatly appreciate your taking this matter up at the Department and endeavoring to show how greatly this action, if insisted upon, will prejudice the interests of the militia of this State and of this department. The officers' quarters at St. Francis Barracks not scheduled for use as offices had been assigned to officers and employees on duty in the military department. Because of the limited State funds available, the fact that these quarters were available to the State for assignment had been the means of securing more competent assistance, for, of course, the use of these quarters was a consideration with employees, and by "employees" I mean the military officers on duty.

Hoping that you may be able to secure the assurance that the State will be permitted to carry out its plans and use all of these buildings for the purposes originally contemplated, and that it will be given entire charge of them, I am, with much respect,

Yours, very truly,

J. CLIFFORD R. FOSTER,
Adjutant-General Florida.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. With the further indulgence for a moment of the Senator from Wyoming, I wish to add a word more to complete the history of my connection with this case. I may add that I do not know Colonel Stewart, and I never heard of him until I got a communication from one of the most prominent citizens in Pensacola informing me that he had been removed from Pensacola, and begging me to exert my best efforts to prevent his return to that post.

The President of the United States in his communication to Senator RAYNER, which was read to the Senate yesterday, referred to that circumstance and quoted certain extracts from that letter to me. I went to see the President and explained the situation as to St. Francis Barracks; how this property had been turned over to the State; how the State had spent money in its improvement and preparation for the particular purposes for which it was to be used, and the fact that the taking of the commanding officer's building deprived them of the best part of the property and the part upon which they had made some of these expenditures. He said he thought I was right; and added he would not cause injury to the State for the mere convenience of one man. He stated that, because of these circumstances, he had ordered Colonel Stewart back to Fort Grant, and that the question of punishment which had been raised was purely incidental, if, indeed, punishment were involved.

In further evidence of this, I received a letter from the President yesterday inclosing me a copy of the letter he had written Senator RAYNER, in which the name of my State and my own name had been used; and I send that letter to the desk and ask that it be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, May 12, 1908.

MY DEAR SENATOR TALIAFERRO: I inclose you a copy of my letter to Senator RAYNER, inasmuch as you are mentioned in it. To take the ground that there must be a court of inquiry because Colonel Stewart has been sent to Fort Grant would logically imply that another court of inquiry should be held to know why he should not be sent to St. Augustine, or Baltimore, or Washington, or anywhere else. In other words, it is a simple absurdity. The question of punishment to Colonel Stewart is wholly incidental. If it was desired to punish, a court-martial would be ordered. I am not concerned with punishing him, but with benefiting the Army. This is the primary purpose, and the punishment is merely incidental to that end, in so far as it is a punishment. My belief is that a court-martial would award Colonel Stewart some severe punishment, and it may be necessary to hold one on him; but I do not believe he would be dismissed from the service as the result of a court-martial, and my whole aim is to get him out of a position of command, because he is wholly unfit to exercise command, because he tyrannizes over the enlisted men, and because he quarrels with civilians quite needlessly. My action is due to the need of maintaining the discipline and efficiency of the Army by assigning Colonel Stewart to a post where he can damage neither. Let me repeat that if a court of inquiry can be held as to the propriety of sending him to Fort Grant, it can just as well be held to determine the propriety of sending him to St. Augustine, or anywhere else, and the mere statement of the proposition is enough to show its absurdity from every standpoint and especially from the standpoint of paying any heed whatever to the interest of the Army. The appointment of a court of inquiry is a matter purely within my discretion and judgment, as Commander in Chief; I neither could nor would surrender the right to exercise such judgment.

Sincerely, yours,

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

Hon. J. P. TALIAFERRO,
United States Senate.

Mr. WARREN. Has the Senator from Florida concluded?

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I have finished. I am obliged to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I have only a word to add. The Senator says that the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs has all the facts before him. I have no facts whatever. I have nothing before me, and the Military Committee has nothing before it, except what has been presented to the Senate by the Senator from Maryland and the President's letter as read from the desk.

Now, the gravity of the problem which the committee is called upon to solve becomes more and more apparent as the discussion proceeds and as it has proceeded. What has been stated by the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from Colorado shows that not only is it a matter of discipline of the Army and of the Navy and the relations of officers and men therein, but it is a question of law and, possibly, of the Constitution. It seems to me the best that can be offered and agreed to has already been said and agreed as to the Committee on Military Affairs, with the one exception that the Senator has requested that he may have an audience before that committee. Let me say to the Senator that he will be welcome to-morrow or any other day, if we shall go beyond to-morrow, as will any other Senators who come before the committee, with regard to this or any other public business.

Now, I think the Senator should be satisfied with that assurance.

Mr. RAYNER. With that statement, I want to say to the Senator I shall consent that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I wish to say one word more. I do not commit myself as to what may be my final decision in the committee, but I want to assure the Senator, as a friend and in a friendly way, that if the post to which that officer has been detailed and which he now occupies is distasteful to him, and there can be any other mutual and agreeable arrangements made, through any reasonable influence of mine, which does not cross forbidden lines of public duty, proper discipline, and loyalty, I should be very glad to befriend the Senator and any friend of his.

As to the officer himself, I know nothing. He is one of those officers whom I never saw, to my knowledge. I know nothing of his record, but shall ask to see it all.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I wish to say just one word in reference to the last letter which was read, addressed by the President of the United States to the Senator from Florida. I assume, of course, that that letter was intended to be read to the Senate, or the Senator from Florida would not have had it read. The Senator says to me in his seat that that assumption is correct.

Now, Mr. President, that is a plain statement to the Senate of the United States by the President of the United States that he does not recognize, and will not recognize, any law that Congress may enact in regard to this matter which does not conform to what he recognizes as the thing which he voluntarily wishes to do. In other words, he claims that under the Constitution, as Commander in Chief of the Army he has a discretion as to whether or not he will do certain things, a discretion whether he will do it or whether he will not do it, and in the presence of the suggestion of action by Congress he puts Congress upon notice in no uncertain terms that he does not recognize the authority of Congress, and that if Congress assumes to act he will not obey it.

Mr. President, I do not propose to discuss that now, but I do trust that between now and the 4th of March the Senate will have not only the time, but will take the opportunity to put the seal of its condemnation in no uncertain words upon any such utterance from the President of the United States.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President—

Mr. BEVERIDGE. May I ask the Senator a question before he resumes his seat?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BACON. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. FORAKER. I did not rise to interrupt the Senator from Georgia. I rose in my own right to bring another matter before the Senate as soon as this was disposed of. I understood that the Senator from Georgia was through with his remarks.

Mr. BACON. I was through.

Mr. FORAKER. I will say to the Senator that I not only agree with what he has said, but if opportunity be not otherwise presented it will be made.

Mr. BACON. Good! [Applause in the galleries.]

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I wish to ask—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana will suspend. The Chair must admonish the occupants of the galleries that under the rules of the Senate applause is not permitted. The Chair trusts that it will not be necessary to again admonish the occupants of the galleries.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. BACON. I do, with pleasure.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia this question before he takes his seat. Assuming that a court of inquiry were ordered under resolutions passed by the Senate, does the Senator think that as a matter of law the President would be bound to observe the conclusions and recommendations of the court of inquiry under his constitutional power, unless a general law was passed by Congress to the effect that he should do so?

Mr. BACON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (S. R. 74) suspending the commodity clause of the present interstate-commerce law.

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator will permit me to answer the question of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. ELKINS. I should like to go on with the unfinished business.

Mr. FORAKER. What is the request of the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. ELKINS. To proceed with the unfinished business.

Mr. FORAKER. Does the Senator want to speak to the joint resolution?

Mr. ELKINS. I wish to get it before the Senate.

Mr. FORAKER. I will say to the Senator, if he wishes to speak to the joint resolution, I will, of course, recognize his right to do so, now that it has come up; but I want to bring a matter before the Senate.

Mr. WARREN. I ask the Senator from West Virginia if he will not agree temporarily to lay the unfinished business aside. As the Senator perhaps has observed, there is a question before the Senate that ought to be decided in the interest of the proponent of the measure.

Mr. ELKINS. I will consent to that, provided the unfinished business does not lose its place.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the unfinished business will be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. FORAKER. Now, Mr. President, I do not agree that we shall continue except on conditions. I think we have sufficiently debated this question to enable us to determine intelligently whether the joint resolution should go to the committee or not. All this must be thrashed over in committee, and then when the committee reports probably it will be thrashed over again here in the Senate, just as we are doing it now. Therefore, while it is agreeable to Senators to speak and while one speech provokes another and there is a sense of disappointment in the mind of a Senator who wants to speak and does not get an opportunity, in view of the fact that we are now approaching the close of the session and there is a good deal of important business to be transacted, I insist that we now proceed with something else. I am willing to yield for a vote to be taken as to whether the joint resolution shall go to the Committee on Military Affairs. That is the motion, I believe, that is before the Senate. But I do not want to yield my right to bring up other business, now that 2 o'clock has arrived, until I have that kind of a condition attached.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Wyoming that the joint resolution introduced by the Senator from Maryland be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WARREN. With all the papers in the possession of the Secretary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. With the papers. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

COMPANIES B, C, AND D, TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY.

Mr. FORAKER. I gave notice yesterday that at this hour I would move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 5729. Before I make that motion—and this may make it unnecessary to make it—I ask Senators if we can not agree upon a date when we can vote upon that bill. I am told that we are likely to adjourn a week from Saturday, on May 23.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator mentions the bill by number. Perhaps it would be better to designate it by title.

Mr. FORAKER. Everybody understands, I think, that the bill mentioned by number is a bill that provides for the restoration to service of the enlisted men of the Twenty-fifth Infantry who were discharged without honor.

I want to ask whether or not we can not agree upon a day. This is Wednesday. I ask unanimous consent that we may vote on this bill Saturday of this week. I understand there are one or two Senators who would like to speak. If so, I will be glad to give them an opportunity. That is long enough, as I understand it, to enable everyone to be heard who wishes to speak, so far as I have been informed.

Mr. WARREN. I am very desirous of disposing of this question, as the Senator knows, just as we have all been desirous, but I do not think we can this morning accede to his request for unanimous consent, and for obvious reasons. I may give one of them. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who, to my certain knowledge, was preparing to address the Senate upon this question and review the testimony, was called to the bedside of his only sister, who is seriously ill and about to undergo a most dangerous surgical operation. I think the Senator will have to defer the matter of the date upon which we shall vote or take it up until we may have some further understanding.

Mr. FORAKER. I had in mind the peculiar situation in which the Senator from Massachusetts is in at this particular time, and I feared that there might be objection on that account, but according to my information that trouble will, perhaps, all be over and the Senator can come back and make his speech as early as next Tuesday. I ask unanimous consent that we vote on this bill on Tuesday of next week.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. FORAKER. I do.

Mr. CULBERSON. I was diverted for a moment. I simply desire to inquire if the Senator from Wyoming objected to voting on Saturday?

Mr. FORAKER. He did. And now I ask unanimous consent that we may vote on this bill on Tuesday of next week, say, at 4 o'clock.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent—

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, let there be no misunderstanding. I might have gone further, but I did not like to inject my personality into it at all. I was perfectly ready to vote upon this question when the Senator's bill and the Warner bill were reported from the committee to the Senate, but it has been debated here in a manner and to an extent which I think makes it incumbent upon me as chairman of the committee to prepare and deliver some remarks to the Senate before a vote is taken.

I want to say, with all humility, that during this session I have been pretty busy, on the whole; and, as the Senator knows, members of the Military Committee have been generous with those who had the Brownsville matter in charge, and sometimes at the expense of their own convenience and time; and those who have not been particularly engaged in the Brownsville matter have been very busy with appropriation and other bills.

I hope the Senator will not make his request at the present time, or, at least, if he does so, that the date may be distant enough to insure proper consideration of the question by members of the committee who wish to address the Senate.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator be kind enough to say whether, in his opinion, any day during this session will be agreeable to him—later in next week than Tuesday?

Mr. WARREN. Possibly I could, if it were known when we may adjourn this session. I will say that so far as I am concerned I am at the present time a member of four different conferences, some of which have not yet had a session and others of which are in contention. I am a member of the Appropriations Committee, which has yet to consider the sundry civil appropriation bill and the deficiency bill. I am a member of the Military Committee, that has yet to consider the Military Academy bill, and as a member of Public Buildings and Grounds Committee will soon, I expect, have to do duty on the omnibus public-buildings bill. It does seem to me, if we are to adjourn as early as next week, that I will not be ready within that time. If our session may extend some weeks longer, I will endeavor to be prepared to proceed to its consideration.

Mr. FORAKER. Then, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be made the unfinished business for the first day of the December session, and that we take a vote on it on the second Wednesday after the session convenes.

Mr. CULBERSON. So far as this question is concerned, this side of the Chamber, I think, is ready to vote now or at any time. There is no special reason for postponing it to the next session. I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I hope that the Senator from Texas will not interpose an objection to this reasonable request of the Senator from Ohio. I think that Senators upon the other side are as desirous as Senators upon this side that the session shall be brought to a close in the near future. It is very evident that it can not be brought to a close if we are to enter upon a prolonged discussion of this question. I will say to the Senator from Texas that the request of the Senator from Ohio is certainly a very moderate and reasonable request. I will also say to the Senator—

Mr. CULBERSON. It occurred to me that the requests of the Senator from Ohio—the two previous requests—were not altogether unreasonable. There is no objection, so far as I know, on this side of the Chamber. Of course, this is not a party question. I trust it will not become such.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is not a party question, but the party—

Mr. CULBERSON. It occurs to me that we ought to dispose of the matter; that it might be disposed of and gotten rid of; and I must object to making it the unfinished business for the next session.

Mr. ALDRICH. This is not a party question, and I hope it never will become a party question. It evidently can not be disposed of at this session if the session is not to be indefinitely prolonged. It will be disposed of at the next session. The Senators sitting upon this side of the Chamber, having the responsibility of legislation, if objection is made, I am sure will vote unanimously to take up the bill and proceed to its consideration until it is disposed of at the next session. I hope, therefore, with a view of harmonizing the various interests and with a view of presenting an orderly disposition of business, that the Senator from Texas will withdraw his objection.

Mr. FORAKER. Is the objection of the Senator from Texas to the day named or simply to its going over at all?

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, in view of what has been said by the Senator from Rhode Island, I think it is proper to state that I recognize that the majority of this Chamber is responsible for legislation and that it ought to take whatever responsibility attaches either for legislating or a failure to legislate.

This matter is one of great importance. It affects the discipline of the Army of the United States. It affects the safety of the public, the security of the public in their homes, and we believe that it ought to be disposed of at this session.

Mr. FORAKER. I did not hear the last words of the Senator from Texas, but I understand that his objection is to the matter going over until the next session; that he wants to have it disposed of at the present session. Can the Senator say that if I move to proceed with this business and fix a day, he or his colleagues on that side of the Chamber will vote with me to-day?

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, this side of the Chamber will vote as the motions are made. The statement stands which I have made, that we object to postponing this matter until the next session of Congress.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. FORAKER. I do.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to say that I make no objection to the request of the Senator, and I wish that there might be some ground of agreement and some day fixed in the next session that will be agreeable to all parties.

Mr. FORAKER. I move that Senate bill 5729 be made the special order for the second Wednesday after the beginning of the next session in December.

Mr. BACON. I ask the Senator from Ohio if he prefers the next session to the present session?

Mr. FORAKER. No, sir; I do not. I will say to the Senator that if I had my own preference about the matter, I would vote this afternoon. But I recognize that the Senator from Massachusetts was called away under circumstances that we are bound to respect. I know that he was in the midst of the preparation of a speech that he was very anxious to make. He came to see me about it and told me of it before he knew of his sister's illness. When, yesterday morning, I learned that he had been unexpectedly called away on that account, I recognized I had a situation to deal with that I was bound to respect, and I feared on that account I might not be able to get a vote.

So far as the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] is concerned, I know he has been busy and has not had an opportunity to prepare, but I would not give him a day, because he is so familiar with this subject that he can speak at any time, and I think the less time he has to get ready the better for him and the cause of justice.

Mr. WARREN. The cause of justice?

Mr. FORAKER. And the cause of justice.

Mr. BACON. I desire to state in answer to the inquiry made of this side of the Chamber that while I will undoubtedly vote against either the bill proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] or the bill proposed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], I think if any injustice has been done it ought to be corrected speedily; and if no injustice has been done, it ought to be ascertained. Therefore I am prepared to say to the Senator that if he desires to move to take up his bill at this session, I will vote with him to take it up.

Mr. FORAKER. I am very much gratified to have that assurance from the Senator from Georgia. I perhaps may make that motion.

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator will.

Mr. FORAKER. And I trust the colleagues of the Senator from Georgia will act with him.

I now, if the Senate please, am simply trying to find out what the possibilities of the situation are. I feel that it is my duty, in view of the circumstances surrounding the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], to show consideration to him, and if we are to adjourn next week it will be impossible, in my opinion, to get a vote on this measure. I was told that one of my colleagues on the other side, who is a member of the committee, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. FRAZIER], desired to submit some remarks. All that requires time. We have the appropriation bills to deal with, and I am perfectly willing to be considerate about this matter, as I try to be about everything. Recognizing that we have a difficult situation to deal with, one we have always heretofore respected when a brother Senator sent word that he was called away unavoidably by a command that he must obey and that he wants us to wait on him until he can be heard, I think we ought to respect that, but the Senator from Massachusetts, as all Senators know, is a member of the Committee on Military Affairs. While I do not agree with the view he entertains and which he will present to the Senate, yet I recognize that he has as much right to be heard as I have, and I feel I would be doing him an injustice and be acting in violation of the spirit of our practice under such circumstances if I were to insist upon taking up this measure and having a day fixed for a vote.

Therefore, Mr. President, I move, if I may state it again, that this bill be made the special order for the third Wednesday of December next. I can not make it later, and I can not make it earlier. I have a calendar before me, according to which it appears that the first Wednesday will be the second day of the month. We meet on the 7th of December. If we make it the third Wednesday, that will be the 16th day of December.

Mr. BACON. I suppose the Senator from Ohio recognizes the fact that the designation of a day in the next session very happily removes this controversy beyond the date of the next Presidential election.

Mr. FORAKER. Well, it was withheld when it originated until the election was over, I believe.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia a question. Is that the reason the Senator and his colleagues now proposes to vote against the motion of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER]?

Mr. BACON. I have not heard anything about how they are going to vote; but I will say very frankly to the Senator that the reason why I want the vote taken at this time, and not postponed until December, is that the Senators on the other side might not have the opportunity of voting together upon this question; which is evidently the purpose at this time. If the measure came up now, Senators on the other side of the aisle would not vote together. That is the reason they wish the matter postponed beyond the next Presidential election, and it is a very ingenious suggestion on the part of Senators that it may be put over until December and a date for voting then fixed, because it gives an opportunity—and that alone can give it—for the Republicans to vote together on this one question of postponement. When it comes to the decision of the question itself they will be very badly divided.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think the Senator from Georgia is speaking without knowledge. I will say to him that whenever we take a vote on this question there will be a solid Republican vote for whatever proposition is before the Senate.

Mr. BACON. That may be the case if the vote is taken in December, for the reason I have mentioned, that it will be after the issues have been passed upon; but it would not be the case if the vote were taken now, and I am not sufficiently in favor of harmony among the Republicans to desire that they should have the opportunity to produce that harmony. For that reason I am in favor of the measure being taken up now in order that we may see how they stand.

Mr. CULBERSON. I move to amend the motion of the Senator from Ohio by striking out the date fixed and inserting "Saturday of this week."

Mr. BACON. Now, you have got it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Ohio again state his motion?

Mr. FORAKER. My motion is that Senate bill 5729 be made the special order for Wednesday, the 16th day of December next.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio moves—

Mr. FORAKER. To be voted on at 4 o'clock on that day, together with all amendments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio moves that the bill named by him be made the special order for Wednesday, the 16th of December next, to be voted on at 4 o'clock of that day.

Mr. FORAKER. I am told that there will perhaps be some parliamentary question as to fixing the hour, so I will simply put it on that day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio moves that the bill referred to by him be made the special order for Wednesday, December 16, next.

Mr. CULBERSON. I move to amend the motion, Mr. President, by striking out the date named and inserting "Saturday of this week."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas moves to amend the motion of the Senator from Ohio by striking out "Wednesday, December 16," and inserting "Saturday, May 16, instant."

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I merely wish to say that the soldiers of the Twenty-fifth Infantry have been very fortunate in their champions and defenders in this Chamber. I assume that each and every Senator has made up his mind and is ready to vote touching the fate of those soldiers. If they were wrongly discharged from the Army, and if they have a right to reinstatement, they ought to be restored now to the service, in order that the country may avail itself of the benefit of their services and that those soldiers may enjoy their compensation. If they are not to be restored to the service, then the sooner they know their fate the better. I am sure that they would welcome a decision of their destiny at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] to the motion of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER].

Mr. CULBERSON. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. ELKINS. I should like to inquire whether the motion, if agreed to, will displace the unfinished business?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will not displace the unfinished business.

Mr. FORAKER. I move to lay the amendment of the Senator from Texas on the table.

Mr. CULBERSON. Upon that I demand the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will inquire who made the motion to lay the amendment of the Senator from Texas on the table?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion was made by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER]. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr.

STONE]. In his absence I will transfer that pair to the Senator from Washington [Mr. ANKENY], who is absent on account of illness, and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CLAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. I do not know how he would vote if he were present, and therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], who is absent. I understand that an arrangement has been made by which I can transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], which will release the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY] from his pair, and we can both vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. FULTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS], who is absent from the Chamber. I transfer that pair to my colleague, the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. BOURNE], who is also absent, and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. NELSON (when Mr. KITTREDGE's name was called). I am authorized to say that if the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KITTREDGE] were here he would vote "yea" on this proposition.

Mr. TALIAFERRO (when Mr. MILTON's name was called). My colleague [Mr. MILTON] is unavoidably absent from the Chamber. He is paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. WARNER]. If he were present I should vote "nay," and he would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CLAY. I announced that I was paired with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], but by the arrangement suggested by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] that pair has been transferred to the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. I am therefore at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 42, nays 27, as follows:

YEAS—42.

Aldrich	Cullom	Fulton	Nixon
Allison	Curtis	Gamble	Perkins
Borah	Dick	Guggenheim	Piles
Brandegee	Dillingham	Hale	Richardson
Brown	Dixon	Hemenway	Stephenson
Briggs	Dolliver	Heyburn	Stewart
Burnham	du Pont	Hopkins	Sutherland
Carter	Elkins	Kean	Warren
Clapp	Flint	Knox	Wetmore
Clark, Wyo.	Foraker	Long
Crane	Frye	Nelson

NAYS—27.

Bacon	Culbertson	McCreary	Rayner
Bailey	Foster	McLaurin	Simmons
Bankhead	Frazier	Martin	Smith, Mich.
Briggs	Gallinger	Money	Taliaferro
Bulkeley	Gary	Newlands	Taylor
Clarke, Ark.	Gore	Owen	Teller
Clay	Johnston	Paynter

NOT VOTING—23.

Ankeny	Depew	McEnery	Smith, Md.
Beveridge	Hansbrough	Milton	Smoot
Bourne	Kittredge	Overman	Stone
Burrows	La Follette	Penrose	Tillman
Daniel	Lodge	Platt	Warner
Davis	McCumber	Scott

So Mr. CULBERSON's amendment was laid on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FORAKER. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLAY (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], but I transfer it to the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I again announce my general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] and the transfer of it to the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. I vote "yea."

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. WARNER], but knowing that he would vote "yea" on this question, I will vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. PILES. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. ANKENY] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to state that if the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KITTREDGE], who is unavoidably absent, were present, he would vote "yea."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Two-thirds of the Senate having voted in favor thereof, the motion of the Senator from Ohio to make Senate bill 5729 the special order for Wednesday, December 16, 1908, is agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, in view of the result of the vote that has just been taken, I now announce that I shall not make the motion which I gave notice yesterday I would make to-day—that the Senate proceed to the consideration of this business.

RAILROAD SIDING TO WASHINGTON NAVY-YARD.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President—

Mr. ELKINS. I ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

Mr. CARTER. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 20120) to authorize the construction of a railroad siding to the United States navy-yard, and for other purposes, to report it with an amendment, and to submit a report (No. 650) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, I thought I had the floor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair recognized the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER].

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I have just presented, by direction of the Committee on the District of Columbia, a report on a House bill making provision for the construction of a connecting track to the Washington Navy-Yard. It is imperative that this measure, or something akin to it, should become a law at this session of Congress. The Assistant Secretary of the Navy advises me that under the present state of the law track connections with the navy-yard must be cut off unless Congress shall otherwise provide. The failure to pass some legislation on this subject will necessarily result in cutting off the fuel supply and the material supply received by the railroads at the navy-yard. I think it is an urgent matter, and it is only for that reason that I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. ELKINS. Will that displace the unfinished business?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Temporarily the unfinished business will be laid aside. If there is no objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill reported by him.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington Railroad Company be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to construct a single branch track or siding from its present main line, at some point to be approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, between the bridge over the Anacostia River at Pennsylvania avenue SE. and 1,000 feet westerly therefrom; thence extending by curve in a southwestwardly direction across square south of 1080, to Fifteenth street, east; thence southwestwardly across square south of 1067, on a line generally parallel to the center line of Water street, at such distance between the center line of Water street and the present approved north bulkhead line of the Anacostia River as shall be approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, crossing

Fifteenth street SE., Fourteenth street SE., Thirteenth street SE., Twelfth street SE., M and N streets SE., Thirteenth street SE., in a southwestwardly direction by curve or otherwise, as the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall approve, crossing Twelfth street SE., and square south of 1001, to the north abutment of the Anacostia River bridge at the foot of Eleventh street SE.; thence passing under the north end of the said Anacostia River bridge, at such point as may be determined by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia; thence across Eleventh street SE., square 979, Tenth street SE., square 955, and Ninth street SE., on a line generally parallel to the north bulkhead line of the Anacostia River, as now approved, and between it and 100 feet distant therefrom, as may be determined by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, to a connection with the track system of the United States navy-yard.

Sec. 2. That the location of said track and the grade thereof and the plans of construction outside of the United States navy-yard shall be approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and the said Commissioners are also authorized and empowered to make, from time to time, all needful regulations for the movement of trains, cars, and locomotives over the same.

The Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington Railroad Company shall also pave such crossings or other portions of public space occupied by said track and 2 feet exterior to the rails thereof as the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may require, and keep the same in repair at all times.

Sec. 3. That it shall be the duty of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and they are hereby authorized and empowered, upon request of the railroad company, to grant the Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington Railroad Company permission to lay, maintain, and use side tracks and sidings, from the branch track herein authorized, south of said branch track between Twelfth and Fifteenth streets east, and also into squares 955, 979, south of 1025, and east of 1025, and south of 1001, and south of 1048: Provided, That such tracks or sidings shall be laid and maintained under the direction of the said Commissioners in such manner as to least interfere with the free and unobstructed use of the public streets.

Sec. 4. That the entire cost and expense of obtaining the necessary right of way, and the entire cost and expense of constructing the branch track, herein authorized, to a connection with the track system of the navy-yard, shall be paid and defrayed by the Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington Railroad Company, but the said Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington Railroad Company shall not acquire any riparian rights by reason of the location of said track through public space or through any right of way necessary to be acquired: Provided, That upon completion of the branch track herein authorized and directed to be constructed within the time and in the manner herein required the United States shall pay to the Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington Railroad Company, its successors or assigns, the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to reimburse said company for money paid by it for and in securing the necessary rights of way in conformity with this act; and for such purpose the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated.

Sec. 5. That where the line as approved by said Commissioners lies within the bed of any public highway or through any public space, said company is hereby given the right to occupy such portion of said highway or public space as may be approved by said Commissioners, and where such approved line crosses private property, the said railroad company is hereby authorized to acquire a sufficient right of way not exceeding 66 feet in width by purchase, and in the event that such right of way can not be purchased at a price satisfactory to said railroad company, authority is hereby conferred upon said railroad company to condemn the land necessary for such right of way, in the manner and by the method and processes provided by sections 648 to 663, both inclusive, of the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia, which said sections, despite any repeal thereof, are hereby reenacted in full force and effect, for the purposes contemplated by this act, and are especially enacted to like effect as if the same were incorporated herein at length: Provided, That in every case where an assessment for damages or an award shall have been returned by the appraisers, the company, upon paying into court the amount so assessed or awarded, may enter upon and take possession of the land covered thereby, irrespective of whether exceptions to such assessment or award shall be filed or not, and any subsequent proceedings shall not interfere with or affect such possession, but shall only affect the amount of compensation to be paid.

Sec. 6. That the construction of the track or siding herein provided for shall be begun within six months from the date of the passage of this act, and shall be completed within two years from said date, and pending such construction the said Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington Railroad Company is hereby authorized to maintain its present track connection with the United States navy-yard by means of a single track on K street and Canal street SE., either as at present located or as the same may hereafter be relocated, in whole or in part, with the approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, but at the expiration of said two years said railroad company shall at its own expense remove said present track connection and restore the surface of the streets over which the same is laid to the approval of said Commissioners.

Sec. 7. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions hereof be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Sec. 8. That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 19158) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SCOTT, Mr. HAUGEN, and Mr. LAMB managers at the conference on the part of the House.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives, disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 19158) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to, and the Vice-President appointed as the conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. WARREN, Mr. DOLLIVER, and Mr. MONEY.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SCOTT. It becomes necessary for the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. TALIAFERRO] and me to leave the city tomorrow, and as we are in a deadlock in the conference on the pension appropriation bill, I ask that the Senator from Florida and I be excused from further service, and that the Chair appoint two new conferees in our places.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from West Virginia asks that the Senator from Florida [Mr. TALIAFERRO] and himself be excused from further service as conferees on the pension appropriation bill, and that the Chair appoint new conferees. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Chair appoints as conferees in place of the Senators named the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER].

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. Mr. PENROSE. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the request for a conference, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to, and the Vice-President appointed as the conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. PENROSE, Mr. BURROWS, and Mr. CLAY.

COLLECTION OF REVENUE.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of an important customs bill reported by the Committee on Finance, which ought to be passed in order that it may go into conference. It comes with a unanimous report from the committee. It is House bill No. 17506.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 17506) to amend an act entitled "An act to simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenues," approved June 10, 1890, as amended by the act entitled "An act to provide revenues for the Government and to encourage the industries of the United States," approved July 24, 1897, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That section 14 of the act entitled "An act to simplify the laws in relation to the collection of revenues," approved June 10, 1890, as amended by the act entitled "An act to provide revenues for the Government and to encourage the industries of the United States," approved July 24, 1897, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 14. That the decision of the collector as to the rate and amount of duties chargeable upon imported merchandise, including all dutiable costs and charges, and as to all fees and exactions of whatever character (except duties on tonnage), shall be final and conclusive against all persons interested therein, unless the owner, importer, consignee, or agent of such merchandise, or the person paying such fees, charges, and exactions other than duties, shall, within fifteen days after but not before such ascertainment and liquidation of duties, as well in cases of merchandise entered in bond as for consumption, or within fifteen days after the payment of such fees, charges, and exactions, if dissatisfied with such decision, give notice in writing to the collector, setting forth therein distinctly and specifically, and in respect to each entry or payment, the reasons for his objections thereto, and if the merchandise is entered for consumption shall pay the full amount of the duties and charges ascertained to be due thereon. Upon such notice and payment the collector shall transmit the invoice and all the papers and exhibits connected therewith to the board of three general appraisers, which shall be on duty at the port of New York, or to a board of three general appraisers who may be designated by the Secretary of the Treasury for such duty at that port or at any other port, which board shall examine and decide the case thus submitted, and their decision, or that of a majority of them, shall be final and conclusive upon all persons interested therein, and the record shall be transmitted to the proper collector or person acting as such, who shall liquidate the entry accordingly, except in cases where an application shall be filed in the circuit court within the time and in the manner provided for in section 15 of this act: Provided, however, That the board of three general appraisers, or a majority of them, who decided the case may, upon motion of either party, within thirty days next after their decision, and not afterwards, grant a rehearing of said case when, in their opinion, the ends of justice may require it.

"The general board of nine general appraisers shall have power to establish from time to time such reasonable rules of practice, not inconsistent with the law, as may be deemed necessary for the conduct of their proceedings and of the proceedings of the said board of three general appraisers, and to assign or reassign any case to any of such boards of three at any time before promulgation of decision, in order to secure uniformity of decision."

SEC. 2. That section 15 of said act be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 15. That if the owner, importer, consignee, or agent of any imported merchandise, or the collector, or the Secretary of the Treasury, shall be dissatisfied with the decision of the board of general appraisers, as provided for in section 14 of this act, as to the construction of the law and the facts respecting the classification of such merchandise and the rate of duty imposed thereon under such classification, they, or either of them, may, within thirty days next after such decision, if a rehearing has not been previously granted, or within thirty days next after the decision of the board of general appraisers after such rehearing, and not afterwards, apply to the circuit court of the United States within the district in which the matter arises for a review of the questions of law and fact involved in such decision. Such application shall be made by filing in the office of the clerk of said circuit court a concise statement of the errors of law and fact complained of, and a copy of such statement shall be served on the collector, or on the importer, owner, consignee, or agent, as the case may be. Thereupon the court shall order the board of general appraisers to return to said circuit court the record and the evidence taken by them, together with the certified statement of the facts involved in the case, and their decision thereon; and all competent evidence taken by and before said board of general appraisers shall be evidence before said circuit court. The parties litigant shall hereafter be required to introduce all of their evidence before the said board of general appraisers prior to its decision of the case. The return made by the board of general appraisers in pursuance of the order of the circuit court shall constitute the record upon which said circuit court shall give priority to and proceed to hear and determine the questions of law and fact involved in such decision respecting the classification of such merchandise and the rate of duty imposed thereon under such classification: Provided, That the said circuit court is further vested with the power to remand any case pending before it on appeal from a decision of the board of general appraisers when, in its opinion, such proceeding is just and proper, but this shall not be ordered except upon motion duly made and after notice to the opposite party. When such order is made the case shall then be remanded to the board of general appraisers whose decision has been appealed from, and the said board shall hear such further testimony as shall be introduced by either party, and shall return to the circuit court the additional evidence so taken, together with a further certified statement of facts as supplemented or modified by such additional testimony, and their decisions upon the whole case as thus supplemented or modified, which said additional return shall be added to and become part of the record upon which the case shall be heard and determined by the circuit court. When a case has been remanded to the board of general appraisers as above provided, the United States attorney for the district in which the appeal is pending may appear in the proceedings had before the board under the order remanding the case.

"The decision of such circuit court shall be final, and the proper collector, or person acting as such, shall liquidate the entry accordingly, unless such court shall be of the opinion that the question involved is of such importance as to require a review of such decision by the circuit court of appeals of the United States within the circuit in which the matter arises, in which case said circuit court or the judge making the decision may, within thirty days thereafter, allow an appeal to said circuit court of appeals; but an appeal shall be allowed on the part of the United States whenever the Attorney-General shall apply for it within thirty days after the rendition of such decision. On such original application and on any such appeal security for damages and costs shall be given as in the case of other appeals in cases in which the United States is a party. Said circuit court of appeals shall have jurisdiction and power to review such decision, and shall give priority to such cases, and may affirm, modify, or reverse such decision of such circuit court and remand the case with such orders as may seem to it proper in the premises, which shall be executed accordingly.

"The decision of such circuit court of appeals may be reviewed by the Supreme Court of the United States in any of the ways provided in cases arising under the revenue laws by the act approved March 3, 1891, entitled 'An act to establish circuit courts of appeals, and to define and regulate in certain cases the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, and for other purposes.'

"All final judgments, when in favor of the importer, shall be satisfied and paid by the Secretary of the Treasury from the permanent indefinite appropriation provided for in section 24 of this act.

"For the purposes of this section the circuit courts of the United States shall be deemed always open, and said circuit courts, respectively, may establish, and from time to time alter, rules and regulations not inconsistent herewith for the procedure in such cases as they shall deem proper.

"Where cases arise at ports within any jurisdiction having no circuit court, applications for review of the decisions of the board of general appraisers provided for in section 15 of this act shall be filed with the clerks of the courts having cognizance of the same classes of cases as circuit courts, and such cases shall be heard and determined by such courts, with the same powers and in like manner as herein provided for the hearing and determination of such cases in circuit courts, and such decisions shall be subject to review in the manner provided by law."

Sec. 3. That said act be, and the same is hereby, further amended by adding thereto, after said section 30 thereof, a new section, to read as follows:

"Sec. 31. That all of the general appraisers of merchandise heretofore or hereafter appointed under the authority of said act shall hold their office during good behavior, but may, after due hearing, be removed by the President for the following causes, and no other: Neglect of duty, malfeasance in office, or inefficiency."

"That hereafter the salary of each of the general appraisers of merchandise shall be at the rate of $10,000 per annum."

"That the said boards of general appraisers and the members thereof shall have and possess all the powers of a circuit court of the United States in preserving order, compelling the attendance of witnesses, and the production of evidence, and in punishing for contempt."

Sec. 4. That all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

Sec. 5. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

Mr. BACON. I presume the bill is all right, but I do not know much about it. I notice a clause which seems to make an appraiser a life officer. Is that correct?

Mr. ALDRICH. It makes him hold office during good behavior, but he is removable for certain causes, which are stated.

Mr. BACON. Has that been the case heretofore?

Mr. ALDRICH. That has not been the case heretofore. These officers have been removable at the pleasure of the President for political or other reasons.

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. ALDRICH. The bill provides that they shall hold their offices during good behavior, and can only be removed for certain specified causes.

Mr. BACON. The point that I desired information on was whether the law as it now stands retains them in office during good behavior.

Mr. ALDRICH. No; the law as it now stands allows their removal at the pleasure of the President.

Mr. BACON. Well, possibly I did not put my inquiry in the right shape. There is no fixed term, in other words, as I understand now?

Mr. ALDRICH. There is no fixed term.

Mr. BACON. And the only change then the bill makes is to throw greater restrictions around their removal.

Mr. ALDRICH. Around their removal.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

MOTTO ON GOLD AND SILVER COINS.

Mr. ALDRICH. There is another bill reported from the Committee on Finance, in which, I think, Senators are all interested, providing for the restoration of the motto of "In God we trust" to certain gold and silver coins. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 17296) providing for the restoration of the motto "In God we trust" on certain denominations of the gold and silver coins of the United States.

The Secretary read the bill, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It provides that the motto "In God we trust," heretofore inscribed on certain denominations of the gold and silver coins of the United States of America, shall hereafter be inscribed upon all such gold and silver coins as heretofore.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE Q. ALLEN.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask unanimous consent now for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4435) for the relief of George Q. Allen.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to George Q. Allen, of Chicago, Ill., $528, in full compensation for his services as crier of the United States circuit court of appeals for the seventh circuit, at Chicago, Ill., from October 5, 1896, until May 31, 1898, as per findings of fact made by the Court of Claims.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REMOVAL OF RESTRICTIONS FROM INDIAN ALLOTMENTS.

Mr. OWEN. I ask the Senator from West Virginia, in charge of the unfinished business, to yield to me that the Senate may conclude the consideration of Calendar No. 588.

Mr. ELKINS. I have agreed to do so temporarily, provided that the Senator who has it in hand will see that it does not take much time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the unfinished business will be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. OWEN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 15641) for the removal of restrictions from part of the lands of allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. OWEN. I propose the amendment I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert at the end of the bill as a new section the following:

Sec. 15. That for six months after the approval of this act the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to enroll as members of either the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, or Seminole tribes such persons as the records in his office may show were wrongfully omitted from the rolls of either of said tribes by reason of error of law or of inadvertence or because of want of time to properly consider their applications for enrollment, and he may consider any evidence heretofore filed for or against such applicants, and the said Secretary is further authorized, in any case where he is satisfied from the evidence and records in his office that a member was wrongfully enrolled as a freedman and should have been enrolled as an Indian, to transfer said member from the approved freedman roll to the roll of citizens by blood of such tribe: Provided, That in suits brought to restore the names of persons struck from the final rolls of the Five Civilized Tribes, the Secretary of the Interior, as defendant, may offer as a defense the record to show that such name had been erroneously placed upon such roll, and the name of no person shall be restored to such roll who was not originally entitled under the law to have been enrolled, and the burden of proof in such cases shall be upon the Secretary of the Interior.

Provided further, That the children of Choctaw freedmen entitled under the act of April 26, 1906, to make application under that law, and who failed to apply for lack of proper notice, shall have ninety days from and after the passage of this act within which to make such application, and such application shall have the same effect as if it had been made within the time originally proposed by such law.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OWEN. I move to strike out lines 17 to 25 on page 10.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 10 it is proposed to strike out lines 17 to 25, inclusive, as follows:

Sec. 12. That the Secretary of the Interior may permit any lessee having a coal and asphalt lease covering segregated coal or asphalt lands in the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations in Oklahoma, which lease has been approved by the Secretary of the Interior, to surrender any tract or part thereof and to substitute therefor, subject to the terms of the lease and approval by the Secretary of the Interior, adjoining land within said segregation substantially equal in area to the land surrendered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That amendment has heretofore been agreed to. Without objection, the amendment will be regarded as open. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. OWEN. On page 2, I move to strike out beginning with the words "All restricted," in line 23, to the end of the paragraph.

The SECRETARY. In the committee amendment at the foot of page 2 it is proposed to strike out, in line 23, all after the word "lands" to the end of the paragraph, in the following words:

All restricted allotted land of allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes shall be subject to taxation where such land has been leased, but taxes thus levied shall not become a lien against the land, but shall be paid by the lessee and shall be a lien against any crops or values produced from the land.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is addressed to an amendment already agreed to. Without objection, the amendment will be regarded as open.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. OWEN. After line 23, on page 8, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 8, after line 23, it is proposed to insert:

The Secretary of the Interior shall be further authorized, at the request of any allottee with restricted land, to bring suit on his behalf to remove cloud to the title thereto, without cost or charges to the said allottees, and all necessary expenses incurred under this section shall be defrayed from the money herein appropriated as hereinafter provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OWEN. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add as a new section at the end of the bill the following:

SEC. 16. That the provisions of section 13 of the act of Congress approved April 26, 1906 (34 Stat. L., 137), shall not apply to town lots in town sites heretofore established, surveyed, platted, and appraised under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior. But nothing herein contained shall be construed to authorize the conveyance of any interest in the coal or asphalt underlying said lots.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas subsequently said: I wish to make an announcement in connection with the bill for the removal of restrictions. The Senate was engaged in the consideration of the committee amendments, and I presumed when amendments of that character had been disposed of there would be an opportunity for the consideration of individual amendments. My attention was distracted when those amendments were disposed of, and I did not have an opportunity to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that my colleague had pending an amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair put the question to the Senate, stating that the bill was in the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. My attention was not diverted for more than a moment. I am not charging the Chair with any unfairness. It is due to my own dereliction.

Mr. ELKINS. How long will the Senator from Arkansas require?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. There are a great many ways in which I can get my statement before the Senate. The shortest way would be to permit me to make the statement now.

Mr. ELKINS. Will it take long?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. It will not require over ten minutes; perhaps not so long.

It may be that the request which I am about to make is not permissible under the rules.

Mr. ELKINS. If it will take only a few minutes, I am willing to yield.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. My colleague [Mr. DAVIS] is a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs. He differs with the committee as to the disposition of the matters covered by the bill just considered. He offered an amendment, but in consequence of the necessity for his absence from the city at this time he has not an opportunity to present the matter. Having been offered and printed, I took it for granted it would be brought to the attention of the Senate. In connection with the consideration of that amendment, he has prepared some remarks which he has reduced to writing, and he asked me to read the same to the Senate when the consideration of the amendment was reached in the regular course of the passage of the bill. That is the request which I now desire to make. But I do not know whether under the rules remarks prepared by an absent Senator can be submitted to the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is a matter for the determination of the Senate.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Then I ask the judgment of the Senate upon the proposition.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas may read the remarks as a part of his own.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I am not sufficiently advised about the merits of the proposition involved in the bill to have any views about it. When I find my mind in that condition I usually accept the judgment of the committee. But as my colleague is not of the same mind, I will now present to the Senate his views on some features of the bill, or rather some omissions in the bill, which he sought to cover by an amendment.

What I read represents the views exclusively of my colleague. I might or might not agree with him if I had investigated the matter sufficiently to have any views upon the subject. I disclaim any responsibility for the statement.

"Mr. President, I am actuated in offering this amendment by principles of justice and humanity. Never before, since the establishment of this Republic, has it ever been seriously proposed by the National Congress to legislate American citizens out of their own homes, to confiscate their property and to bestow it upon other persons, and to render the legal owners thereof and their wives and children destitute, mendicants, and paupers. Yet, sir, this bill, if unamended, will accomplish this frightful and inhuman purpose.

"The situation existing in the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations, as the result of the work of administrative officers, as disclosed by the official record, beggars description. It is the result and product of fraud, mistake, and incompetency on the part of administrative officers charged, by law, with the duty of dividing this estate among the legal and equitable beneficiaries.

"I want to place before the Senate some of the salient and indisputable facts with reference to the title by which this property is held and the administration of this estate by the departmental officers.

"By article 2 of a treaty negotiated September 27, 1830, and ratified by the Senate of the United States and proclaimed as a law on February 24, 1831 (7 Stats., 333), the United States agreed to specially convey certain lands west of the Mississippi River—and which are now being allotted—in fee-simple title to the Choctaw Nation in trust for the exclusive use and benefit of a designated class of persons composed of all those persons comprising the Choctaw community on the day the treaty was ratified and their descendants.

"On March 24, 1837, the Senate of the United States ratified a treaty entered into by the Choctaws and Chickasaws, by the terms and provisions of Article I of which treaty those persons comprising the Chickasaw community on the day the treaty was ratified and their descendants acquired by purchase an equal, undivided, individual interest in the property agreed to be conveyed to the Choctaws by Article II of the treaty of 1830 on the same terms that the Choctaws held it, so that by this treaty the Chickasaws became a part of the designated class of Choctaws for whose exclusive use and benefit the grant was to be made.

"On February 24, 1843, the President of the United States specially conveyed by patent the western lands in fee-simple title to the Choctaw Nation, to be held by said nation in trust for the exclusive use and benefit of said designated class of persons. Thus this was and is now trust property, owned exclusively by the Choctaws and Chickasaws, the legal title to which is held by the Choctaw Nation in trust.

"In 1896 Congress, in response to an almost universal demand for the abolishment of these Indian governments, passed an act, approved June 10, 1896, directing a Commission, known as the "Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes," to receive, consider, and determine applications of persons claiming citizenship in the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations preparatory to the preparation of final citizenship rolls, to be used as a basis for the distribution in severalty of the tribal property. This act further provided that either the Indian nations—who were represented by their officials and attorneys—or the applicants could appeal from the decision of the Commission to the United States district courts. Only a comparative few of the Choctaws and Chickasaws applied to said Commission under said act, and of the number who applied appeals were taken to the United States district courts in cases involving the rights of about 5,000 persons.

"The United States district courts heard the cases and rendered judgments admitting to citizenship approximately 4,000 persons. Appeals were taken in these cases from the judgments of the United States district courts to the Supreme Court of the United States, which court affirmed said judgments. (Stephens v. Cherokee Nation, 174 U. S., p. 476.) Thereafter by act approved July 1, 1902, a legislative commission, designated therein as the "Choctaw-Chickasaw citizenship court," was created with authority to review, revise, and annul all of said judgments entered by the United States district courts and affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States. The attorneys who procured this legislation held inchoate contracts with the officials of the Indian governments by which, in the event they could secure a reversal of said judgments rendered by the Federal courts, they were to receive 9 per cent of the value of the property each such person was entitled to receive under said judgment. This citizenship court rendered judgments and decrees affirming the judgments of the Federal courts in cases involving the rights of 156 persons and reversed and rendered null and void the judgments of the Federal courts in cases involving the rights of approximately 3,800 claimants. This citizenship court, under Congressional act approved March 3, 1903, was authorized to fix the compensation of the attorneys who secured the legislation under which the court was created, for their entire services rendered in these cases, both in procuring the legislation and conducting said cases before said citizenship court. This court, under that act, entered a decree awarding a fee of $750,000 to said attorneys, but did not state upon what basis the allowance was made.

"The charge has repeatedly been made, and, sir, it is generally believed to be true, that certain members of that court were improperly influenced to render judgments denying these people their property and homes. Certain it is, sir, that a direct and specific charge that certain members of that court were bribed to render decisions denying to these poor, ignorant, and helpless women and children their homes was made to the Secretary of the Interior last November by one Gus Rosenwinkle. That man, sir, was the chief law clerk of the firm of attorneys who had been employed to deprive those people of their property and render them homeless. He told the Secretary at a hearing arranged last November for that purpose of the manner in which the bribery occurred, the times and places, through what banks the checks passed, of telegraphic correspondence upon the subject, and gave Mr. Garfield a list of the names of persons who had personal knowledge of the various transactions. The Secretary of the Interior admitted all this to the Committee on Indian Affairs. Yet, sir, he refused to furnish the memorandum of Rosenwinkle's statement to the committee or to furnish the names of the persons who knew of this infamous transaction, upon the paltry plea that Rosenwinkle would not verify his statement under oath or ever sign it. Secretary Garfield admitted that he had never investigated this statement, personally or by agent, and had never made any inquiry into the current reports that members of that court were bribed.

"Mr. President, a man who would ignore such charges, who would make no effort to ascertain the rights of these poor, helpless women and children who had been deprived of their homes, is unfit to administer upon this estate and unworthy longer to have control of the property of these helpless wards of the Government.

"Mr. President, the one fact that the Federal courts of this country, including the Supreme Court, found approximately 4,000 of these people entitled to property rights, and of these 4,000 persons the citizenship court, on review, found only 156 so entitled, casts suspicion on the work of this citizenship court. Either the Federal courts were incompetent or this citizenship court was incompetent, and, sir, I for one prefer to believe in the ability of our Federal judiciary.

"Following the act of 1896 came the act approved June 28, 1898. This act, known as the 'Curtis Act,' was intended to provide for the enrollment of all persons who were resident in the nations who were entitled to enrollment and would, had the administrative officers adhered to its provisions, resulted in the enrollment of all persons entitled thereto who were residing in the nations. This act directed the Commission to 'enroll all persons of Indian blood' as Choctaw or Chickasaw citizens, and to enroll all others who were lawfully entitled thereto.

"Judge Willis J. Van Devanter, then Assistant Attorney-General of the United States, rendered an opinion construing this act for the guidance of the administrative officers, under date March 17, 1899, in which he says:

"The Commission was authorized and directed to enroll the persons indicated (that is, all persons of Indian blood), and to investigate the right of all other persons whose names were found upon any tribal roll, and to omit all such as may have been placed there by fraud or without authority of law. They were not authorized to add any name not found upon some roll of the tribe except those of descendants of persons rightfully upon some roll.

"Neither the Commission nor the Secretary of the Interior has ever consulted the official tribal rolls prepared by Government officials and agents during the years 1830 to 1890, inclusive, which are to-day in the custody and possession of the Secretary of the Treasury. The only rolls used by the Secretary and the Commission were rolls prepared by Government officials who were peculiarly interested in the property, and whose individual interests in this property were increased in proportion as the number of persons found entitled to share in the property was reduced.

"This act did not authorize or require the submission of an application for any particular enrollment, the duty of correctly enrolling every person entitled thereto devolving wholly upon the administrative officers.

"The Commission served notice by publication and otherwise upon all persons claiming rights in the nations to appear before it at certain places and on certain days. Those persons, as shown by the official records, whose right to enrollment was not questioned by the Indian officials, were not examined by the Commission. Only those persons whose rights were challenged by the officials of the tribes were examined by the Commission, the exact testimony not being reduced to writing, but only such extracts thereof and memoranda as the Commission saw fit to make of record were recorded. Two years later, when the Commission commenced the preparation of the official rolls, it held that unless the person appearing before it under the act of 1898 made application for enrollment as a blood citizen he was not entitled to enrollment. This holding of the Commission was approved by the Department.

The act of Congress did not authorize or require the submission of any application. As a result of this arbitrary, unwarranted, and unlawful holding thousands of persons of Choctaw and Chickasaw Indian blood were denied enrollment.

"In other cases, as appears from the official record, their rights to enrollment were determined under bills pending in Congress and which were not then and never became laws.

"William O. Beall, an official of the Commission, and who had direct charge of the work of enrolling the Choctaws and Chickasaws, appeared before W. D. Foulke, a special agent of the Department, and testified under oath as follows (S. Doc. 357, 59th Cong., 2d sess., p. 88):

"Q. Now, Mr. Beall, I want to ask you if you have at any time in the hearing of any cases ever quoted a provision from a bill pending in Congress which had not become a law for the purpose of determining the rights of the applicants?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Can you state in what case?—A. I couldn't now. In a great number of cases.

"In an official report, under date of March 4, 1907, the Secretary of the Interior advised the Senate that in one week he had examined and decided 2,023 cases involving the rights of these people, and departmental officers (Ward and Henderson) admitted that these cases embraced not less than 10,000 persons. Think, sir, of passing upon the rights of 10,000 helpless people, wards of this Government, in one week. The records in many of these cases were voluminous, and no man could have properly considered and determined more than one of these cases in a day. Yet the Secretary of the Interior determined 2,023 of them in one week. How did he do it? By affirming without examination the decisions of the Commission written by that man Beall, who decided the cases for the Commission under bills pending in Congress, as he so testified.

"But this is not all. Not content with despoiling these people of their rights, these administrative officers sought additional victims. A case, known as the Coleman case, already acted upon by the Secretary, and which action was final so far as the Department, at least, was concerned, was referred to the Department of Justice for an opinion. The Attorney-General referred it to a young man who had graduated from a law school, but who had never practiced law and whose knowledge of law was confined to that particular system of jurisprudence found only in the Departments here in Washington. That man, sir, who could not draw the initial pleadings in a proceeding to replevin a pig, wrote an opinion, which resulted in the Secretary arbitrarily striking the names of upward of 2,000 persons from the finally approved rolls of these tribes. Sir, that action was without authority of law and the Supreme Court and court of appeals of this District have so held, but the Secretary of the Interior remains obdurate and will not recognize the rights of these people, notwithstanding the Attorney-General has recently advised him that the striking of these names was unlawful and that the departmental action can not be defended in the courts. Each person whose name was thus unlawfully stricken from those rolls must, according to the Secretary's policy, now bring a suit in the district courts to compel the Secretary to place his name back on the tribal rolls. These suits are being encouraged by the Secretary, who is to-day approving contracts with attorneys for fees to bring these actions against him, and these contracts he thus approved are made a lien on the property and funds of these helpless people.

"Sir, the Secretary of the Interior has arbitrarily and without the slightest pretext of authority withdrawn from allotment 1,380,000 acres of the common lands of these people and has included these lands in a game preserve or forest reserve. He has dispossessed thousands of Indians who lived on this land, who had their homes and improvements thereon, and compelled them to go elsewhere and make new homes, all because, according to his own statement to the Senate Indian Committee, he thought a game preserve or forest reserve would be more beneficial to these Indians. In that reserve, I am advised, can be heard daily the incessant buzz of the devastating sawmill. The timber is being cut by men whose political ties bind them closely to an organization with which the Secretary of the Interior is not, I take it, wholly ignorant. While this timber is being cut, Indians—real Indians, men, women, and children—are being driven from their homes and denied the right to settle in this reserve, although they own this land in fee. During the hearings before the committee the Secretary admitted that he did not know that these lands were owned in fee simple title by these Indians; yet, Mr. President, he has proceeded to handle this property as though it was a part of the public domain of the United States and these Indians occupied it solely at the sufferance of the departmental officers.

"The official certifications contained in Senate Report No. 5013, part 2, Fifty-ninth Congress, second session, show that blood Indians have been enrolled as citizens of these tribes and given distributive shares in the property, while their full brothers and sisters, born and raised in the same home, have been denied enrollment, and thereby denied their property rights, or enrolled as freedmen or negroes, and as such given limited property rights of 40 acres of land each. Many full-blood Indians have not been enrolled, although they have been living on this reservation all their lives.

"It has been intimated by some and charged in the public press that I was endeavoring to secure the enrollment of negroes as Indians. This charge I brand as false. I am not seeking the enrollment of negroes as Indians. I am insisting that Indians shall be enrolled as Indians, and not as negroes, and that this question shall at least be submitted to the Federal courts for a decision.

"Now, what will be the effect of this bill if it should become a law without amendment? These thousands of Indians that I have described, and who are now and have been for years living upon the lands to which they have a lawful right, have made valuable and lasting improvements thereon. They have built their little homes and have and are now rearing and maintaining their families. They were denied enrollment by this Commission and defrauded of their rights by the citizenship court. They are to-day holding possession of their property, notwithstanding the Secretary of the Interior has allotted their property on which they have their homes to some person who has been enrolled. The person enrolled selected the property of these people because it was improved, and therefore more valuable. Pass this bill in its present form and you will permit the person holding the allotment certificate or patent to sell the homes of these people to a third party or innocent purchaser, and these people are left remediless. The courts have held that they have no status in the courts and can not maintain a suit to protect their rights.

"Now, what does this amendment do? It permits these people who own this land in fee to go into the courts and have their rights determined. The same law is to-day applicable to every claimant to Indian property in this country, excepting only the people of the Five Civilized Tribes and the Quapaw Nation. Is it unreasonable or unjust to ask you, before you permit the person holding the allotment certificate to these lands to sell and convey the legal title, to permit these people to go into a Federal court and have their rights judicially determined?

"Sir, since the organization of this Republic such a request has never yet been denied an American citizen. Ah! sir, such a right is not to-day denied the noncitizen reservation Indian in any State in this land. This amendment only seeks to extend to these people the same law, word for word, that applies to every Indian claimant to Indian property in any State in this country. This amendment will protect these ignorant Indians. It will preserve the homes of the women and children. It will keep them from becoming mendicants and paupers and eating their daily bread at the hands of charity. I sincerely trust that it will be adopted."

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, just for a moment, in connection with the remarks which have just been offered. So far as they refer to the citizens' court, I think it is only due to that court to call attention in that connection to Senate documents 372 and 387, and also the hearings on Senate bill 4736. I simply offer that in justice to the members of that court. In these documents the matter was discussed by the Department of Justice and the Department of the Interior.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRANDEGEE in the chair). Does the Senator from Minnesota ask to have them printed in the Record?

Mr. CLAPP. I do not. They have all been printed. I simply wanted, in connection with the speech of the Senator from Arkansas, to have attention called to them in the Record.

NATIONAL FORESTS.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I desire to give notice that to-morrow, immediately after the routine morning business, I shall call up the bill (S. 4825) for acquiring national forests in the Southern Appalachian Mountains and White Mountains.

SUSPENSION OF COMMODITY CLAUSE, INTERSTATE-COMMERCE LAW.

Mr. ELKINS. I ask the Senate to resume the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 74) suspending the commodity clause of the present interstate-commerce law.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, facts in connection with this matter were laid before the Senate last week, but probably they have been forgotten or are not fresh in the minds of Senators. Therefore I should like to refer again to the general purport and scope of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution is not to suspend any law, but it simply suspends for twenty months the penalties of what is known as the "commodity clause" of the Hepburn bill. The situation is just this: The roads owning coal lands, particularly the anthracite coal roads, have been unable, according to the information in possession of the Interstate Commerce Commission and I assume the Attorney-General, to comply with the law, for many reasons.

The charters of some of these coal roads are from forty to fifty years old and were granted by special acts of the legislatures in various States with a view to permitting the railroads to own coal lands so as to strengthen their credit and command capital by mortgaging their lines with the coal lands, to build the roads, and to find freight for the roads after they were built.

There are four or five of these great roads that have made from time to time mortgages on all their property, the lines of the road as well as coal lands. On some of these roads and their coal lands there are as many as three mortgages made under different dates to secure three sets of bonds, and there has been litigation, difficulty, and trouble, as can well be imagined by every lawyer in the Senate, to so adjust the relations between these conflicting bondholders that they might be able to separate the coal land from the railroads. That has been attended with legal difficulties, and therefore it has occasioned some delay.

In the case of roads owning coal lands, where there was but one mortgage and that mortgage did not cover all the coal lands, there has not been much difficulty in separating them from the railroads. In the case of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad the lands were separated, and the railroad succeeded in disposing of the land, but many of the other great railroads have been unable to do so.

The situation is just this: The anthracite coal roads own 91 per cent of the coal in the country. I will read from the report of the anthracite coal strike commission. The commission says: "We accept Mr. Griffith's statement that nearly 91 per cent of the anthracite deposits are actually owned by transportation companies."

Mr. President, if the joint resolution should not pass and these penalties are not suspended, what will be the situation?

Rather than incur the risk of a $5,000 penalty for every violation of the law, which would mean $5,000 for every time the railroads hauled a carload of coal, and rather than incur the risk of this severe penalty in case the law is held to be constitutional, the railroads may prefer to comply with the law and not ship their own coal. That would take out of the market 91 per cent of the anthracite coal next winter. What would the people do? How could they get fuel, not only domestic fuel, but fuel for factories, plants, and all kinds of small industries in the large cities?

This is the condition that would confront the country in case the railroads should comply with the law by refusing to haul their own coal; the people in the East would be without fuel. The railroads have proceeded, so far as I can understand, in good faith to comply with the law. Some of them have complied with it by parting with their coal lands and others find they are beset by legal complications and difficulties because of inability to find lessees or purchasers for their vast holdings of coal lands.

A resolution was introduced by the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] when this matter was up for discussion last week calling for further information of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and that reply has been received by the Senate, and it has been laid on every Senator's table. It gives the reasons for delay and the inability to comply with the law. I do not know whether the Senate wants to be detained long enough to have it read. I will not have it read unless it is desired.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. ELKINS. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. Is the Senator speaking of the amendment I have offered?

Mr. ELKINS. No, sir; of the answer to the resolution submitted by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER].

Mr. FULTON. I beg pardon.

Mr. ELKINS. If it is desired to have it read at the desk, it can be read. I will ask that it be made a part of my remarks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[Senate Document No. 465, Sixtieth Congress, first session.]

COMPLIANCE OF RAILROADS ENGAGED IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE WITH COMMODITIES CLAUSE OF ACT TO REGULATE COMMERCE.

Letter from the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, transmitting, pursuant to Senate resolution, certain information relating to the compliance by railroads engaged in interstate commerce with paragraph 5 of the amended section 1 of the act to regulate commerce, commonly known as the "commodities clause."

May 8, 1908.—Ordered to be printed and to lie on the table.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION,
Washington, May 8, 1908.

To the Senate:

The Interstate Commerce Commission has the honor to submit the following in response to the resolution of the Senate adopted May 6, 1908, directing the Commission to furnish certain information relating to the compliance by railroads engaged in interstate commerce with paragraph 5 of the amended section 1 of the act to regulate commerce, commonly known as the "commodities clause":

First. This provision by its terms became effective "from and after May 1, 1908," or about a week ago. The Commission has no official knowledge or information as to whether or not, since the date mentioned, railroads engaged in interstate commerce have complied with the provision in question, but believes from common report that they have not done so, except perhaps in a few instances, and excepting also those railroads, comprising probably the greater part of the whole number, which prior to May 1, 1908, were not engaged in transportation now made unlawful by the commodities clause. It will be observed that railroads are not required to make any report to the Commission upon this subject, nor has the Commission any means of ascertaining the facts in regard to compliance or noncompliance with the provision referred to, by railroads generally or by any particular railroad, without conducting an investigation for that purpose. Such an investigation the Commission has not yet been able to undertake.

Second. The Commission has no knowledge or information whatever of any agreement, arrangement, or understanding between railroad companies and the authorities charged with the duty of enforcing said provision, or otherwise, whereby or on account of which said railroad companies or any of them are to have immunity from punishment for violations of the commodities provision, and therefore can furnish no information upon that subject.

Third. Since the Senate resolution was received we have communicated by telephone with the receiver of the Western Maryland Railroad, and are informed by him that he is not complying with the provision in question. He further states that his reasons for such non-compliance will be furnished to the Commission at an early day. When those reasons are received they will be transmitted to the Senate.

Fourth. The reasons which induced the Commission to recommend, in a letter to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, the passage of Senate joint resolution No. 74 are as follows:

Upon the adoption of the joint resolution of March 7, 1906, directing the Commission to investigate the subject of coal and oil lands and the interests of railroad companies or their officers therein, the Commission employed Mr. William A. Glasgow, Jr., a prominent lawyer of Philadelphia, to act as its counsel in conducting the investigation. Mr. Glasgow was employed because he was known to the Commission to have exceptional knowledge of the subject and to be otherwise qualified for the service required. Some time in the month of March, 1908, Mr. Glasgow brought informally to the attention of one or more members of the Commission the hardship which would result to railroads generally if the provision in question went into effect on the 1st of May following, because of the financial depression then and for some time before prevailing, which created conditions presumably not anticipated when this provision was enacted in June, 1906, and particularly to lessees of coal lands on the Norfolk and Western Railroad. About the same time, as we understand, Mr. Glasgow had an interview with the President upon this subject, and afterwards addressed him a letter in relation thereto. This letter was referred to the Commission by the President for a report, which the Commission submitted a few days later. Copies of Mr. Glasgow's letter to the President and the Commission's report to the President are annexed hereto.

It will be seen from this report that the Commission favored postponing from May 1, 1908, to January 1, 1910, the effective date of the commodities clause for the reasons therein stated. These reasons apply with even greater force to joint resolution No. 74, the adoption of which was favored by the Commission in its letter of April 2, 1908, to the chairman of the Senate committee. Moreover, the Commission was of the opinion that this joint resolution was preferable to a postponement of the effective date of the provision in question, because it left the law in force and merely suspended for a time the accumulation of penalties.

For these reasons the Commission believed and still believes that it is in the public interest as well as a matter of fairness to the parties directly concerned to suspend the penalties for violation of this provision—penalties not specifically imposed by its terms, but resulting from general provisions of the regulating statute—for a sufficient time to test in the courts the validity of this enactment. We do not understand the resolution of the Senate as requesting an immediate investigation of this matter; but an investigation will be made in due course and can be made at once, if the Senate so desires.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

MARTIN A. KNAPP, Chairman.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION,
Washington, March 12, 1908.

To the President:

The Interstate Commerce Commission is in receipt of your request for a report by it upon the propriety of an extension by act of Congress of the time within which common carriers engaged in interstate and foreign commerce shall be required to comply with the provision of the act of June 29, 1906, which is as follows:

"From and after May 1, 1908, it shall be unlawful for any railroad to transport from any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, to any other State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or to any foreign country, any article or commodity other than timber, and the manufactured products thereof, manufactured, mined, or produced by it or under its authority or which it may own in whole or in part, or in which it may have any interest, direct or indirect, except such articles or commodities as may be necessary and intended for its use in the conduct of its business as a common carrier."

We are also in receipt of a letter on this subject dated March 6, 1908, from Mr. William A. Glasgow, Jr., addressed to you and referred to us.

Complying with your request, the Commission respectfully reports that while it has no definite knowledge as to what extent carriers subject to the law have rid themselves of the ownership of or interest in property with a view to compliance with this provision, or what steps have been taken to that end, it does not doubt that of the large amount of property involved which was held by the carriers in one way and another at the time this act was passed, much of it is still held by them. By the gross and extensive abuses and wrongs found to have resulted from the interest of carriers in properties producing freight carried and sold by them in competition with their patrons, we are convinced that this provision is based upon sound principles, and is a wise policy which should be persistently adhered to. But in view of the great extent, value, and importance of these properties, and the probable difficulties of making and executing plans for the bona fide disposition of the same, in full conformity to the spirit as well as the letter of this law, on reasonable terms and without undue sacrifice, and taking into account present financial and commercial conditions, and also the fact that these properties and interests for the most part, if not altogether, were acquired either pursuant to charter authority or in the absence of any law forbidding any such acquisition, we believe the ends of justice would be better served under all circumstances if further time were allowed for conforming to the requirements of this provision. We would not suggest a longer period than to January 1, 1910.

We also believe that whatever time, if any, shall be allowed beyond the date now fixed should be a definite time, without authority on the part of this Commission or other tribunal to extend such period.

Very respectfully,

MARTIN A. KNAPP, Chairman.

PHILADELPHIA, March 4, 1908.

DEAR SIR: Referring to the matter which I presented to you briefly on March 4, and which you suggested that I set out in writing for reference to the Interstate Commerce Commission, I desire to call your attention to the following clause of section 1 of the act to regulate commerce, approved June 29, 1906, commonly known as the "commodity clause":

"From and after May 1, 1908, it shall be unlawful for any railroad to transport from any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, to any other State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or to any foreign country, any article or commodity other than timber, and the manufactured products thereof, manufactured, mined, or produced by it or under its authority, or which it may own in whole or in part, or in which it may have any interest, direct or indirect, except such articles or commodities as may be necessary and intended for its use in the conduct of its business as a common carrier."

The Interstate Commerce Commission, under joint resolution of Congress, conducted an investigation as to "discriminations and monopolies in coal and oil," and on the 25th of January, 1907, made its report to Congress, and among the remedies suggested by the Commission for the discriminations which it found to exist was the following:

"Fourth. That carriers engaged in interstate commerce be forbidden, after reasonable time, to own or have any interest, directly or indirectly, in any operated coal properties, except such as are exclusively for their own fuel supply, and that ownership, either directly or indirectly, by officers or employees of any common carriers of any coal properties, or any of the stock of coal companies along the line of road by which they are employed, be forbidden."

This suggested remedy for evils of which the Commission was informed was fully justified, and the commodity clause of the commerce act above referred to had been enacted to afford the very remedy which the Commission had in mind.

For my own part, I have been thoroughly convinced of the necessity for legislation of this character for years. My attention was first directed along this line by the case of New Haven Railroad Company v. Interstate Commerce Commission (200 U. S. 361), which I tried as counsel for the Interstate Commerce Commission in the circuit court of the United States, and in this case the Supreme Court clearly suggested that there should be Congressional legislation forbidding railroad companies from engaging in the buying and selling of coal.

Again my attention was called to the necessity of confining common carriers to the single business of transportation, without any interest in the coal properties served by them, by the case of United States v. West Virginia and Northern Railroad Company, decided by Judge Goff on the 15th of October, 1903, to be found in 125 Federal Reporter, 252, and affirmed by the circuit court of appeals (Mr. Chief Justice Fuller), 134 Federal Reporter, 198.

That there may be no misapprehension of my situation with regard to this matter, I would say that I am now, and have been for years, counsel for the large majority of mines in what is known as the "Pocahontas Flat Top coal field," in West Virginia, and the majority of the companies which I represent in that field are lessees of coal lands which are owned by the Pocahontas Coal and Coke Company, the stock of which is owned by the Norfolk and Western Railway Company. These lands were purchased by the Pocahontas Coal and Coke Company in 1901 from the Flat Top Coal Land Association, and at that time the interest of the Norfolk and Western Railway Company in these lands began. The companies I represent were lessees, engaged in mining coal on the lands at the time they were purchased by the Pocahontas Coal and Coke Company, or, indirectly, by the Norfolk and Western Railway Company, and the latter company is simply landlord and has no interest in an operating company.

The Interstate Commerce Commission is fully advised of this whole transaction and the purposes of the Norfolk and Western Railway Company in acquiring an interest in these coal lands, as the matter was fully gone into during the investigation held by them, above referred to.

The clients I represent have only one road over which they can ship their coal to market—to wit, the Norfolk and Western Railway Company—and this company serves in the same coal field and in adjoining fields a large number of coal operators mining upon lands in which, or in the output of which, the Norfolk and Western Railway Company has no interest, either directly or indirectly, and therefore there can be no question about the railway carrying the coal of these other shippers. The coal companies which I represent feel considerable anxiety as to what may be the result after May 1 if the Norfolk and Western Railway Company does not rid itself of its indirect interest, by royalty, on the coal from lands upon which they are mining as lessees.

While it is true that since the 29th of June, 1906, the Norfolk and Western Railway Company has been advised that the commodity clause of section 1 of the act would go into effect on May 1, 1908, the conditions have been such that it has been, as we are informed and believed to be true, utterly impossible for that company within that time to put itself in a position to transport our coal without coming under the condemnation of the commodity clause aforesaid.

I understand that this matter has been taken up with the Attorney-General, who has authorized a statement to the effect that—"the Department of Justice contemplates the institution of proceedings as soon as possible after the date named (May 1, 1908) whereby a prompt determination of this question (the constitutionality of the act) by the Supreme Court of the United States may be obtained. It is expected that the railroads concerned will cooperate with the Government to this end; and if they do so in good faith and if they in good faith immediately obey the decision of the Supreme Court when rendered, it is not the purpose of the Department of Justice to prosecute them for a failure to comply with the terms of the act, pending the decision of the Supreme Court."

This statement of the Attorney-General evinced the purpose on the part of the Department to fairly protect litigants pending the decision of the constitutionality of the act and went as far as the Department of Justice could properly go, but Your Excellency will see that upon the decisions by the Supreme Court the carriers will be required to "immediately obey the decision of the Supreme Court when rendered," and if the railroads cooperate in good faith in making a test case, and the decision there is expedited by the Department of Justice, there is no reason why, during the fall of 1908, the Supreme Court should not settle the constitutionality of this clause of the act.

I further call attention to the fact that the presumption is that the act is constitutional, and the most serious objection urged to it is made by companies having by their charters, which were granted prior to the enactment of the interstate-commerce act, the right to own coal lands.

While I am especially interested in the maintenance of the principle which the commodity clause was intended to enforce, and while the coal companies which I represent are fully in harmony with that principle, we recognize that at present, and for the last year, it has been impossible for the Norfolk and Western Railway Company (and I believe the same is true of other companies) to put itself in a position to meet the requirements of the act on this subject. And the prospect is that when the constitutionality of the act is settled by the Supreme Court, and if the act is sustained it will probably be impossible for many of the railroads to "immediately obey the decision of the Supreme Court."

If the time of the commodity clause of the act was extended, I think a great many of the railroads would endeavor to put themselves within the act by getting rid of any interest they had in coal properties, and at the expiration of such extension the Government would only have to deal with refractory companies, who intend at all events to contest the constitutionality of the act. And if the Supreme Court should, on technical grounds, hold the act unconstitutional, some way of amending it might be suggested which would accomplish the good purpose in view.

I want, therefore, to earnestly suggest to Your Excellency the advisability of an extension of time to enable the railroad companies to put themselves in a position to continue to serve coal companies situated as the companies which I represent, and I suggest that the date, "May 1, 1908," in the commodity clause be amended to read "May 1, 1910," with a further proviso as follows:

"Provided, however, That the Interstate Commerce Commission may, in special cases, from time to time, upon full hearing and for good cause shown, and being convinced that the interest of the public will not suffer, extend the period after May 1, 1910, but not beyond May 1, 1912, within which the railroad company applying for such extension shall be required to cease to transport any article or commodity which it may be forbidden to transport as above set forth."

And a further proviso might be added requiring that any railroad company applying to the Interstate Commerce Commission for such extension shall file with their application an acknowledgment, duly authorized by its board of directors, that it holds its charter subject to this provision of the interstate-commerce act.

By this extension of time a great many of the companies who acquired interest in properties because they thought it would be proper to do so under the then existing conditions, or some of whom did so for the purpose of developing the territory which they served, would be enabled, in all probability, to get rid of any interest which they may have and which would interfere with their duties as carriers, as set forth in this clause of this act.

I have no interest of the carriers to serve, except that I think they should be treated fairly, just as I know is the view of your Administration. The persons I represent ship several millions of tons of bituminous coal annually, and they and I think it would be much better to extend the time for carriers to put themselves within the act, because the principle which they and I so earnestly approve might be considerably injured before the courts unless "reasonable time" should be given to the carriers within which to reverse a mistaken policy which had been in use for many years.

It is true that this extension of time might be made after the act was held to be constitutional by the courts, but if the railroads are required to "immediately obey the decision of the Supreme Court," and I know of no authority then without Congressional action to extend the time, the difficulties confronting the carriers would be very great. I think it is clear that reasonable time should be given within which to comply with the act now, and at the expiration of two years any company not filing a certificate that it holds its charter subject to the act could be proceeded against and the constitutionality of the act tested.

I represent a large shipping interest, entirely in accord with the purposes of the act to regulate commerce as approved June 29, 1906, and this suggestion is made in the belief that the end in view will be better attained by a reasonable extension of time within which carriers desiring to do so may put themselves on a proper basis rather than by a court proceeding, before reasonable opportunity is offered within which to comply with the act. We are interested in the perpetuity of the principle that carriers shall alone be interested in providing the best and most expeditious transportation and that carriers should withdraw from any other line of business endeavor, but we wish this accomplished with as little embarrassment as possible to carrier companies who desire to live within the law.

This is a most important and pressing question, and I hope Your Excellency will pardon my presentation at such length of the views I entertain. I shall be glad to give any further or detailed information to you or to anyone you may suggest, and which information convinces me of the necessity of this extension of time.

I remain, with great respect,
Your obedient servant,

WM. A. GLASGOW, JR.

HON. THEODORE ROOSEVELT,
President of the United States;
Executive Offices, Washington, D. C.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from West Virginia yield to me?

Mr. ELKINS. I will yield to the Senator from Minnesota, who has a matter to present correcting an amendment that was made.

Mr. NELSON. When the joint resolution was up for consideration before, I moved an amendment in line 15.

Mr. ELKINS. I call the attention of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from West Virginia desires the attention of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. ELKINS. The Senator from Minnesota will read an amendment that he offered, and I think the Senator from Texas also offered a similar amendment.

Mr. NELSON. Upon my motion an amendment was adopted in line 15 on page 2 of the joint resolution. I have since examined it, and I find that my amendment was incomplete. Besides, I do not think the amendment is necessary. I therefore move to reconsider the vote by which my amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota moves to reconsider the vote by which the following amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAY. What was the amendment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary is about to state it.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 15, the Senate struck out the word "law" and inserted "said act;" and after the word "said," in the same line, struck out "act" and inserted "provision," so as to read:

Or forfeitures now provided by said act for violations of said provision to regulate commerce.

Mr. NELSON. The amendment was incongruous and improper. I ask the Senate to reject the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the vote by which the amendment was agreed to is reconsidered, and, without objection, the amendment is disagreed to.

Mr. NELSON. I wish to add that on a further examination of the joint resolution I do not think that in that particular it requires the amendment I supposed it did at the time.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. ELKINS. Certainly.

Mr. CULBERSON. May I inquire of the Senator from Minnesota if the amendment to which he refers is on page 2?

Mr. NELSON. Yes; line 15. My amendment is stricken out, and it leaves the joint resolution in that respect in lines 15 and 16 as it reads in the original joint resolution.

Mr. CULBERSON. What became of the amendment which I submitted and which I understood was adopted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The vote by which the amendment was agreed to has just been reconsidered.

Mr. CULBERSON. I understood that that was the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. I moved an amendment which I think was in the nature of a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Texas. On examination I found that my amendment was incomplete, and I further came to the conclusion that no amendment was necessary. Therefore I moved to reconsider and to reject my amendment. That leaves the Senator free to move an amendment.

Mr. CULBERSON. I move, then, what I moved before, to insert after the word "violations," in line 15, page 2, the three words "of said provision."

Mr. ELKINS. So as to read "for violations of said provisions." Are those the words?

Mr. CULBERSON. "Of said provision;" in the singular, so that it will read:

January 1, 1910, to the penalties, fines, or forfeitures now provided by law for violations of said provision of said act to regulate commerce.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the proposed amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 15, after the word "violations," insert the words "of said provision."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, I feel that the purpose and scope of the joint resolution and the end and object to be attained by its passage are sufficiently before the Senate. The railroads have been unfortunate. The expiration of the time for the compliance with the law fell on the 1st of the present month, following the great panic and business depression. I think it is in evidence before the Senate and in the report of the Interstate Commerce Commission that the panic and the business depression interfered with their compliance with the law, chiefly because the railroads could not find purchasers during the panic and up to May 1 to take over their coal lands, in addition to the legal complications growing out of the number of mortgages on the railroads and coal lands securing different sets of bonds. Naturally, there would be differences between the various bondholders in case of the sale and disposition of the coal lands and the disposition of the proceeds so as not to impair the bonds.

Mr. President, I will now call the attention of the Senate to the amendments offered to the joint resolution under consideration. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. FULTON] has offered an amendment to the joint resolution, which is substantially a bill that he has pending before the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate in regard to advancing rates. The Interstate Commerce Committee has had that bill under discussion for a long time. It is a very important and far-reaching amendment to the Hepburn bill. It reverses or substantially sets aside the conclusion reached on the question as to the initiation of rates after two years' consideration and after months of discussion here in the Senate. The present law requires that thirty days' notice shall be given before a rate can be increased. That was an amendment in the interest of shippers; before this rates could be advanced on ten days' notice under the old law.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. ELKINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. FULTON. If the Senator will allow me I will correct him in that statement. I may have misunderstood the Senator, but under the present law no change of rate can be made until a previous notice of thirty days has been filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. ELKINS. That is what I said. The Senator's amendment, as I said, is a bill now pending and under consideration by the Interstate Commerce Committee, and I hardly think it ought to be attached to a simple joint resolution suspending the penalties for a reasonable time to enable the railroads to comply with the law for the reasons I have stated. The amendment requires substantially that the Interstate Commerce Commission shall make the rates and not the railroads.

That question was fought out here in the open Senate under the discussion had on the Hepburn bill for three or four months, and the Senate was unanimous on that point and has been in all the discussions, as I understand it, since 1887, that the railroads shall always make the rate in the first instance, and if the rate is thought to be unjust and unreasonable the shipper has the right to file his complaint and be heard before the Interstate Commerce Commission to set it aside. If the amendment of the Senator should prevail, the Commission would have the right to stop the advancing of rates by railroads all over this country until the Commission upon a lengthy hearing decides. There are millions of rates. If the railroads of the country should agree to advance rates there could be filed under this amendment a million protests, and how could the Commission ever consider those protests and pass upon them? It virtually places in the hands of the Interstate Commerce Commission the initiation of rates.

Then, Mr. President, if this cast-iron requirement should become a law, there never could be a reduction in rates. It is in evidence before the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate in investigating these cases that, taking the experience of England, where an administrative body fixes the rate and the railroads do not, the experience has been that there is never any reduction in rates, because if the railroads should once reduce the rates they never could advance them, because every shipper in the country would protest and require a hearing before the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the commodity clause of the Hepburn bill and the penalty for its violation, and after that to the effects of the amendment under discussion. By the first section of the act of June 29, 1906, railroads subject to that act are prohibited from transporting any article or commodity manufactured, mined, or produced by it, or under its authority, or which it may own in whole or in part, or in which it may have an interest, direct or indirect, except for its own use.

The penalty for the violation of this law is found in the amendment to the original act passed in 1887 and in the amended act of March 2, 1889, volume 1, second edition, of the Supplement to the Revised Statutes, page 686, and found also in the compilation made by the Interstate Commerce Commission, revised June 30, 1906, on page 13. It is section 10 of the revision of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and it provides that any common carrier, or any director or officer thereof, or any receiver, trustee, lessee, agent, or person acting for or employed by such corporation who shall willfully do or cause to be done, or shall willfully suffer or permit to be done, any act, matter, or thing in this act prohibited or declared to be unlawful, or shall willfully omit to do any act, or willfully suffer or permit any act so directed or required by it not to be done, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and fined $5,000 for each offense.

All of these are amendments to the act of 1887. Of course this section covers all of the sections which have not specific penalties attached to them.

The reenactment of the first section of the Elkins bill in its first part also clearly confirms the act of 1889 as to the penalty against the corporation.

Let me state the objections to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon:

First. It changes the whole theory of existing law to regulate commerce. The present law allows carriers to initiate rates. The amendment would practically turn over to the Commission the initiation of all rates in the country.

Second. The provision requiring thirty days' notice in the existing law before a rate can take effect was enacted for the purpose of giving stability to rates to place all shippers on an equality in the making of their contracts, and so forth. The amendment would destroy this by permitting anyone within thirty days to prevent the rate taking effect by simply filing a protest.

Third. It would be an invitation to promote protests for the purpose of securing inequality between shippers. Competitors for a contract knowing a rate would be advanced before the delivery of the goods would bid upon that basis, a competitor could on the twenty-ninth day file a protest that would prevent the new rate going into effect, and thus secure an advantage over his competitors which would be equivalent to a rebate. Its tendency would be to annul the most vital and effective provisions of existing law.

Fourth. The statute is based upon the erroneous proposition of law that the increase of a rate is presumptive evidence of its unreasonableness. This was decided this winter by Mr. Justice Brewer as an incorrect view in the case of Interstate Commerce Commission against Chicago Great Western Railway, decided March 23, 1908.

Fifth. It would be impossible for the Commission to act upon these questions within a number of months. There are between six and seven hundred changes of rates daily, either lowering or raising.

Sixth. If the Commission determined the rate was unreasonable that was sought to be advanced, could there be an appeal to the courts to correct the error, if error was made by the Commission? No rate is in existence; it is a mere proposition, a suggestion, and is not reviewable. It is further a decision as to a future rate, which, in the case of Reagan (154 U. S., 394) and Maximum Rate case (167 U. S., 479), the Supreme Court has held could not be reviewed.

Seventh. If the rate is held unreasonable and a future rate is fixed by the Commission with a provision in the order that it is to remain in effect for a given time, as provided by law, the decision could not be reviewed by the courts under these decisions, as it is a future rate and not an existing rate.

Eighth. The tendency of such a law would be to destroy the flexibility of American railway rates and to produce rates that were stereotyped and unchangeable.

Carriers would not reduce rates in periods of depression or build up industries for fear of a fight when normal conditions returned to raise the rate to a normal, reasonable rate. This is the most serious objection to the law from the standpoint of the public.

All shippers are to-day protected if a rate is advanced that is unreasonable, as the Commission has full power to give reparation if they hold the rate unreasonable upon complaint. If, on the other hand, the rate is held to be reasonable, and it has been delayed for months in getting into operation, there is and can be no remedy for the carrier.

Mr. Acworth's statement before the Senate committee of investigation, authorized by the Senate in 1905, as to the effect of such a law in England is very clear—that it rendered the rates stereotyped and unchangeable and kept the same at an unnaturally high level.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I wish to say just a word on this matter, and what I say would apply to my attitude personally to all the pending amendments. When we passed the so-called "rate bill" I took the same position there in opposing the tacking on of amendments that did not properly belong to that bill with the feeling then, justified later by the action of the Committee on Interstate Commerce and the action of Congress, that those matters would in due time be passed upon and many of them become laws. Such was the history of some of those amendments.

Now, a good deal could be said for the amendment of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. FULTON], provided that amendment was duly considered, but I do not believe amendments of that kind can be considered under these circumstances.

Mr. FULTON. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. The Senator says probably much could be said in favor of this amendment if it were duly considered. I introduced this bill on practically the first day of the session—on the first day when bills could be introduced. It has been before the committee ever since. I ask the Senator how long a time he would accord to the measure before he would call it duly considered?

Mr. CLAPP. Speaking more particularly to the amendment of the Senator from Oregon, I regard it as the most vital amendment proposed to railway legislation in the history of railway legislation in this body. If it was enacted in its entirety as presented, I am inclined to think it would destroy absolutely all elasticity in the rates of this country. We did take it under consideration early in this session. It has been reported once to the committee. Without going into the affairs of the committee, it may be proper to say that it was favorably considered with amendments by some of the committee. That committee has had a great many things to consider during the session, and I believe it has dealt fairly toward all these amendments—certainly the amendment of the Senator from Oregon, upon which I have myself spent a good deal of time during the past winter. I think the Senator will bear me out in that suggestion.

Mr. FULTON. In justice to the Senator from Minnesota, I want to say that I know that to be a fact. I think I should further say that I know he has favored the general principle for which I have contended; and the previous question I asked was not intended to reflect upon him, but to get his judgment as a lawyer and statesman as to what constitutes "due consideration."

Mr. CLAPP. Well, "due consideration" depends a good deal upon what is involved in the question. Some questions can be readily disposed of; other questions require a great deal of consideration.

What I wanted to say was simply that while there may be in all these amendments elements which would justify final legislation in Congress, I do not believe in passing a joint resolution of this kind it is the time or place to tack them onto it. We suffered from that experience in the passage of the original bill itself, and for one I shall vote against these amendments, although very likely supporting many of them when they come up as independent matters of legislation.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I can not agree with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] as to the effect the amendment I have offered would have were it adopted and should it become a law. He seems to be of the opinion that in that event no reduction of railway rates would ever be made. It seems to me that is a very far-fetched and attenuated proposition.

The provisions of the amendment I have offered are that when a transportation company has filed a notice, as it is required under existing law to do, that it proposes to change a rate, if the proposition is to increase the rate, any shipper may file a protest, and that thereupon it shall rest in the discretion of the Commission whether the proposed increased rate shall go into effect at the expiration of the thirty days or shall be stayed and the then existing rate continued until a hearing has been had and the Commission has determined that the proposed increase is just and reasonable.

Mr. President, I am unable to see how that can possibly work a hardship on a transportation line. Under the existing law the railroad rate that would be in effect at the time of the proposed increase would necessarily be one that had been initiated by the railroad company itself or that had been established by the order of the Commission as a just and reasonable rate. If the rate proposed to be displaced were one that the railroad company itself had established, it is a fair presumption that it would be fairly remunerative, and that no very considerable injustice would be done the transportation line by insisting that the rate so established should continue in force until the Commission had investigated and approved the proposed increase.

If, on the other hand, the rate existing at the time of the proposed increase were one that the Commission itself had established theretofore, then, of course, every presumption would be that it was a reasonable and just rate, and no injury certainly could follow by requiring the railroad company to continue that rate in force until such time as the Commission had had an opportunity to inquire into and determine whether the proposed increase were a reasonable one or not.

How could it operate to prevent the lowering of rates in the future? The Senator will argue probably that it would so operate because the transportation line would fear to reduce a rate, lest, if it should ever become necessary to restore or advance it again, it would be precluded from doing so by a protest from the shippers. That is to assume that the action of the Commission in fixing rates will be hostile and unjust to the transportation lines. I undertake to say that experience proves the contrary. There is no complaint on the part of these lines that the Commission has been unjust or unreasonable in the establishment of rates. On the contrary, in almost every case the transportation lines accept without appeal the rates and determinations of the Commission.

On the other hand, if a transportation line may unrestrained change a rate by increasing it, it may put a shipper entirely out of business before he has an opportunity to correct the injustice that the increased rate does him.

Take it in the matter of the shipment of lumber from the Pacific coast, which I may say was the particular matter that called my attention to this defect in the law, and which prompted me to offer the amendment I have here proposed. Some time last summer the transportation lines from the Pacific coast increased the rate on lumber 10 cents a hundred pounds.

The result was, Mr. President, that the lumber manufacturing establishments on the Pacific coast were very largely compelled to cease shipping lumber to the eastern and middle western markets. Their only remedy was to go before the Interstate Commerce Commission and make complaint that the rate put into effect was unjust and unreasonable, and ask that the matter be inquired into; which they did. But no decision has yet been reached; the matter is still held under consideration. I am making no complaint because of that against the Commission, for I realize that it is a matter of great importance, and that it takes time and a great deal of investigation to determine it; but in the meantime the lumber mills of the Pacific coast are deprived of their markets in the Middle West and in the East.

Would it not have been far better and much more in accord with the principles of justice and equity had the railroad company been required to submit the question of the reasonableness of that advance to the Commission and let the old rate remain in force until the justness of the new had been determined, and thereby the great lumber business of the Pacific coast left undisturbed? If the Commission should finally decide that the rate proposed by the transportation lines was a just rate, then, of course, the shippers would have to submit to it. But suppose the Commission does not so find—suppose the Commission determines that the proposed advance is an unjust exaction—what remedy have the shippers? Absolutely none. Their market has been destroyed; their plants in many instances have been shut down; their business in many instances has been ruined. Therefore, I have proposed—and I think it is a just proposal—that they shall hereafter have the right, when it is proposed to increase a rate, to go before the Commission and protest, and that that protest shall lodge with the Commission the power to restrain the advance from going into effect until its reasonableness and justness shall have been determined.

Now, I want to call attention to something of the magnitude of the lumber industry of the Pacific coast, and particularly in my own State. The merchantable timber ready for market to-day in the State of Oregon aggregates, it is estimated by the officials of the Forestry Service, 300,000,000,000 feet. There are being cut annually 2,000,000,000 feet, of which, 600,000,000 feet are annually shipped across the country by railroad. At 21,000 feet per carload, which is about the average carload, that makes 28,571 carloads of freight, which the mills have been annually furnishing the transportation lines during the several years last past.

There is one Oregon firm that alone last year paid the transportation lines between eight and nine hundred thousand dollars for freight on lumber. This 10 cents per hundred increase amounted to that one firm alone to over $81,000.

There are employed in the State of Oregon between thirty-five and forty thousand men in the lumber industry, and the annual pay roll is over $2,000,000.

Mr. President, an industry that furnishes employment to so many men, that distributes such large sums of money among the people, that furnishes from one State alone 28,571 carloads of freight, the product of one firm paying nearly a million dollars annually for freight, certainly is one that ought not to be subjected to the danger of destruction by the action of transportation lines without first having an opportunity to be heard. It ought not to be possible, Mr. President, to destroy a great industry like that without a hearing.

These industries were built up under the transportation conditions existing at the time. Because of the freight rates that were in force, nearly all of these mills were established, and I suppose I am justified in saying that practically all of them were enlarged and their output increased by reason of rates which admitted them into the markets of the East and Middle West. There are over $50,000,000 invested in mill property alone in the State of Oregon, and that is not taking into consideration the timber lands or any other real-estate holdings, but mill property alone.

This great industry, I say, was built up on the basis of the rates that were put in force by transportation lines. Now, without an opportunity to be heard, without an opportunity to protect themselves, freights are at once advanced to a degree that destroys that business, compels them to cease operating their plants, and shuts them out of the market that renders their business possible. Yet the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] thinks that this is an evil proposition that I have advanced. He thinks it is one that would be destructive of the business of the country. Mr. President, it is for the preservation of the business of the country that I have offered this amendment, and I assert here and now that sooner or later the business interests of the entire country of the East as well as of the West are going to demand this legislation, and it will be enacted by Congress.

Mr. President, I introduced this bill early in the session, on the first day when opportunity was given for the introduction of bills. It was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, of which the Senator from West Virginia is chairman. I know something of the effort that has been made to secure a report on the bill. We did not even demand a favorable report; we hoped for a favorable report, we endeavored to secure one; but we asked that we might have any report, so that we could get the bill before the Senate and submit the question to it. We could not secure a report.

I am not the only one who has been laboring for this measure. The Senators from California, the Senators from Montana, the Senators from Idaho, the Senators from Washington, and the Senators from Minnesota, and others have all been earnestly laboring to secure a report, because their people are demanding it. Yet, Mr. President, we have been unable to secure one, and now to-day we are told that there has not been time for "due consideration."

Well, Mr. President, I am thankful for that explanation and for those words—"due consideration." Now, we know that at least one session of Congress is necessary for "due consideration," and anything that requires due consideration may not hope to receive favorable consideration until after the expiration of at least one long session of Congress.

But, Mr. President, I realize that probably, in fact I know, there are others who are of the same frame of mind as my friend from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP], who says that he can not vote for this proposition as an amendment to this resolution. I regret that he takes that view, for, it seems to me, that whatever importance you may attach to the original resolution, the amendment that I have offered is at least of equal importance. But I know very well that the Senator from Minnesota has been my friend and the friend of this amendment. I know that he has labored in the Committee on Interstate Commerce to secure favorable action upon it.

I have consulted with the friends of this measure, and we have concluded that, in view of the fact, that probably we can not get this amendment attached, although we could probably prevent the passage of the main resolution, and we have no disposition to do that. If we can get fair treatment for the bill at the next session we will withdraw the amendment. I understand the Senator from West Virginia, as chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, is willing to agree that before adjournment for the Christmas holidays at the next session of Congress he will see that this bill is reported to the Senate. If the Senator will do that, I know, or at least I feel, that we can look forward with confidence to its passage, because I believe the Senate will pass this measure when it comes squarely before it. If the Senator from West Virginia is willing to give us that assurance, so far as I am concerned—and the other Senators who are friendly to this measure, who have been taking the same earnest part and seeking to get it reported agree with me—I shall be perfectly willing to withdraw the amendment for the present.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, the Committee on Interstate Commerce have had this amendment in the form of a bill under most careful consideration and have taken some testimony upon the subject. I have talked with some members of the committee, and I think I can safely say that we can secure action on the bill before the next Christmas holidays. Of course I have not been able to canvass the entire committee; and in saying this I do not commit the committee or any of its members as to the kind of report, but I think we can reach a conclusion on the bill.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I think I know the kind of report that will come, but what I want is a report.

Mr. ELKINS. I thank the Senator for withdrawing the amendment. That will allow the committee time to consider it.

Mr. FULTON. I understand, then, the Senator says he can give us the assurance that the bill will be reported before the holidays at the next session of Congress.

Mr. ELKINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. FULTON. Very well; I am glad to know that.

Mr. ELKINS. With that understanding, Mr. President, I understand the Senator withdraws his amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] has an amendment to offer, about which he desires to be heard. I desire to get a vote on this joint resolution to-night and on the amendment. I do not feel as if I ought to move to lay the Senator's amendment on the table, which motion would not be debatable, but I think I will save time by yielding to him to speak. I am willing to do that, but I hope he will not speak long.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. ELKINS. I do.

Mr. FORAKER. I have been necessarily detained from the Chamber. I just this moment came in and found the Senator from West Virginia addressing the Senate on his commodity-clause resolution. I should like to make an inquiry as to the status of that proposition.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] is to speak on his amendment which he has offered.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes.

Mr. FLINT. May I interrupt the Senator, Mr. President, to say that I did not understand that we had disposed entirely of the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. FULTON]?

Mr. ELKINS. I think we did.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon withdrew his proposed amendment.

Mr. FORAKER. Let me ask the Senator does he intend to try to get a vote this afternoon on this joint resolution? I want to offer a substitute when we get to the proper place.

Mr. HEYBURN obtained the floor.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, my understanding of the position of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. FULTON] and the amendment offered by him was that he proposed the withdrawal of the amendment on certain conditions, and the conditions involved an expression of views by Senators who were cooperating with him in support of that amendment. I, for one, believing in the amendment, am not advised as to whether the conditions specified were satisfactory even to the Senator from Oregon. The statement of the conditions few heard, and I do not know that anyone understood. I should like to understand at this time what the conditions were, and what action was taken by the Senator from Oregon with reference to the acceptance of the assurance of the Senator from West Virginia. The Senator from West Virginia may respond or the Senator from Oregon, if he so elects, to my demand for information. I will say that I understood the Senator from Oregon to call upon the Senator from West Virginia to give to him assurance, upon which the Senator from Oregon and those believing with him could rely, that a report, favorable or unfavorable, on this amendment would be made by the Committee on Interstate Commerce before the adjournment for the Christmas holidays in the second session of the Sixtieth Congress.

Mr. FULTON. That is the statement I made, and that, I understand, is the assurance given by the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. CARTER. Do I understand that assurance given by the Senator from West Virginia was supplemented by the statement by him that he made the assurance after consultation with members of his committee, and after such consultation felt authorized to give the assurance?

Mr. FULTON. That was my understanding. I ask the Senator from West Virginia if I am correct?

Mr. CARTER. I will ask the Senator from West Virginia if that is his understanding?

Mr. ELKINS. This is tying the Senator from West Virginia pretty close. [Laughter.]

Mr. CARTER. That is what we expected to do.

Mr. ELKINS. I am willing, and I hope the Senator will be content with that. I have spoken to a majority of the members of the committee and I can give the assurance that the amendment will be reported before the holidays at the approaching session of the Sixtieth Congress.

Mr. CARTER. If the Senator from West Virginia, the chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, having consulted with a majority of his committee, gives the assurance that such report will be made, I am content.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President, I think that is satisfactory.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. HEYBURN. I will yield for anything that will not occupy much time.

Mr. FLINT. I simply want to state that that agreement, as stated by the Senator from Montana and agreed to by the Senator from West Virginia, is satisfactory to us.

Mr. PILES. I did not understand that the amendment was disposed of. I have not expressed my views on it yet. I understood that the amendment was still pending.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think I have the floor, Mr. President?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho has the floor.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. FULTON. I think I ought to say this—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. HEYBURN. I yield to the Senator from Oregon for a purpose that will not take time. I am on my feet for the purpose of addressing myself to some provisions of this bill.

Mr. FULTON. This will not take any considerable time; but I think the Chair misunderstood me. The Chair announced that the amendment was withdrawn. My statement was that, if this understanding was satisfactory to the other Senators whom I have mentioned, who were equally interested in the amendment and who had been equally industrious in endeavoring to secure its report, then I would ask to have it withdrawn. The Chair announced that it was withdrawn. I knew the Chair misunderstood me. I wanted that the Senator from Washington [Mr. PILES], the Senator from California [Mr. FLINT], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] might express their approval or disapproval; and if the Senator from Idaho will allow the Senator from Washington to make his statement I would appreciate it very much. I should like to ask the Senator—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair announced the fact as he understood it, that the Senator from Oregon had withdrawn his amendment.

Mr. FULTON. Yes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. And the Chair's announcement was not corrected or questioned at the time.

Mr. FULTON. I beg pardon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair's announcement was not corrected at the time. Now, the Chair understands that the Senator has not withdrawn his amendment.

Mr. FULTON. It was only a suggestion that I would do so. If that understanding is satisfactory to the Senator from Washington, however, I will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. PILES. The understanding is not entirely satisfactory to me, Mr. President, because we have been consulting over this matter for some days, and I wanted to understand specifically from the Senator from West Virginia that this bill would be reported. I understood him to say that he would try to have it reported.

Mr. ELKINS. I struck out "try."

Mr. FULTON. All right.

Mr. PILES. Now, the Senator says positively that it will be reported before the next Christmas holidays. With that I am content.

Mr. FULTON. Then I ask leave to withdraw the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, leave is granted. Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I have never known of a case in which there was such haste and importunity to remove every possible obstacle from the enactment of legislation as in this case. I remember when the commodity clause was being interjected into this legislation. It had no business there. It is an ambiguous and uncertain provision of legislation, and did not receive the consideration that should be given to important matters. When Congress undertook to say that property which had been owned by transportation companies for an indefinite number of years might not be used by them or might not be sold by them or the products thereof transported over their roads, it presented a pretty large question, and it was not sufficiently considered, and it was enacted partially. Congress attempted to enact a penal statute providing they should not do this thing, and it forgot to provide a penalty, and the statute stands on the books to-day without any penalty for its violation.

No lawyer who investigates it will arrive at any other conclusion. The matter was submitted to the law officers of the Government. It has been submitted to the lawyers of this body, and if any lawyer or any Senator can point out any penal clause in the law of the United States that applies to the commodity clause, he will be entitled to say that there are a great many lawyers here who are mistaken. It was undertaken, by reference to the act passed seventeen years prior to this enactment, to make it a penal statute. I do not need to argue to any lawyer that you can not enact a penal statute in that way and enforce it.

On the 1st day of May this hasty legislation came to a climax, and the railroad companies, in order to remove all discussion in regard to it, have come in here with a proposition to suspend its operation because they do not want it investigated, because they do not want the facts known in regard to the status of this legislation. I say that when the railroads or transportation companies of the country have put themselves in that position and are here asking a great grace at the hands of the Congress of the United States, it is about time to stand them up before the people for an examination as to their acts, and when they want some great favor is the time to demand of them justice for the people.

I have no hesitation at all in saying that 90 per cent of the people of the United States are in favor of the amendment which I have offered to the joint resolution. I have no hesitation at all in saying that if it were put to a vote in the United States 90 per cent of the votes would be cast in favor of the amendment, which simply provides that a transportation company shall not charge more for a short haul than for a long haul, including the short haul. That is all the amendment proposes.

I am speaking not only to the Senators within the hearing of my voice, but I am speaking to every empty seat in the Senate, and I call attention to the fact that the people whom we represent demand this justice at our hands. Why should we postpone it?

Mr. President, there is more fraudulent pretense about this legislation and the opposition to it than about any other piece of legislation that ever was before the American people. I can not understand how it could have happened that Congress should have been induced to disregard the great central portions of this country in the interest of a few seaboard towns, for the purpose of building up a wholesale and jobbing trade at the terminal points to the exclusion of the possibility of building up or maintaining that class at interior points, and how Senators representing the great interior States of the United States, against whom these discriminations exist, can hesitate not only to give their votes in favor of any legislation that will cure this evil, but to lend their efforts and bring their influence to bear to secure such legislation.

I offered the amendment to the pending joint resolution because I knew that this railroad was teetering on its toes in impatience to rid itself of what it deemed might be a hardship.

I offered it because I knew the hour was ripe to make this demand of the railroad companies. I knew they would be impatient of it. I knew they would be importuning me to withdraw it, in order that their gracious bill might pass Congress at this session. I repeat that is the time to say to them: "If you are asking mercy, stand up first and do justice." I said in the remarks which I made on the 1st day of May, that the railroads were holding up the interior points and charging them the through rates plus the local rates back from the terminal points to their cities. I am asked now, for the accommodation of this legislation, to withdraw the proposed amendment which I have introduced in order that forsooth the joint resolution may be hurried through to-night and receive the approval of Congress. I can not see any justification for it.

I am inclined to let the Senators vote on it if I can get a vote on the amendment, and if I can not get a vote to-day, I give notice that I am going to offer the amendment to every bill in the United States Senate to which an objection of consideration can not be offered until I do get a vote of the Senate, and let the people of the country know why they are being discriminated against. So, if you do postpone it to-day, you do it only for to-day.

The people are going to know why the people in Utah and Idaho and Washington and Oregon and Pennsylvania and New York and Massachusetts and North Carolina and Virginia, who have to live a little ways back from the seacoast, have to pay through rates to the seacoast plus the local rates back to their homes because, forsooth, they raise the ghost of water competition. There is no water competition between Chicago and Salt Lake City or between Chicago and Boise or Spokane or between St. Louis and those inland points, and there can be none. But suppose there is. It was these discriminatory terminal rates that drove our merchant marine from the sea. Why, merely because they do not choose to live upon the seaboard of the country, should not the people who live in interior points be entitled to the geographical benefits which nature gives them because of their proximity to the field of production or the markets of the country? Can any Senator tell me?

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. I desire to inquire of the Senator if, under existing law, the Interstate Commerce Commission is not vested with power to require, if they think it is just and reasonable, exactly what the Senator proposes to compel them by rigid law to do?

Mr. HEYBURN. The Interstate Commerce Commission is given many powers that it should not have. It is given many powers that it does not exercise. It is given some others that it exercises unwisely. I am speaking in this body for the rights of the people. I am not speaking for their privileges. I am speaking for their rights under the law—equal rights.

Mr. FULTON. The Senator of course knows that if this proposed amendment were enacted it would apply to every case of the long and short haul.

Mr. HEYBURN. I hope so.

Mr. FULTON. The Senator surely is not ready to say that that should apply in all cases. There are many cases in which, on investigation, such a rule would be found to be unjust. Therefore why is it not wiser to leave that power vested in the Commission, to pass on it on the testimony and after an investigation in each particular case? Let each case stand upon its testimony and the facts.

Mr. HEYBURN. For the same reason that it is not wise to go back to the times and conditions of government when an absolute monarch could decide every question without reference to anybody else's judgment or consideration.

Mr. FULTON. Is not that exactly what the Senator proposes to do?

Mr. HEYBURN. No; I do not.

Mr. FULTON. He proposes—

Mr. HEYBURN. I propose to give every person equal rights under the law.

Mr. FULTON. The Senator proposes to decide this matter without reference to the evidence and without regard to the equities in any particular case.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am astonished that the Senator should make that statement. We are here under our sworn duty to decide these matters. It does not follow that, because Congress is invested with the power and duty to decide a thing, that every irresponsible board in the country should be invested with the same power. This is the legislative body of the country.

I am importuned to allow this matter to go through to-night. That is the form the expression takes. I have here facts and figures with reference to these discriminations which would appall this body if I could have its attention, which would make the people of the country rise up in mutiny when they know it; and they will know it. They shall know it. In every constituency in the United States they shall know it, because it has been taken up through the combination of boards of trade and commercial bodies from one end of the country to the other, and before November comes around the people will know, and they will know what Congress thinks of it, too. They will know why these discriminations are recognized.

If they do not all know it this year they will know it next, because the people have made up their mind to throw off this kind of imposition, this kind of unfair discrimination. My voice is as potent and the vote will be as potent to these empty seats as though they were every one full, because the day has gone by when the people will shut their eyes to this kind of legislation. Grant the railroad company the right to avoid the effect of this penal statute, or which was intended to be a penal statute—grant them what they ask and ask nothing of them? I hardly think so. And I think when the Senate gives it more careful consideration the Senate will be of the same opinion, and that we will not vote to suspend the penalty, if there be one, of this clause without first voting as to whether or not the people's right shall be recognized and this discrimination done away with.

Mr. President, I insist on the amendment which I have offered being reported and acted upon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert after the resolving clause the following:

That section 4 of the act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved June 29, 1906, be amended by striking out the words "under substantially similar circumstances and conditions," where the same appear in said section 4, and further amend said section 4 of said act by striking out all of said section 4 beginning with the words "Provided, however;" said section 4 when so amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4. That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to charge or receive any greater compensation in the aggregate for the transportation of passengers or of like kinds of property for a shorter than for a longer distance over the same line in the same direction, the shorter being included in whole or in part within the longer distance; but this shall not be construed as authorizing any common carrier within the terms of this act to charge and receive as great compensation for a shorter as for a longer distance."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. ELKINS. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from West Virginia to lay on the table the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. HEYBURN. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BACON. Inasmuch as the yeas and nays have been ordered, I will have to ask that the amendment be again stated, in order that I may vote intelligently.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again state the amendment, at the request of the Senator from Georgia.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. BACON. I understand the act referred to there is what is known as the "rate law."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who is absent. Therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. FRAZIER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KITTREDGE], and as he is not present I will withhold my vote.

Mr. FULTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS] who is absent, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. WARNER]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. FLINT (when the name of Mr. PERKINS was called). My colleague is absent attending a meeting at one of the Departments. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. TALIAFERRO (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT]. As he is not present, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. ALLISON] is paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE].

Mr. FOSTER. I have a general pair with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER]. He is absent, and not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Owing to my general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], I withhold my vote.

Mr. PILES. I again announce that my colleague [Mr. ANKENY] is absent, owing to sickness.

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays 23, as follows:

So Mr. HEYBURN's amendment was laid on the table.

Mr. FORAKER. I understand that the amendment prepared by the Attorney-General and offered by the Senator from West Virginia has been adopted, so that the joint resolution now stands as originally introduced with the change made by that amendment in the proviso, which is, as I understand it, that nothing in the joint resolution shall be construed to prevent a suit in mandamus or by an injunction to test the validity of this commodity clause of the rate act. I ask that the amendment prepared by the Attorney-General may be read.

Mr. ELKINS. It has been agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. I know it has been agreed to, but I should like to have it read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of the joint resolution the following proviso:

Provided, That nothing in this resolution shall be construed to prevent the bringing of any civil suit or proceeding for the enforcement of said provision, or the prevention of violations thereof; and the Attorney-General is hereby authorized to institute, or cause to be instituted, in the name of the United States and against any persons or corporations failing to comply with said provision, such civil suit, whether by application for mandamus, bill in equity for injunction, or other effective remedy in the premises, in any circuit court of the United States which said courts shall have jurisdiction in the premises, to secure the enforcement and observance of said provision; and the respective parties to any such suit herein authorized to be commenced shall enjoy the right of appeal, as in suits of like character when instituted by or on behalf of the Interstate Commerce Commission to compel the observance of the interstate-commerce law.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, the theory of this joint resolution is, as I understand it, that if we postpone the imposition of the penalty for noncompliance with the commodity clause, the railroads will disregard the law and they will continue to haul coal and other commodities which they own or mine or produce or have an interest in, just as though there was no such legislation.

In the first place, the joint resolution is wholly unnecessary if the contention of Senators is correct that there is no penalty applicable to a violation of this clause. I have not examined the law since this point was raised with sufficient care to have a satisfactory opinion on that subject, though I have supposed there would be no difficulty in pointing out that a penalty has been provided in the statute that would be applicable to a violation of this clause. I will assume there is a penalty that is applicable, for I do not care to debate that. I understand that the Interstate Commerce Commission makes that contention, and I propose to take it as though there was no question about it.

I deem it unnecessary to pass the joint resolution in the form in which it has been proposed for the further reason that the roads are not observing it and no penalty is being imposed. About that I want to make some remarks.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Ohio that there is a general penalty clause in the act which contains this provision, and under that general penalty clause a railroad, if it is properly enforced, could be punished for violating that particular prohibition. I had something to do with drawing that amendment. No penalty was incorporated in that particular provision, but it was left for the punishment of those who violated the law to be provided for in the general penalty clause of the act. I am amazed to learn that the Interstate Commerce Commission has expressed the opinion that there is no penalty provided for the violation of the clause.

Mr. FORAKER. I understand it is just the reverse of that. I say I do not care to argue that there is no penalty applicable, for I understand that the Interstate Commerce Commission is of the opinion that the penalty provided in the general clause, to which the Senator from Texas refers, does apply.

Mr. BAILEY. Oh, I misunderstood the Senator. I am very glad to know that I did misunderstand him.

Mr. FORAKER. What I said was that Senators here have contended that there is no penalty that is applicable, but I have not made any special examination to satisfy my mind upon that point simply because for the purposes I have in view in rising it is not necessary that I should.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. FORAKER. Yes.

Mr. DOLLIVER. The Senator from Ohio will remember that the amendments of 1906 were in the nature of a rewriting of the section affected by the proposed amendments. So the interstate-commerce act as it now stands stands as it has been from time to time amended; and section 10 of the original act as amended by the act of March 2, 1889, contains the general penalty clauses applicable to all prohibitions of the whole act, including all the amendments that have been made up to date. So I think there will not be a sound legal conclusion that this is a clause without a penalty.

Mr. FORAKER. As I intimated, what I was saying on that point, in so far as it could be indicated that I have any doubt about it, was out of deference to the opinions of Senators who have expressed themselves to the effect I mentioned, namely, that there is no penalty that applies. But I was careful to say, without stopping to argue it, that I assume the penalties do apply.

Now, notwithstanding they apply, the remark I made was that I do not think the pending joint resolution ought to pass, because the railroads are not observing this law and there is no effort, so far as I am aware, to impose any penalty upon them.

I introduced a resolution asking the Interstate Commerce Commission to inform the Senate whether this clause is being observed by the railroads, and whether there was any arrangement or understanding in accordance with which these penalties were not to be enforced against the railroads if they did not observe the law. Their answer was that they had no official knowledge, but that unofficially they have learned that the roads, with but two or three exceptions, are not observing the law. I asked specifically about the Western Maryland Railroad. I asked about that because that road is in the hands of a receiver. That receiver is the officer of a United States court.

He is operating that railroad under the command of that court, and I conceive it to have been the duty of that court on the 1st day of May to call the receiver's attention to the fact that this law went into operation on that day, and that in accordance with this law he could not haul any coal in which that road was interested or which that road mined across the State line into any other State.

The Interstate Commerce Commission report that they have communicated with this receiver by telephone and that the receiver says he is not observing the law; that in a few days he will make a report to the Interstate Commerce Commission, setting forth the reasons why he is not complying with the law; and then the Interstate Commerce Commission will communicate those reasons to the Senate. I have been waiting for that supplementary report. I should like to have it before we do anything here, for it seems to me, Mr. President, that it was absolutely compulsory upon the judge administering that receivership to decide on the 1st day of May the question whether or not the law in its application to that road is constitutional, it being a road that owned these properties before we enacted the commodity clause of 1906.

It seems to me when we get that report, if it should be that the court has ordered the receiver to disregard the law, it will appear that the receiver is not obeying the law either because the judge has decided that the law is unconstitutional in its application to that road or because the judge has been informed by the Department of Justice that there is to be no enforcement of that law except on conditions that have been agreed to by the Department of Justice.

Now, I think we ought to act intelligently when we do act, and I do not think, therefore, that it is necessary to pass this joint resolution until we get this promised information. We may find that a case has been made and a decision rendered.

But there is another reason, and I call the attention of the Senator from Texas to this, why I do not think we ought to pass the joint resolution even with the amendment proposed by the Attorney-General. Manifestly it is the purpose of the joint resolution to postpone the enforcement of the penalty so that the roads may go on with immunity, violating the law as they are doing, and in the meanwhile the Attorney-General may bring a suit by mandamus or injunction, as expressed in the amendment, to test the validity of this provision.

Now, Mr. President, stop and think for a moment what is involved in that as a legal proposition. When does mandamus lie? Not to enforce a negative, but always to compel an affirmative. The fact that we say in this amendment to the joint resolution that the Attorney-General may resort to mandamus does not change the nature of the writ. It simply means that he may resort to mandamus to raise the question as to the validity of this law when mandamus is a proper remedy.

But let us assume that the conditions will continue as they are now. The roads are continuing to haul across the State line just as it is intended by this resolution they shall do. Will anybody pretend that mandamus is a proper remedy to compel the roads to desist from violating the law? Surely not. That would be employing the writ to enforce a negative, whereas its office is always to enforce an affirmative and compel affirmatively something to be done. But it is in the alternative. He shall employ the writ of mandamus or the writ of injunction. Who will pretend, except the Attorney-General, that the writ of injunction would lie in a case such as we are to have presented if we pass this resolution?

Did anybody ever hear of the writ of injunction applying when it was sought to enjoin a mere violation of a statute? Every lawyer knows that that is not ground for an injunction. Injunction will lie only where you have no adequate legal remedy to prevent an irreparable injury.

Now, what kind of a case would the Attorney-General make for the United States? We will assume he will go into court; he will bring a bill in equity, and ask for relief by injunction, enjoining these roads from further violating this law by hauling their commodities across the State line. Will he be able to show that the Government is suffering any irreparable injury? If so, how? Will he be able to show anything more than simply a violation of the statute by the railroad which he sues, for which his remedy is to enforce whatever remedy the statutes provide for its violation?

He would not have any other. He could not certainly, on that ground, go into a civil court, into a court of equity, to ask for equitable relief at the hands of a chancellor.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. FORAKER. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. As I caught the reading of what we call the Attorney-General's suggestion (because I do not suppose he drew the amendment and sent it to the Senate to have it adopted) and also if I understand the joint resolution, it looks to me as though it presents a still further difficulty than that pointed out by the Senator from Ohio. The main part of the joint resolution postpones the operation of the law and, therefore, until the date fixed in the joint resolution, it would not be unlawful for a railroad to carry its coal.

Mr. FORAKER. In that, if I understand the joint resolution offered by the Senator from West Virginia, the Senator is mistaken. I understand the effect of the joint resolution to be, or rather what is intended, at any rate, is merely to postpone the imposition of the penalty, the prohibition standing without penalty for its violation until January 1, 1910. My contention is that neither mandamus nor injunction would reach that difficulty.

Mr. BAILEY. I think the Senator is right.

Mr. FORAKER. I am glad to have the concurrence of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. BAILEY. It is a peculiar kind of legislation. It is simply a legislative permission to violate the law. That is all the joint resolution amounts to.

Mr. FORAKER. That is all it is, and without fear of penalty and without fear of successful prosecution. Therefore, Mr. President, I do not think the joint resolution ought to pass.

But now I want to submit what I think ought to be done. I do not think this commodity clause ever should have been enacted in the form in which it finds itself in the act. It was pointed out here on the floor of the Senate—but without avail—that if we passed this commodity clause in the form in which we enacted it, we would, when the 1st day of May, 1908, arrived, either be unable to enforce it or be compelled to interfere with vested property rights, which everybody knows would be unconstitutional; or, if the law should be held valid and be enforced, bring wholesale disaster to all concerned—consumers as well as railroads. But that did not seem to do any good.

I believe that common carriers should be restricted to the business of common carriers. I do not believe, as a general proposition, that any railroad should be allowed to engage in coal mining or any other kind of business on its own account, to produce commodities to be carried in competition with private miners and others who produce coal and such commodities. But every Senator here knows—for it is a part of the history of the whole country and of every State represented here, almost—that it was the policy twenty-five years ago—much more, fifty years ago—in States having mining resources to specially charter railroads with power to acquire and develop properties of this nature and transport their products.

I understand from a report made either to the Interstate Commerce Commission or by it—I have it, but not at hand; I saw it some weeks ago—that last year it is shown that 90 per cent of the railroads affected by the commodity clause acquired their property in that way under the statutes of the States under which they were organized, or by virtue of special provisions in special charters, and that their properties were, therefore, just as legitimately acquired, and that they hold those properties with the right to mine and produce coal and carry coal for transportation in interstate commerce as much as anybody else has acquired any property or right in this country. Taking anthracite coal, for example, I understand that last year, as shown by this report, the roads owning those properties and mining that coal and transporting it carried out of Pennsylvania across the line into New Jersey and New York and New England and other parts of this country more than 50,000,000 tons. More than 50,000,000 tons of coal were taken out of the mines acquired by those roads under the special inducement offered by the State of Pennsylvania when the charters for those roads were granted, special inducements by specifically authorizing them, I mean, to acquire those properties and develop them and build up this business.

Now, it seems to me that, however desirable it may be—and no Senator has a keener appreciation for that than I have—to limit carriers, where we can lawfully do so, to the legitimate business of carriage, yet we are bound to respect property rights. Everybody here knew that two years ago, but when we came to take the vote I was the only one who happened to say so. I am only saying over again what I tried to say then. I knew then that the time would come when we would have to meet this question, and that it would hang over us in the meanwhile like a threat and a menace to the business of the country; that on the 1st day of May, 1908, when this clause went into effect, either the Administration would have to make an arrangement whereby it would not enforce it, or, if it did enforce it, it would bring wholesale disaster upon this country. Disaster wholesale has not been brought upon this country by reason of the enforcement of this clause, because in recognition of that fact some way has been found whereby to tide over for the present.

Mr. HALE. Some device.

Mr. FORAKER. Some device, the Senator from Maine suggests—some arrangement, some agreement.

I am not complaining about that. I think when we found ourselves in this situation it was highly necessary that something should be done, but I do not think it was the business of anybody except only Congress to provide that a law placed on the statute books should not be enforced. I do not think the President and Attorney-General or anybody else except only the Congress of the United States legislating in the usual way, with the approval of the President, would have a right to suspend the operation of a law such as this is, no matter what its disastrous consequences might be.

Mr. President, what was right for us to do then, and what we clearly now see was right for us to do then, is the thing we ought to do to-day. Instead of passing a joint resolution to postpone for twenty months, therefore, the taking effect of this penalty clause we ought to provide, as we should then have provided and as some of us tried to induce the Senate to provide, that the clause should have only a prospective operation: not to undertake to interfere with vested rights, but to provide that from and after the date when we passed the law there should be no carrying in interstate commerce by any railroad of any commodity of its own production or any commodity that it mined or had produced or in which it had any interest purchased after that date. We could not come to our senses then, but, pray, let us resume them now.

Therefore it is that I have prepared a substitute, which I offer. I ask the Secretary to read it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

Mr. FORAKER. The substitute simply provides that from and after the date when that statute was passed, June 29, 1906, no road shall carry any commodity of its own production which was not owned prior to the date when the law was passed. That was notice to everybody.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the substitute proposed by the Senator from Ohio.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the resolving clause and to insert:

That paragraph 5 of section 1 of the act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, as amended, be amended by adding thereto the following: "Provided, That the provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to any article or commodity lawfully acquired and owned prior to the 29th day of June, 1906, by any railroad company under and by virtue of any statute, franchise, or charter lawfully issued or granted by the United States or any State or Territory thereof," so that said paragraph shall read: "From and after May 1, 1908, it shall be unlawful for any railroad company to transport from any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia to any other State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or to any foreign country, any article of commodity, other than timber and the manufactured products thereof, manufactured, mined, or produced by it or under its authority, or which it may own in whole or in part, or in which it may have any interest, direct or indirect, except such articles or commodities as may be necessary and intended for its use in the conduct of its business as a common carrier: Provided, That the provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to any article or commodity lawfully acquired and owned prior to the 29th day of June, 1906, by any railroad company under and by virtue of any statute, franchise, or charter lawfully issued or granted by the United States or any State or Territory thereof."

Mr. FORAKER. Now, Mr. President, only a few words more. I have heard Senators during the progress of the discussion on the pending joint resolution giving reasons why these railroads could not comply with the commodity clause, why they could not dispose of their property and separate the coal mines from the railroads. Generally that reason has been that the panic has come on and it has made it impossible to sell such property. How in God's name any thoughtful man could fail to foresee that just such legislation as this enacted by us in 1906 would produce a panic I am unable to understand. I knew it the day we passed the bill just as well as I know it now. Why did they not sell this property? They say they could not find buyers.

Mr. President, every Senator here knows, who has given the slightest attention to the subject, that these properties acquired by these railroads have been mortgaged, some of these properties over and over again, to secure issues of bonds that are held throughout this country and abroad, and that in the mortgages are found the usual provision that there shall be no alienation of any part of this property; that it shall be kept together; that there shall be no alienation without the consent of each and every bondholder. And that was and is still an impossibility.

So if times had become more prosperous instead of less prosperous and buyers had multiplied and there had been a demand for such property, the railroads could not have sold these coal mines and separated their property as we required them to do.

The law stood in the way, and the provision of their mortgages and their bonds stood in the way. It was an utter impossibility, and for that reason nothing has been done. And so it will be if we continue this until January 1, 1910; the same prohibitions will stand in the way. It is just as impossible for them during the next twenty months to dispose of these properties in the way directed to comply with this commodity clause as it has been each and every hour during the last twenty months.

Mr. President, this identical clause had much to do with the financial trouble that now concerns us. The idea that hundreds of millions of property should be required to be put upon the market, law or no law, in violation of vested rights; that the Congress of the United States should pass such a statute, was well calculated, coming as it did along with other similar legislation, to excite the distrust of men who held the securities of the railroads of this country, men abroad, and men at home; and as a result we have seen our securities coming home and they have been coming faster than they could be taken care of at home. We have fourteen billions outstanding in round numbers, held across the water as well as on this side. Every man who saw the Congress of the United States engage in such hysterical, unwise, ruinous, and I will say disgraceful, legislation as this, felt at once that he would rather change his security and get something else.

The result was that they have been thrown upon the market faster than we could take care of them. In consequence we have had a panic here. It is no wonder we had it. If this country had not been under the full tide of prosperity to the extent it was, we should have had it long before we did have it. But the impetus was such that we held up for months after the panic was due and would have occurred but for the unprecedented prosperity we were enjoying.

If you want to restore prosperity, the thing to do now is to undo the wrong we so inconsiderately did. Let us enact the kind of legislation now we should have enacted then; and then, so far as this particular clause is concerned, there would be no more trouble in the nature of a panic.

Why not do it? There is not a court in Christendom that would hold that a law passed by Congress in 1906 could make it unlawful for a railroad that acquired property fifty years before, in accordance with the laws of its organization or the special charter under which it was organized, could be required to dispossess itself of that property and that it could be driven out of the business in which it had legitimately engaged.

But now assuming that you can make them stop, will the people of the country permit you to make them stop? Will the people of this country allow you, sitting here in Washington as the Congress of the United States, to say to the railroads of the country: "From and after a day to be named you shall not carry any more coal across the State line; you shall not do it indirectly or directly; you shall not carry it if you have mined it or if you own it or if you have the slightest interest in it as lessee or otherwise." The language in the statute is sweeping and broad—just as broad as it could be made at the time—for we were undoing almost everything at that time that had reference to the stability of rights with respect to property. We made it as sweeping and as obnoxious as it was possible for language to make it. What would be the effect on consumers? Are they not to be considered and accommodated? But if you can not compel the roads to sell this property and will not allow them to supply the people outside their respective States, how can you avoid positive disaster?

I think the way out of it—for I do not want to speak about it in a way that looks as though I was trying to say "I told you so"—that is never very gracious—I think the way to get out of it is to simply provide that this commodity clause shall not be construed to apply to any railroad company with respect to any property that had been acquired by it legitimately under its charters and franchises prior to the day when we passed that statute. That is the amendment I have offered. I ask the Secretary to read it again.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the proposed amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the resolving clause and to insert:

That paragraph 5 of section 1 of the act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, as amended, be amended by adding thereto the following: "Provided, That the provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to any article or commodity lawfully acquired and owned prior to the 29th day of June, 1906, by any railroad company under and by virtue of any statute, franchise, or charter lawfully issued or granted by the United States or any State or Territory thereof," so that said paragraph shall read:

Mr. FORAKER. The Secretary does not need to read any further. All are familiar with the statute as it is, but what Senators need to understand is that I want to add to the law as it now stands this provision, leaving the law precisely as we enacted it, but limiting it in its application to those roads that have acquired such property since the date we enacted the law. That is fair and just to everybody, and that is as far as any provision can be constitutionally enforced without at least bringing great disaster upon the country.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, that sounds like the Republican speeches we were accustomed to hear ten years ago, but not like the Republican speeches that we have been accustomed to hear during the present Administration; and except that it is the kind of a speech that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] has been making throughout the discussion, I should accept it as an indication of a reaction in the Republican party. The Senator from Ohio, however, in my opinion, is unnecessarily alarmed about the decision of the court upon that particular provision in the rate law. It signifies nothing to the people of the other States what the State of Pennsylvania did when, in the course of its industrial development, it chartered railroads and authorized them to exercise rights which did not pertain to the business of a transportation company.

It may be true, and doubtless it is true, that no law of Pennsylvania could deny to those railroads the right to use their property within that Commonwealth according to the terms of their charters or the original grant; but it must be apparent to the Senator from Ohio that the people of Pennsylvania can not, under our system of Government, grant a charter which will inflict upon the people of other States a great and irreparable injury.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes.

Mr. FORAKER. I simply wish to say that the report sent to the Senate a few days ago by the Interstate Commerce Commission showed that the same thing obtained with respect to Virginia and West Virginia, and we know that it does as to Maryland and to a great number of other States. I had a report which showed all that, but I do not have it now at hand.

Mr. BAILEY. I simply selected Pennsylvania because it was perhaps the first offender in that respect, and has been perhaps the greatest offender. The same reasoning will apply to all the other States.

If the State of Pennsylvania saw fit to charter a corporation to engage in any kind of business, and if the court should hold that charter a valid contract between the corporation and the State of Pennsylvania, that would not guarantee or secure to that corporation the right to conduct its business in other States. So, when we came to draw this amendment—I assume the full responsibility for the breadth and character of it—when we came to draw this amendment, we understood that difficulty, and we simply provided that these corporations should not transport these commodities in commerce among the States or with foreign nations. That this is a perfectly valid and constitutional exercise of power by Congress I have no kind of doubt.

If the amendment now proposed by the Senator from Ohio be adopted, it would operate to create in a large measure a monopoly with respect to an article of such universal and such essential use as coal; and I think I am reasonably well within the truth when I declare that practically all of the most valuable coal lands in Pennsylvania are now under railroad control and ownership; and certainly as to those lands and as to that State it would leave the people perpetually at the mercy of a monopoly that has been none too merciful in its dealings of recent years, if the reports which have been made to the constituted authorities are to be relied upon.

I believe it was the president of one of those Pennsylvania railroads who assumed to act as a kind of representative of the Delty in conserving the immense body of the coal lands in that State for the use of its people in all the generations to come.

Mr. President, I observe also that the Senator excepts timber and the products of the sawmills from the operation of this commodity amendment. In that he follows the amendment adopted by the Senate.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. That is not in what I have offered. My amendment simply follows after the law as it now stands; and the provision the Senator refers to is in the law as it now stands.

Mr. BAILEY. I know it is in there, and as I caught the reading of it I thought the Senator had incorporated it into his proposed substitute.

Mr. FORAKER. No; I have not incorporated it.

Mr. BAILEY. That is not then a subject of criticism against the amendment, but against the law. That was one of the gravest mistakes—and I say it with all deference to the Senate—that was made during the consideration of that bill. I am of the opinion that there is more danger to the people in the monopolization of the forests than there is in the monopolization of the coal lands. No man yet knows, perhaps our children will never know, how much coal there is stored beneath the surface of the earth; but every well-informed man knows to-day what the limits of the forests are.

We know that the timber supply of this country is a rapidly diminishing quantity; indeed, sir, unless the genius and invention of our people shall soon discover another and a cheap building material, the youngest of us in this body will live to see the time when it will cost more to build a house of lumber than it will of brick. Already the enormous price of lumber has laid an embargo upon improvement in towns and in villages, and that is one of the many explanations for the panic, which the Senator from Ohio attributes to the rate law.

Whatever may be the cause of that panic, Mr. President—and certainly I have no inclination to rejoice in it—still, like adversity, perhaps it has its uses, for it has at least convinced the country what the country had for several years been skeptical about, that a panic can occur under a Republican Administration.

Mr. FORAKER rose.

Mr. BAILEY. Perhaps the Senator from Ohio will not consent that this is a thoroughly Republican Administration. [Laughter.]

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator paid me a high compliment in his opening sentence when he said that my speech sounded like a Republican speech of the old time. That is the kind of a Republican I profess to be; and I will say to the Senator that I thank him for that compliment and remind him that when the Republicans were making that kind of speeches we never did have any panics. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, we did have one of the severest panics in the history of the Republic under the stalwart Administration of Grant. The Senator from Ohio has not forgotten that. And during the closing days of the Harrison Administration we were not without our distresses. The truth of it is that the pinch of hard times during the close of Mr. Harrison's Administration is what brought Mr. Cleveland to the Presidency in 1892.

I am a little inclined to think that the course of our history has been remarkable in the last few years. The last Administration of Mr. Cleveland was not as Democratic as I could have wished it to be, and we fell into the disaster and demoralization that resulted in the great Republican triumph of 1896. I warn Senators on the other side that they may be facing a condition not dissimilar to the one which we faced in 1896. You are at variance with each other, or if you are not so widely at variance with each other on that side of the Chamber, then all of you are more widely at variance with your President than we were with our President from 1893 to 1896. It remains for us to see, and for the country to see, whether you can adjust your differences and patch up a peace and whether you can march to the polls in a solid phalanx this year as you have been doing in the years that have passed and gone.

I thought I saw this afternoon some evidence of an effort to get together over there. I saw gentlemen who seemed to think very widely at variance voting together, and I apprehend that we are to have a repetition of the old experience where Republicans quarrel like furies before the election day and then vote as one man when that day comes. But I want to tell the Senator from Ohio that, with all of his high character and his great ability, he can never—and I do not mean this, of course, as any personal taunt—succeed in keeping the next Republican convention from indorsing the policies of the present Administration. It will be a singular spectacle—

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator and his friends be successful in preventing the Democratic convention from indorsing those policies? [Laughter.]

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I think one good turn deserves another. The President has adopted our policies, and I am very much inclined to commend him for it. I am not a hide-bound partisan, and when a Republican does a Democratic deed, I am willing to applaud the deed even though I do not applaud the doer of it.

The present President of the United States has adopted almost bodily the position of the Democratic party on this railroad-regulation question. More than one of his messages almost repeat the very words of the Democratic platform, and yet you search in vain for a line in the Republican platform, on which he was elected, pledging your party to do aught toward the regulation of the railroads. So far as the country was concerned, it was justified in assuming—and I frankly say I believe it did assume—that the Republican party intended to let everything stand as it stood when the present Administration came into power. I remember one of your phrases was that "we will stand pat." I never did exactly understand what "pat" meant. I have understood from those who do understand such things that it was borrowed from a game; but no sooner had you won the election on a promise to "stand pat" than you began to draw from the Democratic hand and you took our railroad regulation theory bodily from it.

If we are wise enough to maintain our old position, instead of moving up and taking the position of another party, we will have you confronted with a proposition that you must either indorse what we have been proposing for twenty years, or you must condemn the Administration of your own party.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. One word. I want to say to the Senator, "Shake not thy gory locks at me." [Laughter.]

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I cheerfully acquit the Senator from Ohio; and without intending to imply that his colleagues lack courage I must say that it would have been a more familiar sight had he been surrounded by his associates and supported by them in his contention; but the Senator from Ohio will bear me witness that he alone on that side had either the courage, the wisdom, or the rashness—I use all three words so that any Senator can take his choice—he alone had one of those three qualities that led him to vote against a bill Democratic from its enacting clause to its conclusion.

Now, Mr. President, as for me—and I speak for nobody but myself—if it were necessary to involve the country in a temporary disturbance in order to protect the people against the aggression and injustice of railroad management, I would not have hesitated to pay that price. It frequently will happen in this world that a condition once existing can not be changed without some injury; but if the good to be accomplished by the change in all the long flight of years will far outweigh the injury done for the time, then no wise man ought to hesitate about making the change. It is infinitely better that those of us who are here shall suffer the injury of a day than it is that our children and our children's children shall suffer a greater injury during all the years to come.

But, Mr. President, I am not one of those who believe that it ever costs the people much to do what is right, and my opinion is that the panic was not the result of political policies or of Congressional legislation. I think one bad habit into which the American people have fallen is to charge too much to bad laws and too little to bad management.

This great country would prosper under any set of laws that Congress could devise, and I say that all the more freely because I know it has prospered under a set of Republican laws which your predecessors devised and under which we have been compelled to live. I have no doubt that it would prosper even more under the wiser and the more equal laws that we would frame if the people should give us power. But neither do I doubt that under our administration, as well as under yours, there would come these seasons of depression; and neither do I doubt that the people will continue to attribute such seasons of depression to the bad legislation of their representatives, instead of to the bad management of themselves.

It is never safe to venture a prophecy, especially when that prophecy might be fulfilled within the easy memory of those who hear it; but I want to tell the Senator from Ohio this afternoon that if these bad seasons continue and they are followed by bad crops, what we did have last autumn will not be a circumstance to what we will have next autumn. It is God's seasons combined with the industry of men that determine the wealth of this country. All that the law can do is to determine the distribution of it, to take it from those who create it and give it to those who enjoy it under special and favored privileges. But whether the nation creates wealth to the utmost of its ability or not depends very much more upon the men who toll than it does upon those who make or who administer our laws.

I do not underrate the value of just and wise and equal laws. I do not underrate the value of a Chief Executive who enforces them rather than one who contracts with offenders not to enforce them. If the Senator from Ohio is right in his intimation—for with his usual caution he proceeds no further than to make it an intimation—that the Department of Justice, under the sanction of the President, has agreed with the men who are violating this law that they will not be punished—if that is true, Mr. President, that is a crime; and it is a crime for which the President of the United States could be and ought to be impeached.

Obedience to the law is the highest virtue of a public official, and, in my judgment, the higher the office which a man holds in this Republic the higher is the obligation which rests upon him to see to the faithful enforcement of every law. The wisest utterance that ever fell from the lips of General Grant was when he said that the way to secure the repeal of a bad law is to enforce it.

That was true then and it is true now; and the President of the United States has no power under his oath of office and under his duty, which is higher than his oath—because if he were freed from the obligation of his oath he would still be subject to the obligation of his duty—to contract with any man or set of men for immunity. If the Senator is right, then he has preferred against the President of the United States a graver charge than I have yet ventured to bring against him; and that the Senator is probably right is made manifest by the fact that there has been no effort to enforce this law, and that, while they are violating it openly and daily, a joint resolution is brought here that does not extend the operation, but simply permits its violation without a penalty. It is the most remarkable piece of legislation that I have ever read of or heard of. It is a legislative permission to violate the law of the land.

Now, if these men have not been brought to understand their duty under the law, or if they have been encouraged to believe that they can violate it with impunity, if they have been promised an extension of its provisions, then, Mr. President, let us simply rub out "May, 1908," and write in some other day, but let us not have a law upon the statute books forbidding a certain transaction and then concluding with a proposal that though they disobey the prohibition of the law they shall suffer no penalty.

So far as I am concerned I believe it is a wise law. I believe it is a good provision, and that we should have obedience to it, and I am not willing to give them an hour. The railroads ought to be taught that they are subject to the law. Railroad managers ought to be made to understand that when Congress gave them nearly two years' grace they ought to have set their house in order against the coming of that day. They were given nearly two years, and that was enough.

But if you are determined to give them more time, then provide that the law shall become operative at a future time and do not write in the statute a legislative permission to violate it without a penalty.

Mr. President, the wisest—I will not say the wisest either, because the authority vested in the Commission to fix rates under certain conditions was the wisest provision of the law, but next to that, the wisest—provision in that law is the one which seeks to separate the business of transportation from the business of production. That is so wise that the Senator from Ohio agreed to the wisdom of it. Of course we all know the purpose. When Congress made it a crime for a railroad to buy tonnage by giving rebates, then the railroads set to work to secure tonnage by buying interests in industrial enterprises, each railroad seeking in that way to protect itself against its competitor.

This process, unless prohibited, will continue until practically all the industrial enterprises of the republic are owned in whole or in part so that they may be controlled by the great railroad companies of the United States. It is obviously impossible for an individual or private company to compete against a railroad-owned company, and they will not long continue the effort at competition. If I am a manufacturer and there are two coal companies, one owned by a private corporation and the other owned by a railroad company, I will not hesitate long between those companies in bestowing my patronage. I will buy from the coal company controlled by the railroad company, as a matter of course, because by buying from it I am assured of the prompt delivery of the coal for use in my factory, and I am also assured of the prompt shipment to my customers of the goods I manufacture.

It is a motive of self-interest. You might say it is a motive of self-protection. It appeals so powerfully to the intelligence and selfishness of every manufacturer in the land that the coal companies owned by private corporations and individuals will simply be driven from the field and their property, dismantled and disused, will ultimately fall into the lap of the railroad corporation at its own price.

What is true of coal companies is true of lumber companies. It is true of elevators. It is true of all other industrial enterprises. That mischief is incalculable; but, sir, it is not the only mischief. A railroad company owning a steel corporation, we will say, will ship its steel rails from Pittsburg, in Pennsylvania, to El Paso, in Texas, at a loss. You may wonder why a railroad company would ship any commodity at a loss, but the wonder disappears when you examine the profits of the steel company and find that what the stockholders in the railroad company have lost the stockholders in the steel company have gained. But this mischief does not stop there. When the Interstate Commerce Commission comes to fix the freight rate on the railroads, they say, "Here are our earnings, here is our value, here are our expenses, and our rates will not stand the reduction."

But they conceal—and under one theory they need not conceal—from the railroad commission that they have been hauling these steel rails for less than the cost of transporting them, and so in time the railroad stockholders will not lose the difference between the freight actually charged and the freight which ought to have been charged, but the railroad will be permitted to recoup itself for that insufficiently paid service by levying a higher tariff upon other commodities which the railroad company does not happen to own. Sir, the mischief of this policy permeates every line of industry, and the American Congress acted wisely when it determined to divorce the business of transportation from the business of production.

More than that, Mr. President, these great railroad corporations exercise the right of eminent domain.

They can cross a man's threshold; they can condemn his homestead; they can divide his field. They can, if need be, appropriate his private burial ground. They exercise the power which is second to the power over life and death and which only a government itself ought to exercise, or which it ought to permit exercised only for a great public purpose. It is monstrous, sir, that this Government shall permit these railroad companies to exercise one of its greatest powers and then, having exercised that power, permit them to engage in the business of producing coal or selling merchandise. The business of production is apart from the business of transportation.

I have no desire to injure the railroads. I regard them as great agencies of civilization and commerce. They have not always regarded me as favorably as I do them. I have more than once in my life felt the force and the effect of their opposition. But that could not provoke me to do them an injustice.

I will be just and fair to them, but I will always insist that they be compelled to be just and fair to the people. I would no more agree that the railroads can fix the rates which they charge the people than I would agree that the people can fix the rates which they will pay the railroads. The relation of the railroads to the people is a peculiar one. They owe the people not only a moral duty but they owe them a legal duty as well. I owe the Senator from Ohio the moral duty to treat him fairly, but if I make a trade with him, I make the best trade I can; and if I tell him the truth about it, he has no legal ground of complaint because I out-traded him. If I go to the storehouse I buy the merchant's goods at a price upon which we agree. The merchant is under the moral duty to sell me the right kind of goods at the right price, but that duty is wholly and purely a moral one that I can not compel him to perform.

But it is not so with the railroads. The railroads are under both a moral and a legal duty to give everybody fair service for fair pay and to give everybody the same service for the same pay. It would be just as sensible to allow the people to say what they will pay the railroads as it is to allow the railroads to say what they will charge the people. The people owe the railroads the duty of making fair payment for fair service. The railroads owe the people the duty of rendering the people fair service for fair pay. It is not for either to determine how, when, or the manner in which that duty shall be discharged. But the sensible and the proper procedure is that which the American Congress has adopted, of providing a Commission, which shall say to the railroads what it is just for them to charge the people and say to the people what it is just for them to pay the railroads.

When the railroad comes to condemn my property it can have commissioners to fix the value of it, if it can not agree with me. Those commissioners determine what the railroad shall pay me for that property. Of course I have my appeal to the courts, but when the commissioners assess the damages the railroad company is entitled to pay me, and if I decline to receive it to pay it into the court, and proceed to appropriate and use my property. It is a poor rule that will not work both ways. When I want to use the railroad, if I can not agree with it as to what it shall charge me for the service, I ought to have and I do have in law and in morals the same right to have this Commission assess the value of the railroad service as the railroad had to have a commission assess the value of my land, which it took for the construction of its road.

We may just as well accept it as the settled, definite, and irrevocable policy of this Republic that railroad rates may be fixed forever hereafter by a commission. There will be no step backward taken in this respect, and if the Republican party should elect its President at the coming Presidential election it will not dare to take a line out of that law. Instead of mutilating it, it will be compelled from time to time to strengthen it, and it shall be one of the highest satisfactions of my life that I helped to instruct the Republican party how to do that. I helped to write that platform which the President of the United States took from us and appropriated to his own use. I have never complained about that, and I shall be pleased to have him take more of our platforms and put them into statutes.

But that is all apart, Mr. President. I hope that the substitute of the Senator from Ohio will not be adopted. I hope the joint resolution of the Senator from West Virginia will not be passed. I am inclined to think that in this latter respect I am hoping against hope. I am inclined to think that possibly it has been agreed on by those in the majority, and if it has, then my last appeal is that we do not write in the statute a legislative permission to violate the law, but that we rather deal with it in the other way—rub out "May, 1908," and write in the law such time as in the wisdom of the majority it may be thought necessary for the railroads to have to prepare themselves to obey the law's command.

COMPANIES B, C, AND D, TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY.

Mr. BULKELEY. So the House disagreed to the Senate amendments and asked for a conference with the Senate.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. TAWNEY with Mr. BRUNDIDGE.

Mr. MILLER with Mr. WILLETT.

Mr. McMILLAN with Mr. ROBINSON.

Mr. MALBY with Mr. WEBB.

Mr. BENNET of New York with Mr. CLARK of Florida.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan with Mr. HITCHCOCK.

Mr. FASSETT with Mr. HAMMOND.

Mr. DARRAGH with Mr. GILLESPIE.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin with Mr. FAVROT.

Mr. CARY with Mr. HAMILL.

Mr. ANTHONY with Mr. DAVEY of Louisiana.

Mr. BOUTELL with Mr. CRAVENS.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. SCOTT, Mr. HAUGEN, and Mr. LAMB.

ENLARGED HOMESTEADS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 6155, that the House further insist on its amendments to the Senate bill, and agree to a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming moves to suspend the rules and take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 6155; to further insist on the House amendments, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules, a second is ordered.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Let the Clerk state what the bill is.

The Clerk read as follows:

Bill S. 6155, an act to provide for an enlarged homestead.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Mississippi to twenty minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is it sufficient, Mr. Speaker, for the Clerk merely to have read the title to the bill?

The SPEAKER. Yes; because these are House amendments to a Senate bill; the amendments have been read.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Senate amendments to a House bill?

The SPEAKER. No; House amendments to a Senate bill. The Senate disagrees and asks for a conference, and the motion is to further insist on the House amendments and agree to the conference.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And the Chair rules that it is not necessary to read the bill. How does the House know what the amendments are?

The SPEAKER. The House made the amendments, and the amendments were read and considered at the time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That proceeds upon the theory that the House knows what the bill is and what the amendments are.

The SPEAKER. The House is presumed to know its former action.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, it occurs to me that no debate is necessary on this motion, in view of the fact that the House insists on the amendments to the Senate bill and agrees to the conference.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What bill is it?

Mr. MONDELL. It is the 320-acre homestead bill—the dry-land homestead bill that we passed day before yesterday. We made a number of amendments to the Senate 320-acre homestead bill, and this is a motion to further insist on those amendments, the Senate having nonconcurred in them. We now propose to further insist on the House amendments and agree to a conference.

Mr. REEDER. If the gentleman from Wyoming will permit me to make a statement, all of these amendments were made in the Committee on the Public Lands, and were agreed to and passed by the House.

Mr. MONDELL. There was no amendment made to the bill in the House.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then the motion substantially is to insist on the House action in passing the bill the other day because the bill contains what you now call the "amendments," and they were amendments put on by the standing committee and brought into the House as a part of the bill?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; and the motion is to insist on the bill as the House passed it. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The question was taken.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 249, nays 7, answered "present" 9, not voting 122, as follows:

IMPORTATION OF IMPURE AND UNWHOLESOME TEA.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 514) to amend an act entitled "An act to prevent the importation of impure and unwholesome tea," approved March 2, 1897, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 514) to amend an act entitled "An act to prevent the importation of impure and unwholesome tea," approved March 2, 1897.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of "An act to prevent the importation of impure and unwholesome tea," approved March 2, 1897, be amended by adding at the end thereof the following words: "Provided, That nothing herein shall affect or prevent the importation into the United States, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, of any merchandise as tea which may be inferior in purity, quality, and fitness for consumption to the standards established by the Secretary of the Treasury, or of any tea waste, tea siftings, or tea sweepings, for the sole purpose of manufacturing theine, caffeine, or other chemical products whereby the identity and character of the original material is entirely destroyed or changed; and that importers and manufacturers who import or bring into the United States such tea, tea waste, tea siftings, or tea sweepings shall give suitable bond, to be approved as to amount and securities by the Secretary of the Treasury, conditioned that said imported material shall be only used for the purposes herein provided, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules, a second is ordered. The gentleman from Missouri is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Mississippi to twenty minutes.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, this bill has been passed by the Senate, and comes here with the unanimous report of the Committee on Ways and Means. It does not affect either the revenues or the tariff in any way. The purport of it is to relieve the American manufacturers of what is called "caffeine" of certain irksome and unnecessary requirements. Caffeine is manufactured from tea waste and tea sweepings, and under the present law that waste must be denatured before it can be imported, a requirement which causes American manufacturers an expense of all the way from 15 to 20 per cent and neutralizes the benefit which they otherwise derive from the tariff. Tea sweepings and waste are on the free list in every country in the world, the same as in ours, but no country imposes this requirement, namely, the denaturing of these sweepings and this waste; consequently the American manufacturers are decidedly at a disadvantage as compared with their competitors in other countries. The Treasury Department as well as the Agricultural Department are approving of this measure, and it is entirely safe to enact it, for the reason that a bond is required to be furnished by these manufacturers to the Treasury Department in order to guard against the possibility of these tea sweepings being used as food. They can not be so used according to the testimony of experts in the Agricultural Department. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PAYNE. I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri a question. I do not know that I understood him, but it is a fact that tea dust is actually prohibited from importation into the United States under our laws.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. It is prohibited and can not be used, unless denatured abroad.

Mr. PAYNE. It is absolutely prohibited from coming into the United States.

Mr. SLAYDEN. What is prohibited?

Mr. PAYNE. The importation of tea dust, and this seeks to allow a sufficient amount to come in under regulations of the Treasury Department for the manufacture of caffeine. That is all the bill provides.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I have been hearing premonitory rumblings of Republican legislative activity now for some time. I have been hearing that we are going to have more or less of a tariff revision at some time or other, just precisely when is not stated. Thank God the great movement is now beginning, with this bill as a genesis. People of the United States, when this bill becomes law, are going to become entitled to untaxed "tea sweepings" and "tea dust," provided there is a bond given that the tea sweepings can be useful only to manufacturers of caffeine or something or other, and can not be useful to plain people as food. This seems to be something of an illustration of the old Latin adage about the mountain's laboring and a mouse being born. Now I understand why it was that this bill was not brought before the House by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], who is chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, from which committee it was reported, but was delegated to the tender, though deputy, mercies of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT].

If it had been brought before the House by the gentleman from New York, there might have been a suspicion in certain stand-pat circles that there was a wavering, a giving away, a trembling upon the part of the body politic, the great majority party which holds to the principle of the sacredness of the Dingley tariff. Mr. Speaker, I have just received a piece of private information from the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] that, perhaps, might make a difference in my line of argument. I am not quite certain now as to what the great majority party is intending to do. I had understood from the interruption of the gentleman from New York that tea sweepings and tea dust were now forbidden to come into the United States at all. I am now given to understand, if I understand my friend from Missouri correctly, that they can come free, provided they are "denatured." Is that the proposition?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. That is right.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, Mr. Speaker, a moment since I thanked God, it seems, for almost nothing, for I thought we were going to get tea sweepings free, but I understand now from the gentleman from Missouri we are already getting them free, provided they are "denatured," and the new bill merely lets them in free provided the Agricultural Department says they are unfit for food. The only object of denaturing them was to render them unfit for food, so I am not quite certain whether this apparent reformatory tariff agitation and movement is any real agitation or movement at all. I can not quite reconcile the interruption of the gentleman from New York with the explanation of the gentleman from Missouri. But, still, I go this far, Mr. Speaker: I am so much in favor of one of the recommendations of your loved and trusted President, whose recommendations are so cordially and kindly received always by the majority party in this Chamber, and whose recommendations are so quickly and constantly and lovingly put into legislative effect by them, that I welcome even the sign of agitation upon that side—any sort of a movement or oscillation, even if there be no practical result of the movement.

The President in one of his late messages—just precisely which one I have forgotten, but I will doubtless be excused for forgetting, because in their multiplicity it is hard to remember them idem sonans—has suggested the tariff ought to be "revised," and preparatory steps ought to be taken thereunto "immediately."

Now, Mr. Speaker, although in this bill there is nothing affected, it seems none the less that there is at any rate an indication of a disposition to look like you were going to go through the motions of changing the tariff—as the children say, to "play like"—even that is something, because imitation of appearance is one of the reverences which vice pays to virtue. That gives me great hope, for if once the idea is established upon that side of the Chamber that the Dingley bill is not an idol, is not a fetish to be worshiped, that it is not a thing kept inviolate and untouched within the sacred arcana, and not to be spoken about in any light way—if it is once permitted to mention it even in a remote way, just in the way in which this bill mentions it—by making out like you are doing something to it, why it is possible that you, becoming acquainted with tariff agitation nominally, may some time begin to deal with the question really.

But it is such a great thing for this great party, yeelped by itself, self-christened, "G. O. P." in this great nation, with all these great problems knocking at the door of the House of Representatives for solution; with all these great bills that are on the Calendar and in the committees and on the Speaker's desk seeking enactment; this bill is such a great thing, in the face of the fact that the country wants a publication of campaign contributions law; that the country wants free wood pulp and free print paper; that the country wants some reformation of the injunction law to safeguard State rights and labor rights and farmer rights; that the country wants a model insurance law for the District of Columbia—long since recommended by the President—that the country wants so many things, Mr. Speaker, that the minority should feel deeply grateful, in view of all that, for the fact that finally this Republican party machinery has begotten to itself a movement, and is moving, and is going to accomplish the great incipiently revolutionary result of putting "tea sweepings" and "tea dust" upon the free list, provided there is a bond to satisfy the Secretary of Agriculture that they can not possibly be in a condition either to please the appetite, to satisfy the stomach, or to furnish nutrition to the human race. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Why, it was fabled in the old times that the gods upon Olympus sometimes shook their sides with laughter. The gods upon Olympus have been abolished, but if they had not been abolished I dare say that Jupiter, surrounded by Mars, his own consort Juno, and even the festive Venus, would be holding a conclave upon Olympus to-day and laughing at the idea that the Republican party—notwithstanding its stand-pat position—has finally taken the decided step, the long step, the long-unexpected step, the revolutionary and sublime step of putting "tea sweepings" upon the free list; provided always, that they are in such a shape that nobody can use them to either please or comfort the human stomach. [Applause on the Democratic side.] This is so much more of an important bill than a bill to provide for the publication before elections of campaign contributions; so much more important than a bill to provide for the reformation of the injunction laws, whereby at present a court, or one judge constituting a court, secretly and upon ex parte testimony can set aside the solemn and deliberate fiat of a State in the shape of solemnly enacted law, or can enjoin labor from publishing a refusal to patronize favored firms; is so much more important than the free wood pulp and print paper bill, for which the gentleman from New York, the colleague of the great leader of the majority, made such an excellent appeal that I do not wonder that the Speaker has gone out of his way and selected this particular bill to be recognized under this peculiar special rule for suspensions of all rules, regardless of what they are, as primarily, primordial, and chiefly to be considered.

Why, Mr. Speaker, I believe if the present occupant of the chair had been Speaker, even he would have recognized the superior importance of this bill to all the other great measures that are pending before the American people and to which the people, the Democracy, and the President have called attention. The American people are agitated to-day. They are moved—the great body politic is moved from turret to foundation stone—with convulsive and convulsing agitations pro and con concerning "free tea sweepings" and "free tea dust!" [Laughter.] Why, I recognize so fully and completely the superior excellency and importance of this peculiar bill, and I wonder so little at the Speaker for having preferred it to laws for honest elections and to untax intelligence and enfranchise labor, for having recognized the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] as a consequence of this preference to bring it up, that a sort of a suspicion that I might otherwise have had that perhaps, in parabolically dealing out recognitions, the Speaker was to a certain extent also providing for party harmony and rewarding the men who at this particular time consent or may be influenced to consent to reform our currency system according to the Cannon-Vreeland idea escaped entirely from my mind. I brush the suspicion aside as for the nonce unworthy and unfounded. That suspicion in this particular case could not linger in any rational mind.

This bill at least comes up on its own merits—aye, its own superexcellencies—and as compared with other bills it stands supreme. It is king of bills on the Calendar and king of bills in committees, king of Senate bills that have come to the House, king of all House bills that are ready to be passed and go to the Senate. At the beginning I was not astonished that the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] had surrendered the management of this great bill to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT], but I am astonished when I come to think of it now. I am astonished now when I reflect that the gentleman from New York might have gone to the country with the reputation of having seen just a little bit of the light that the American people are going to spread to the knowledge of all men after a while, as I hope—the light of the necessity and wisdom and justice of tariff revision and of untaxing the people to some extent upon their food and upon their clothing. But what has that got to do with this? Somebody might have said that my last sentence was not germane to this bill, because this bill does not untax the people either upon their clothing or their food, but untaxes tea dust only when a bond is given that it shall be for man neither "food nor raiment."

It is expressly stipulated in the bill that the tea dust untaxed shall not be fit for food before it shall be admitted untaxed.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman from Mississippi yield to me?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to my friend from Missouri; I yield to the avant-coureur of Republican reform on the tariff question; I yield to him as the great advocate of peace upon this floor; I yield to him almost as my fellow-German-American. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I regret that my friend from Mississippi did not yield to the "gentleman from Missouri" as the author of nonpartisan bills.

Mr. WILLIAMS. As what?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. As the author on this floor of nonpartisan bills—and this is one of them.

Mr. WILLIAMS. As what?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The gentleman from Mississippi is trying to inject politics into the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Why, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Just one minute. It has been fathered on the other side of this Capitol by a distinguished Democratic Senator from Missouri, the senior Senator, and is fathered on this side of the House by a Republican.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I have got only half the time for the discussion of a bill which, in the opinion of the Speaker of the House of Representatives, is the most important that can possibly be considered by the American House of Commons at this time, or else it would not have been given place by him in preference to all others. I therefore can not, of course, permit the gentleman from Missouri to make a speech out of my time.

Mr. Speaker, I am not injecting partisan politics into this. Why, who has heard me say a word about Democrats or Republicans? On the contrary, was not I trying to sing a psalm of praise to the Republican party for getting a tariff-reform movement on itself [laughter]—to the gentleman from New York, to the gentleman from Missouri, to the Republican Committee on Ways and Means, because I recognized the fact that they have got a move on them, not much of a move, it is true—a little bit of a move [laughter]—a move enough to agitate the circumference—a sort of superficial outside move? I suppose it did not go deep enough to disturb them internally, but, like a fat man laughing, sometimes he did not look like he was moved internally, but outwardly, circumferentially is shaking. [Laughter.]

Accuse me of bringing partisan politics into the consideration of this great nonpartisan bill! Mr. Speaker, I hurl foul scorn at the gentleman from Missouri for making a charge of that sort! [Laughter.] I am standing here and advocating this bill, not because of any good that there is in it, but to bring the parties together and for the promise of good that may be in it as a precedent. I am standing here to advocate it, not because it shows any conversion to civic righteousness, but because it shows the beginning of disgust at stand-patism, and the fear of stand-patism and disgust thereat is the beginning of civic righteousness. I hope the gentleman from Missouri will not deny that that is an accurate quotation from the Scriptures. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, I think that this bill is so important that it ought to be passed by a vote of the entire House, upon a roll call. [Laughter.] I can imagine some day in the distant future somebody rising in the district in California represented by Mr. KAHN and saying, "How did you vote, sir, upon the great bill for free tea sweepings and free tea dust?" [Laughter.] I can imagine the gentleman from California replying, and he replies well; because, I tell you, when you give him a rôle to play he plays it exceedingly well. [Laughter.] I can imagine him drawing himself up, with his chest thrown forward, with a certain protuberance of stomach, and his head thrown back, thrilling the populace of the great State of California, which has yearned for this bill, by saying: "I voted for it, sir." And, then, after hearing the thunderous applause, I can hear some "cheap demagogue" shout, "Prove it, prove it; where is the page and the Record?" Then I can fancy I see the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], aye, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED], and all the panoplied cohorts of protectionism, and also the light auxiliary skirmishers on the outside, led by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. CUSHMAN] [laughter] unable to reply to that demand. But I am going to have a yea-and-nay vote—a record vote—and then each one can triumphantly shriek back—oh, the infinite pity of a good deed unproven—"Sir, upon the RECORD of the ever memorable 13th day of May, in the ever memorable year of 1908, upon a certain red-letter page, you will find my name recorded in favor of this great measure—the most important bill, in the opinion of our Speaker and boss, that could then be considered by the representatives of the American people in Congress assembled." [Laughter and applause.] Accuse me of partisanship! I am trying to take care of you in your district. [Great laughter.] I am trying to see that you get a chance to go upon record and prove how you voted for this and for all great propositions that came up in the House. Why, sometimes when I try to perform that service for you, you will not let me. [Laughter.]

Why, one day I got a vote out of you on wood pulp and print paper, and you Republicans all voted against putting it on the free list, then I got a vote out of you on remedial reformation of the injunction laws, and you all voted against it, but it was a vote by standing up and by tellers. You had it fixed up so that you can not go back to your constituents and prove that you voted against these measures, as I assume you want to prove. Not only that, you have got it fixed up so that I am afraid that I will have difficulty in proving, by the Record at any rate, that some of you did vote against those several measures, if you are disposed to deny your act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the Democrats to some extent, but still more the Republicans, for the careful consideration which they have given to my well-considered argument in favor of the passage of this great though somewhat revolutionary bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARTHOLOTT. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend from Mississippi for calling attention to the great importance of this bill. I knew it was important to me and to the people of my district, but I had no idea that it was of such transcendent importance to the whole country as the gentleman from Mississippi has pointed out.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did not know it until the Speaker ruled that it was.

Mr. BARTHOLOTT. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE].

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, the vaudeville part of this performance being over, I wish to say a word about the bill. And I want to say to my friend from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] that he talks better about a bill that he does not know anything about than he does when he gets a bill that he does know something about. [Laughter.]

The present law forbids the introduction or importation of any tea grounds or tea dust into the United States. There was a reason for this. The tea dust came largely from overgrown tea leaves, in which during the process of growth a large amount of tannin had developed. Of course the tea made from such tea grounds was poisonous in its nature, and we did not want it here in the United States. So we prohibited the importation of it. That was a number of years ago, when the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] was on the Committee on Ways and Means and was supposed to have some information about what was going on there—I say supposed to have. Now, Mr. Speaker, it turns out that since that time a factory has been started in St. Louis on a large scale, employing a number of people for the purpose of manufacturing caffeine. This manufacture can best be carried on from tea grounds, the importation of which is now prohibited. In order to get them in, they have had to treat them with lime in a foreign country and denature them, change their nature so that they could come in at all. This process of denaturing these tea grounds costs the manufacturer about 19 per cent of the total cost of the manufacture of the caffeine. This bill simply allows tea grounds to be introduced here in their natural state, for the purpose of this manufacture, and for no other purpose. Of course it has no more relation to the tariff than the gentleman from Mississippi is related to the tariff. It does not relate to that question in any way. The bill originated in the Senate, and of course everybody knows—the gentleman from Mississippi knows—that a bill which did change the revenue could not originate in the Senate of the United States. It comes here simply as an amendment of that law, for the purpose of promoting this manufacture.

Now, ordinarily this bill would have passed the House in two minutes. Upon the statement of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLOTT] it would have passed by unanimous consent; but for some reason unknown to any sensible person in the United States the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] has reversed that time-honored custom, and, falling back upon the Constitution of the United States, he insists upon a yeas and nays vote on any bill that comes in here, no matter how local it may be in its character, how little important it may be to the people of the United States in general. He insists that we shall have a roll call, taking half an hour, and in order to obviate the necessity of additional roll call, we have made this rule, which, unfortunately, on such a bill as this, allows the gentleman to spend twenty minutes in his vaudeville performance for the amusement of the House, but to the utter waste of the time of the House, in order that he may further delay the proceedings of the House, for the purpose of passing a great many bills during the concluding days of this session of Congress. Of course that is what the gentleman would call a non sequitur, and it will not follow that we do more work by delaying the House, and using, as somebody calculated the other day, seventeen legislative days already in useless roll calls, simply because the fathers, when they made the Constitution of the United States, could not foresee that any gentleman with the proclivities of the gentleman from Mississippi would ever break into the Congress of the United States, or if he did, could find a fifth of those present who would ever second his useless proceeding of demanding a roll call upon such a bill as this, or upon a motion to take a recess after 5 o'clock, or a motion to adjourn after the usual hour for the House to adjourn.

We have to take the circumstances and the conditions as they come to us, and to prevent many of these useless roll calls; if we proceeded in the ordinary way, they would consume all of the time of the House from now until next December. We have to bring up the bills of little importance in this way and give the gentleman from Mississippi a chance to show the country that he is here for the purpose of wasting the time of the House with senseless roll calls. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BARTHOLOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Shall the rules be suspended and the bill be passed?

The question was taken.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, in order to demonstrate my desire to hurry up legislation, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 221, nays 2, answered "present" 10, not voting 154, as follows:

MILITARY ACADEMY BILL.

Mr. HULL of Iowa, from the Committee on Military Affairs, by the direction of that committee, reported the bill (H. R. 21875) making appropriations for the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes, which was read and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered printed.

Mr. SULZER reserved all points of order.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill H. R. 18347, an act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CAPRON). The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MURDOCK. Is it now in order to move that this bill be referred to the House Committee on the Post-Offices and Post-Roads?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks not. There is a special order applying to this.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, the motion before the House is to suspend the rules, do I understand?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion before the House is, Will the House disagree to the Senate amendments en bloc and ask for a conference with the Senate?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, this is under the French procedure. [Laughter.] I thought maybe it was under the suspension procedure. Then, it is not necessary, or rather not allowable, to call for a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Will the House disagree to the Senate amendments en bloc and ask for a conference with the Senate.

The question was taken.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MURDOCK. As the case is now, a negative vote here would agree to all of the Senate amendments?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It would.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Including the ocean mail subsidy act, so that a negative vote means a vote in favor of that?

Mr. WILLIAMS. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. STAFFORD. And also including the increased pay to the railroads, amounting to at least $2,000,000.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, there was no negative vote registered on the last question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Mississippi has called for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order, which has been ruled upon by the Chair, the Speaker of the House, that a roll call not an hour prior to this disclosed the presence of a quorum, and that therefore the point made by the gentleman from New York is dilatory.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, that is correct, but it is evident to the Speaker that a great number of the Representatives have left the Hall since the roll call.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That was true in the other case also.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the only duty remaining to the Chair is to count and ascertain whether there is a quorum present or not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am glad to hear it. That has reversed the former ruling.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (after counting). One hundred and ten gentlemen are present—not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant-at-Arms will notify absentees, and the question will be taken, Will the House disagree to the Senate amendments en bloc and ask for a conference? and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 239, nays 1, answered "present" 9, not voting 138, as follows:

Amend the title so as to read: "An act authorizing the construction of bridges across navigable waters, and to extend the time for the construction of bridges across navigable waters, and to legalize the construction of bridges across navigable waters."

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. OLMSTED). Is a second demanded?

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia demands a second. Under the rules a second is considered as ordered. The gentleman from Michigan is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Georgia is entitled to the same.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Speaker, this is what is known as the "omnibus bridge bill." It is a bill which contains all of the bridge bills which have been sent to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and which have received a favorable report from that committee and have been indorsed by the Secretary of War. All are to be constructed under the provisions of the law known as the "general bridge law of 1906." I do not understand that there is any objection to the bill, and therefore, believing as I do that everybody understands it, I will reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, the bill was put in this shape in order to insure consideration of all projects for bridges which were pending before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. Exigencies in the House are such, at this time, that it was necessary to resort to this device in order that Members might secure all their projects. Therefore we took a bridge bill which came from the Senate and attached to it by amendment every single meritorious bridge proposition that was pending before the committee, thus forming this omnibus bill. It is a good bill in its present shape, and it is necessary to pass it in this way in order to secure all these bridges. I request gentlemen on this side not to regard its origin on the other side as a badge of suspicion, but to accept it as being all right, and, notwithstanding the circumstances, to vote for the bill. [Applause.] I have no request, Mr. Speaker, for further time—

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will take a minute or two.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi such time as he wishes to use.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, if I had been wanting a mathematical demonstration of the fact that I had been engaged in saving the public time and expediting the public business, this bill would have furnished me with it. It contains twenty-three bridges. Ordinarily these twenty-three bridges would have come up each as a separate bill; something like ten minutes would have transpired in asking unanimous consent and in inquiries as to whether the bill conformed with the provisions of the general law, as to whether it was unanimously reported by the committee, and in the gentleman offering it explaining why that particular bridge was requisite. If ten minutes had not been required, five would have been required on each. Twenty-three times ten is two hundred and thirty minutes. Twenty-three times five is a hundred and fifteen minutes.

Now, we are going to get twenty-three bridge bills through in forty minutes of debate, if all the time upon that side is consumed—and I take it for granted that it will not be—and if all the time on this side be consumed—and I take it for granted that it will not be—plus thirty-five minutes of time necessary to call the roll, making a total of seventy-five minutes, a saving, Mr. Speaker, of forty minutes of the people's time on one calculation and a hundred and fifty minutes of the people's time on another calculation. [Laughter.] Now, Mr. Speaker, I hope I will hear no more from the leader of the majority about our wasting the public time when we are expediting it in this remarkably expeditious manner. Not only that, but we have accomplished the same purpose in connection with pensions. We used to stand here and pass one little pension bill at a time, and now under this new régime you put them all in one, and we pass them after forty minutes' debate and thirty-five minutes of roll call. There never has been anything that hurried up public business equal to the mustard-plaster policy that has been applied to the Republican body politic by the Democratic party during this Congress.

Mr. GILLET. Will the gentleman from Mississippi permit a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the gentleman wants to ask a question germane to the bill which I am discussing, I will be glad to answer.

Mr. GILLET. It is germane to your argument.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course the argument is germane to the bill.

Mr. GILLET. I want to ask the gentleman if he thinks this is a good way to legislate, to combine a great number of bills, so that if one vicious bill is there, you have got to vote down all the good bills in order to defeat that?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I have been admonished by the leader of the Republican party on this floor and by the Speaker's rules deputy from Pennsylvania that the Democratic Representatives are not Members of the House except nominally, and that the Republican party is "responsible for all omissions and commissions." If this be a bad method of legislation, as the gentleman from Massachusetts would infer, then by the confession of the majority leader this is a Republican bad way of doing business. I am not at all responsible for it. The galled jade can wince, my withers are unwrung. Now, this morning, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] referred to my calling the roll upon motions to take a recess and upon motions to adjourn, and said the framers of the Constitution never had an idea that a man like that would be here!

When I first came to Washington as a Representative it was as a Member of the Fifty-third Congress, and the great Thomas B. Reed was minority leader at that time. He organized a real filibuster, not a movement like this. This movement is for the purpose of coercing the majority into legislating. But he organized a real filibuster—that is, to prevent the majority from doing anything, even routine business. And what do you reckon was the reason that he gave to the country for his filibuster? It was that he was going to force the Democratic majority to manacle the Republican minority, in order that he might be justified in history for having manacled the Democratic minority when he was Speaker! And day after day the roll was called upon the adoption of the Journal, upon every motion that was or could be made; unanimous consent was refused upon everything; the point of no quorum was made on every occasion. I just happened this morning to be reminiscing a bit, and, with the help of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], I came on the proceedings of July 8, 1892, in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 5920, a yet earlier period than I have just referred to, and at that time the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] was not the Republican leader, but he was a distinguished man in the councils of the party and was doing their agreed work.

Upon that occasion a bill for the government of Utah was brought up, providing for the manner of electing delegates, and all that. When the bill was finally passed it was passed with only one vote in opposition. There sprang to his feet upon that occasion, when the motion was made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WASHINGTON] to suspend the rules and pass the bill, the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], and I find recorded:

Mr. PAYNE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee had been recognized to make a motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill that he has indicated.

Mr. PAYNE. I supposed that the gentleman had made the motion, and it was pending.

Showing that he was not only frequent, but premature. Then the bill was read. Then the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] said:

Mr. Speaker, I make the motion that the House do now adjourn.

Who has heard me move "that the House do now adjourn?" Who has heard me make the point of no quorum? At that time Mr. PAYNE and other Republicans made it all the time, and the Republican leader announced that the "Democrats must keep a quorum here" themselves, as the Republicans were not going to help them do so.

We go on down in this pleasant history and find after the gentleman had made his motion to adjourn, and that motion had been defeated, the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] said:

I ask for a division.

The House divided, and there were—ayes 31, noes 134.

Mark the paucity of ayes! The gentleman said that he did not understand that the forefathers had "anticipated" me or anybody that would come to the House and call for the yeas and nays, and move divisions and tellers, except when they really did want them and had a large crowd of people behind them ready to enforce legislation or negation of legislation.

But revenons à nos moutons. After that announcement was made, of 31 to 134, the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], in his desire to accelerate the public business, arose and said:

I ask for tellers.

Tellers were refused, only 31 voting in favor thereof.

Mark once more the noble 31 only! But the gentleman from New York, who apparently also was not "anticipated" by the forefathers, upon a proposition where he could not even get tellers, much less the yeas and nays (and who has heard of my failing to get the yeas and nays when I asked for them this year?), the gentleman from New York, in those historic days, rose and said:

I ask for tellers.

They were refused—not a sufficient number.

Then he said:

I demand the yeas and nays.

Great Hercules! Think of it! The yeas and nays! The question was ordered on the yeas and nays and they were refused—not a sufficient number.

Then the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] arose—a much more replete and complete parliamentarian than I—and I find recorded:

Mr. PAYNE. I demand tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Who has heard me demand tellers on ordering the yeas and nays? And tellers were ordered on the question of ordering the yeas and nays, because there was a fair Speaker in the chair. And then:

The House divided, and the tellers reported—ayes 34, noes 158.

Then the gentleman from New York, in his great desire to accelerate and expedite public business and to prove that the forefathers had foreseen him as an expediter and accelerator, said:

I demand a second on the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. Washington said:

I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

And then objection was made.

Then the Speaker appointed tellers, the gentleman from New York being one of the tellers. Then the gentleman from New York said:

I ask that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Perkins] be substituted.

[Laughter.]

Why, he was so tired "expediting public business" that he had to get somebody else substituted for him to count as a teller. Who ever heard of my being tired of expediting public business to the point of physical exhaustion?

Mr. ADAMSON. I would like to know if that interesting record discloses anything that was ever said about dilatory?

Mr. WILLIAMS. It does not disclose that anything was said about "dilatory." But, Mr. Speaker, it is an old maxim that actions speak louder than words. Then I found that when the matter was finally voted upon—

Mr. AMES. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want to finish this branch of this very interesting story. I find there was one vote cast in the negative, and I presume, out of charity, it was the vote of the gentleman from New York. [Laughter and applause.] Now, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. AMES. Is there not a material difference between the position of the gentleman from New York at that time and the position of the gentleman from Mississippi at this time?

Mr. WILLIAMS. There was; thank God for the difference! I will tell you what the difference was.

Mr. AMES. Will you let me finish my question? Is there anything in the RECORD you allude to there which indicates that the gentleman from New York claimed that he was expediting public business?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, now, Mr. Speaker, why it was not necessary for him to claim it then; he has claimed it, as his constant and chronic habit, only this morning; and it is the modern instance and not the ancient saw that has aroused my discursiveness. All this contention now is to show that nobody should ever do these things except when he wants to defeat a particular bill.

The gentleman says there is a difference. Yes; there is a difference. I am endeavoring and trying to rivet the attention of the country on the fact that I want to make the Republican majority pass legislation that not only we, but the majority of the American people and their own President—accidentally right—wants. [Laughter and loud applause on the Democratic side.] What was he engaged in? What was the great Thomas B. Reed engaged in during the Fifty-second and Fifty-third Congresses, followed by his lieutenants, the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL]? Oh, a puny effort, a spiteful effort with a senseless purpose—to make the majority manacle the minority, when he himself was in the minority. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And he succeeded to a very large extent.

He had, as Speaker, applied the so-called "Reed rules," throttling debate, and since that moment this House has never been a deliberative assembly. He announced to the Democrats, when they came into power, substantially this: "In order to prove to you that much of your criticism of me for throttling debate and preventing deliberation and manacling a minority are unjust, I am going to prove to the country that you can not do business without manacling us, and I am going to refuse all unanimous consents; I am going to call the roll whenever I can find occasion; I am going to make the point of no quorum every time I can; I am going to move to adjourn whenever the rules will allow it; I am going to move to take a recess whenever the rules will allow," and so forth, ad infinitum, on the adoption of the Journal, and so forth, and he did it all, until they were forced in a Democratic House to adopt in part, in part only, the gag rule for the origination of which [laughter and loud applause on the Republican side] the Republican party still applauds itself, strange to say. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Why, Mr. Speaker, into what contempt has the American House of Representatives sunk! The Constitution speaks of three independent, coordinate, separate branches, and then refers to the executive, the judiciary, and the legislative. Do you know what the three separate, independent, and coordinate branches are now? The executive, the judiciary, and the Senate of the United States. [Applause on the Democratic side.] What do you amount to over there, either one of you Republicans, individually? [Laughter.]

Mr. GREENE. What do you amount to?

Mr. WILLIAMS. What do I amount to? I confess I amount to nothing, politically and personally, but, then, I am a member of the minority party; but what do you individually amount to, any one of you, in the matter of legislation? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Why, you have got to the point of actually being afraid to sign a respectful request to your own Speaker to recognize somebody to ask consideration of legislation that you yourselves are in favor of. Deny it if you dare, and I will prove it on you. You dare not indite a note to him of the most respectful and polite character without having previously obtained his consent. [Applause on the Democratic side.] You have got to the point where you introduce bills to do things; you make speeches in favor of doing them, and you dare not address a billet-doux to the Speaker asking him for a chance to vote on them. You dare not lovingly write:

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I most respectfully and humbly and considerably request that you will permit consideration by the House of H. R. —, introduced by me.

You are going to the country that way, too, are not you? Why, Mr. Speaker, somebody stepped across the aisle this morning and said I had made a humorous speech. I have not made any humorous speech. My speeches have all had a serious purpose. The only humorous thing about these little lectures that I have been delivering is the perplexed gravity with which they are received by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE]. [Laughter.] The only man who has been physician enough to successfully diagnose your case is the gentleman from Washington [Mr. CUSHMAN], when he said that we were giving you "mustard-seed politics." We are putting a blister upon you every day that brings a boil unless you assert your individual independence as Representatives sufficiently at least to have the courage to make a request of your own Speaker without previously getting his consent to make the request; then have the modesty and sense of eternal fitness to resign as Members of the House. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The gentleman from Washington has diagnosed it right. It is mustard-plaster politics, and it is not bringing any blisters over here. The blisters are over there. You say it is puerile; you say it is silly; you say that there is no sense in it; you say it is childish; you say it is vaudeville. Well, then, why do you not laugh. What makes you so infernally serious about it? [Laughter on the Democratic side.] And why do you not do something? You are going to the country after a while and tell them that I "would not let you pass important and popular measures," when I am standing here every day pleading and praying with you that you will legislate. Why, I would pray literally to the Higher Power that you might do something, except for my recollection of the fact that the Bible says that "the prayer of the righteous man availeth much," and I am afraid that my prayer would not, because I can not class myself that way. But just a few of you that introduced free wood-pulp bills—just a few of you that introduced campaign contribution publicity bills, get up a few little notes and send them in to the Speaker; our petition he already has. Dare you add yours? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Speaker, I have been entertained on various occasions by the endeavors of the gentleman from Mississippi to apologize for the filibustering course that he has pursued up to date. He never neglects any opportunity of trying to explain himself, and I do not blame him, because I understand some of the trials that he has been undergoing, brought about by the dissatisfaction on his own side, at the senseless policy which he has pursued in this filibuster. [Applause on the Republican side.]

He ought to have gone further in his mathematics to-day, when he was demonstrating how much time he had saved to the House by bringing about a condition which he himself has condemned so many times on the floor, viz., the passage of legislation without giving anyone an opportunity to express himself on the measure. He ought to have gone further and shown that he has saved this House from the Democratic party, as led by the gentleman from Mississippi, from twenty-three roll calls on this bill, which would have aggregated something like eight hundred and five minutes, or eleven hours and a half. He would have imposed upon the House for eleven and one-half hours on such calls could he have had his way and the Republican Rules Committee had not presented the rule for the purpose of allowing us to do business.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Do not you think that before they got through with those roll calls they would have brought in some of this legislation that you and I want, and then I would have stopped?

Mr. TOWNSEND. It is also amusing to me, Mr. Speaker, to notice the audacity (I think perhaps that is the proper word) which the gentleman displays on every occasion when he states what he and his party are proposing to bring to the attention of the majority, certain measures of legislation, nearly all of which, all the sane parts of which, had been presented here from Republican sources, and that part of it which has been reached would have been reached in the orderly procedure of the business of the House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there have been times when I have become impatient at the action of the House in not doing things which to me seemed necessary.

Yet I have learned since I have been a member of this House that all legislation should be given careful and most considerate attention. I now would like to have certain measures brought up. I am not charging anyone with bad faith because I can not have my way about everything. But I submit, Mr. Speaker, that when the record of this session of the Sixtieth Congress shall have been completed, the Republican party can go before the country with the statement of things done which will redound to the credit of the majority party that has had control of this Sixtieth Congress. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I wish to say further, Mr. Speaker, that this House and the country is not going to be deceived by the statements of gentlemen who are at this time advocating legislation which, if they were in the majority, they would not dare to present. [Applause on the Republican side.] The country should be thankful sometimes for failure of Congress to pass certain proposed bills. It is an easy thing for gentlemen to find fault; it is an easy thing for gentlemen not charged with responsibility to criticise; it is quite a different thing to take charge of positive legislation and carry it to completion.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not wish to yield, because I do not wish to carry on this controversy any further.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman enumerate the legislation urged by us and which we would not stand for?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I will take this time to say that you will have an opportunity, as I understand it, to-morrow afternoon to present certain amendments to the currency bill, to present your notions of what you want enacted into law, and I want to see you do it. Instead of advocating your opposition and saying, "We oppose the Republican bill," present a positive scheme that you are willing to stand for and go before the country upon.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not want to be interrupted, for I do not want to enter into a controversy that I did not introduce in the House. This discussion was injected not by any desire of mine.

I had not expected to say a word, but I would suggest to the gentleman from Mississippi and to the House that there are certain methods of reform, certain methods for expediting business which would expedite and which could be adopted. One of them is the policy of discussing the questions before the House, instead of giving gentleman an opportunity to exploit themselves before the country on every possible occasion. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. How are we going to discuss a question if you will not let it come before the House?

Mr. TOWNSEND. This bill is before the House, and I apologize for occupying any of the attention of the House in discussing any matter not germane to it. This is a bill which, I take it, everybody is going to vote for, and yet, under the filibuster inaugurated by the gentleman from Mississippi and persisted in by him, we will have to take thirty-five minutes to pass it, and I call for a vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. OLMSTED). The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

Mr. ADAMSON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 228, nays 2, answered "present" 10, not voting 147, as follows:

REIMBURSING INDIANS FOR CUTTING OF TIMBER.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 421) to pay allottees to whom lands have been patented under the act of February 8, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of lands to Indians on the various reservations and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes," as amended by the act of February 28, 1891, the amount paid into the Treasury of the United States on account of the sale, cutting, or removal of timber from, or damages to, lands allotted to them, and to appropriate money for the payment thereof, as amended by the committee, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 421) to pay allottees to whom lands have been patented under the act of February 8, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of lands to Indians on the various reservations and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes," as amended by the act of February 28, 1891, the amount paid into the Treasury of the United States on account of the sale, cutting, or removal of timber from, or damages to, lands allotted to them, and to appropriate money for the payment thereof.

Be it enacted, etc., That where any money has been, or shall hereafter be, paid into the Treasury of the United States for or on account of the sale, cutting, or removal of timber from, or for any damages to, lands held by any allottee under a trust patent containing restrictions on alienation that such money be paid by the Treasurer of the United States unto said allottee, his heirs or assigns; that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs make a list of said allottees, showing their names and the tribe or band to which they belong and the lands patented to each and the amounts paid in as aforesaid, which list shall be prima facie evidence of the amounts to be paid to said allottees, respectively.

SEC. 2. That upon application, by petition and proof of the identity, of any of said allottees, and also of the assignment of his claim to any of said moneys in case of an assignment thereof, and of heirship in case of his death, by affidavit of the claimant, or of one having knowledge of the facts, and upon the request of the Secretary of the Interior, the Treasurer of the United States shall pay unto the claimant, or his guardian, if a minor, the amount which should be paid to the allottee as shown by said list.

SEC. 3. That there is hereby appropriated, out of the moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, a sufficient sum of money to pay each and all of said claimants.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to pay allottees the amount paid into the Treasury of the United States on account of the sale, cutting, or removal of timber from, or damages to, lands allotted to them, and to appropriate money for the payment thereof."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second. The SPEAKER. Under the rule, a second is ordered. The gentleman from Wisconsin is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Texas to twenty minutes.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, this bill simply provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall, upon due application, pay to certain Indians named in the bill money belonging to them realized out of the sale of their timber before they became entitled to patents. There was some damage done to their lands and to their timber, and it was determined by the Department of the Interior that until they obtained their patents the money should be held in trust by the Government. In each case the patent has been issued on the allotments. The Indians now are the owners of the land and in possession, and they are now asking that this money be refunded to them.

Mr. SULZER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS. Yes.

Mr. SULZER. How much, all told, of this money will these Indians get?

Mr. JENKINS. I am unable to tell the gentleman, because it is a matter of estimate. It depends upon the quantity of their timber that was cut in each case.

Mr. SULZER. How much will the lawyers get?

Mr. JENKINS. I do not know anything about it. I do not know that there will be any lawyer in the case. I have not any advice that there will be.

Mr. SULZER. I understand the lawyers will get most of this money instead of the Indians.

Mr. JENKINS. I will say to the gentleman from New York, Mr. Speaker, that I do not know why any lawyer would be expected to get anything out of it, because the Indian applies to the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of the Interior will pay him according to the estimates of the timber that was cut and sold.

Mr. SULZER. Has the gentleman from Wisconsin any knowledge of how much money is now in the Treasury Department belonging to these Indians?

Mr. JENKINS. No; I can not answer the gentleman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. May I ask the gentleman a question? This provides that no assignee of these Indians can patent and receive this money. What provision is there in this bill to protect the Indian against an improvident assignment made before patent is issued to him?

Mr. JENKINS. That would be taken care of under the general law. It would be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to look after the rights of the Indians because the bill was amended to provide that the application for this money should be made to the Secretary of the Interior and it can only be paid out on such application.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But there is nothing in this bill that protects the Indian against an improvident assignment made before the patent was issued to him.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is made the duty of the Secretary of the Interior—

Mr. FITZGERALD. This bill does not protect them, this bill provides for the payment of these moneys upon petition. The invariable practice has been to protect the Indian against improvident assignment made prior to the passage of the act, or even made after the passage of such act—

Mr. JENKINS. I will say to the gentleman from New York, in reply to his question, that the Indian would be protected under the general provisions of the law, because no assignment would be valid without the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, but I do not know that any assignments have ever been made. I have not been advised.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I dislike to question the accuracy of the gentleman's statement, but I doubt very much if, under the general law to-day, there is any statute that makes it impossible, if an assignment has been made but not proved, for the assignee to collect this money.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The provisions of section 2 of the bill—

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman know of any section of the bill which takes care of that?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If the gentleman will look at lines 16 and 17, page 2, of the bill, he will see the Indian is amply protected.

By affidavit of the claimant, or one having knowledge of the facts, and upon the request of the Secretary of the Interior.

We put that in there so the Secretary of the Interior must pass upon it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That may be true, but if the assignment has been made by the Indian, the assignee, having knowledge of the fact, can make affidavit.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. But that is passed on by the Secretary of the Interior. He has the rights of a judge and passes upon these matters on behalf of the Indian. He is the judge and passes upon it, and after he passes upon it and finds the transfer is correct he orders the Treasurer to pay the money.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That may be the gentleman's opinion, but that is not what this bill provides.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is what it says.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No, it does not.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, this bill was submitted to the Secretary of the Interior and, as the report shows, it is approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and the committee amended this bill to meet the identical question suggested by the gentleman from New York. The amendment was made by the committee, and as far as I am concerned, these Indians living in my district, I would be perfectly willing to make any amendment to it, if it were possible to have it done, giving ample protection to see that no Indian was wronged by any assignment he has made heretofore. I know I state accurately when I state that the assignment would not be accepted without the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and the matter is entirely under the control of the Interior Department. I do not think the gentleman from New York is any more interested in protecting these Indians than I am.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Outside of the Indians of the gentleman's district, of course this will affect the Chippewa Indians in Minnesota, where the value of the timber on their land is priceless, estimated to be worth from $6,000,000 to $20,000,000, depending entirely upon the interest the estimator had either in getting their timber for himself or money for the Indians.

Mr. JENKINS. It was the opinion of the committee, I will say to my friend from New York, that this amendment would make it entirely safe for the Indians, and yet I do not think it ever suggested itself to any gentleman—

Mr. SULZER. Does the gentleman know how many of these Indians have assigned their claims?

Mr. JENKINS. I have not any knowledge.

Mr. SULZER. Why is it, then, provided for in the bill? Section 2 of the bill provides:

And also of the assignment of his claim to any of said moneys in case of an assignment thereof.

Mr. JENKINS. Well, I can not answer the question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Can the gentleman tell how any question of damage to the Indian lands is to be determined by which the people of the United States can make payment?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Where is that in the bill?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It says for any damages to the land of any allottee.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is in reference to the timber that has been taken off the land and the money covered into the United States Treasury. The Indians can not get it out without this bill, and what objection has the gentleman to the Secretary taking the money out of the Treasury of the United States and paying it to the Indians?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It not only pays them for the timber, but it pays them for damages resulting from taking the timber. The bill is clear on that in line 5, page 1.

Mr. HACKNEY. If the money has been paid into the Treasury for the Indian allottee, ought he not to have that money, whatever the source from which it came? If it came to him as damages and was paid in for his use, why should he not have the money?

Mr. SULZER. Can the gentleman tell us how much money belonging to the Indians has been covered into the United States Treasury?

Mr. HACKNEY. Mr. Speaker, in answer to that question I will say that I have not gone into the amount. If there is 1 Indian or 100 Indians or 1,000 Indians or 100,000, it would make no difference. This bill is to pay to the man who is entitled to the money the damages conceded by some one to have accrued on account of a trespass on these lands, or the taking of timber, or things of that kind. That money has been paid into the Treasury and is held there with no authority to pay it to the party who is entitled to receive it.

Mr. SULZER. That money is to be paid to the Indian or his assignee or his heirs?

Mr. HACKNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. SULZER. How many of these Indians have assigned their claims?

Mr. HACKNEY. I have not gone into that. It makes no difference whether it is one or a dozen, a hundred or a thousand. I do not know how many they are, and whether there are any of them or not; the assignee is entitled to the property. The money is in the Treasury and doing nobody any good.

Mr. SULZER. How much money?

Mr. HACKNEY. I have not looked it up to see, but it makes no difference whether it is a large or a small amount. Whatever it may be, they ought to have it, and not the Treasury. This bill safeguards every right.

Mr. JENKINS. If the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] desires the information, I will say that the report of the committee and the letter of the Secretary shows that these allottees are clearly entitled to this money.

Mr. SULZER. I am informed that these allottees will get very little of this money.

Mr. JENKINS. I do not know where the gentleman gets his information. If he will tell us we will know whether we can rely upon it.

Mr. SULZER. I wanted the information from the gentleman who has charge of the bill, but it is apparent I can not get it.

Mr. JENKINS. The gentleman says he is already informed. Where does the gentleman from New York get his information?

Mr. SULZER. I get my information from various sources. Now, I want the gentleman to give me some information if he can. If he can not, of course I have got to rely upon the information I already possess.

Mr. JENKINS. I very seriously question whether the gentleman from New York has got any information on the subject.

Mr. SULZER. I understand that nearly all of this money has been assigned to speculators and brokers here in Washington, who have been trying all winter to get this bill reported.

Mr. JENKINS. I will say to the gentleman from New York that no gentleman was ever more mistaken than the gentleman in charging—and I trust he will not go away, as I want him to hear what I say. Now, there has never been a gentleman in Washington who approached the committee or any member of the committee or myself with reference to this matter. The Indians who are interested themselves agreed upon as reputable a man as ever lived—and the only thing that could ever be said against him is that he is one of the leading Democrats of our State—to represent them, and draft this bill to make a refund to them of this money.

I want the gentleman to state upon what authority he undertakes to tell this House that lawyers of Washington have been up here lobbying in behalf of this bill, because I say again that no gentleman in Washington has ever made any move or rendered any assistance to get this bill passed.

Mr. SULZER. I would like to know whether this bill was unanimously reported.

Mr. JENKINS. This bill was unanimously reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs, and they had had it a long time; and no stronger approval can be given in behalf of this bill than the letter of the Secretary of the Interior, who very carefully considered it.

Mr. SULZER. I understand that letter was written by the Assistant Secretary.

Mr. JENKINS. It makes no difference to me; I will not be benefited; no friend of mine will be benefited; I do not believe any living man will be benefited except the Indians, and I think it is hardly fair under the circumstances to undertake to prejudice the passage of a bill of as much importance as this for these Indians by saying that the lawyers of Washington have been up here lobbying and proposing to divide this money and get the greater portion of it.

Mr. SULZER. I am trying to get information, but I can not get any.

Mr. JENKINS. I am not to blame for that. It is just as the gentleman from Missouri has so properly and aptly said, that it makes no difference how many Indians or how much money there is involved. This is a case where the Indians were the owners of the timber and land, and when the timber was sold the proceeds were turned over to the Government, and that money is in the hands of the Government, held in trust for the Indians, and it is nothing but right that it should be turned over to them.

Mr. CARTER. What particular tribe of Indians does this affect—all Indians?

Mr. JENKINS. I will look at the bill and will see for the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. SULZER. It affects all the Indians.

Mr. CARTER. Possibly the gentleman from New York is laboring under a misapprehension. The bill does not in any manner affect the tribe of Tammany in his district.

Mr. SULZER. They have no money in the Treasury.

Mr. JENKINS. I will say to my friend from Oklahoma, in order to get along with my friend, I will consent to eliminate the Tammany Indians.

Mr. SULZER. This bill will not affect the Tammany Indians; they have no timber land; all they have are their principles. [Laughter.]

Mr. JENKINS. I will ask the gentleman from Texas to use a portion of his time.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This bill is for the purpose of giving relief to the Indians of the La Ponte Reservation in Wisconsin, who have large tracts of lands covered with pine timber. The United States Government, through the Indian agents in that country, permitted the sawmill men to purchase from these Indians all the timber that was dead and down and the mature timber on their lands and saw it up into lumber. Having sold the timber, the amount of money was put into the United States Treasury for the benefit of the Indians. There is no law now by which this money can be appropriated to the Indians entitled to it. Had the land never been segregated and allotted to the individual Indians, the Secretary of the Interior could have transferred the funds to the Indian tribes as tribal funds in a lump sum; but virtually all these lands were allotted to and in the hands of individual Indians. Now, this bill provides that there shall be a roll made by the Interior Department, showing which of these Indians were entitled to the money due for lumber that grew on their land, and the amount that is coming to each of them. It also authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to have the money paid separately to each Indian by the Treasurer of the United States. That is all there is in this bill, and the money is already in the Treasury, is due to the Indians, and should be paid to them; therefore the bill should pass.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Will the gentleman from Texas please state how much money will have to be paid out to these Indians under the provisions of this bill?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is impossible for me to state, not having the figures before me. There are several hundred Indians on that reservation. There was no estimate made of the amount of money coming to them to the committee, but, as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HACKNEY] has stated, that makes no difference. The principle is the same. The money belongs to these Indians. They are the wards of the Government, and it is the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to pay the money over to them, belonging to them for lumber cut off their lands and now in the United States Treasury. There has been no attorney or agent or anyone else before the Committee on Indian Affairs with reference to this matter, so far as I know, and, as the gentleman from Wisconsin, Judge JENKINS, has so well said, nothing of that kind was mentioned or even thought of when we reported the bill. It was first thought of by the Tammany chieftain [Mr. SULZER], and I do not think in this matter the House should follow his counsel and advice. The Indians affected by this are the La Fonda Indians, on the reservation in the district of my friend, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS], who is personally and perfectly familiar with the Indians and the necessity for paying them for their timber.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, as no gentleman seems to desire to discuss the bill further, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. As many as favor the motion will say "aye;" as many as are opposed will say "no." [The question being taken.] The "ayes" seem to have it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The yeas and nays!

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, pending that I move that the House take a recess until 11:30 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Ought not the yeas and nays to be ordered first?

The SPEAKER. It is in order to take a recess pending the demand for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. All right.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is not this a motion to suspend all the rules, including the rule making the motion for a recess, a highly privileged motion?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It seems to me that the proper thing is to order the yeas and nays, and then let the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania intervene.

The SPEAKER. Well, it seems to suit the brethren. As many as are in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DALZELL. Now, Mr. Speaker, I renew my motion.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry for information. What is the motion?

Mr. DALZELL. To take a recess.

The SPEAKER. To take a recess until to-morrow morning at 11:30 o'clock.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 126, nays 103, answered "present" 10, not voting 148, as follows:

FORT CROOK MILITARY POST.

Mr. WARREN. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 7113) making appropriation for repairs and reconstruction of buildings destroyed by cyclone at Fort Crook military post, to report it favorably with amendments, and I submit a report (No. 659) thereon. I call the attention of the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKETT] to the bill.

Mr. BURKETT. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may have present consideration.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] has charge of the sundry civil appropriation bill and is very desirous of calling it up this morning, as he gave notice yesterday he would do; and, therefore, I must object to any bill being considered in the morning hour.

Mr. WARREN. I understand fully the reasons why the Senator objects. I am sorry to know that he applies his objection to this measure, but I hope there will be an opportunity some time during the consideration of the appropriation bill or immediately following it, for the consideration of the bill which the Senator from Nebraska desires to have passed, as it is to cover a great loss that has occurred there by cyclone, where the property is in danger and where the officers are without shelter.

Mr. HALE. Is it a short bill?

Mr. WARREN. It is a short bill. I think it will not be discussed.

Mr. BURKETT. It is a short bill, comprising only nine lines.

Mr. HALE. After this I must object, because the Senator from Iowa is very desirous of going on with the appropriation bill, and there are many reasons why the bill should be proceeded with.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill reported by the Senator from Wyoming from the Committee on Military Affairs will be read.

The Secretary read the bill, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendments were, in line 3, to strike out the words "and fifty" before "thousand," so as to read, "one hundred thousand;" in line 4, to strike out the word "required" and insert the word "necessary;" in line 9, after the word "May," to insert the words "nineteen hundred and eight;" and at the end of the bill, after the word "post," to insert the words "in Nebraska," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be immediately available for the repair and reconstruction of the buildings and for the replacement of furniture and equipment destroyed in whole or in part by cyclone on the 12th day of May, 1908, at Fort Crook military post in Nebraska.

Mr. HALE. If it gives rise to no debate, I shall not object.

Mr. RAYNER. It will give rise to no debate.

The Secretary read the bill, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendment was, in line 6, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one hundred and sixty-four" and insert "and ninety-two," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to refund to the Consolidated Gas, Electric Light and Power Company, of Baltimore, Md., $7,092.78, and to the Hazard Wharf Company, of Baltimore, Md., $6,873.61, these amounts having been inequitably collected by the collector of customs at Baltimore, Md., as duty on anthracite coal after the 6th day of October, 1902.

The sum of $14,038.39 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to carry out this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 17, after line 7, I move to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That hereafter no pension shall be allowed or paid to any commissioned officer, warrant officer, or enlisted man in the Revenue-Cutter Service either on the active or retired list.

I ask that the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury which I send to the desk may be inserted in the Record.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, May 13, 1908.

Hon. WILLIAM B. ALLISON,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
United States Senate.

SIR: I request that you will endeavor to have inserted in the sundry civil bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, under the Revenue-Cutter Service, the following proviso:

"Provided, That hereafter no pension shall be allowed or paid to any commissioned officer, warrant officer, or enlisted man in the Revenue-Cutter Service, either on the active or retired list."

I desire to call your attention to a provision in the act approved March 3, 1891, making appropriations for the payment of pensions, which forbids the payment of pensions to officers or men in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, in the following words:

"And provided further, That hereafter no pension shall be allowed or paid to any officer, noncommissioned officer, or private in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States, either on the active or retired list."

By the act approved April 12, 1902, a retired list was created for commissioned officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service, and by the act approved April 16, 1908, warrant officers and enlisted men of the Service shall, upon suitable application, be placed on waiting orders and receive 75 per cent of the pay and increase of their grade or rating. Furthermore, under the act approved April 16, 1908, officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service with a creditable record who served during the civil war have the rank and will receive three-fourths of the pay of the next higher grade. Under the provisions of existing law it appears manifestly proper that pensions should not be allowed to officers or men of the Revenue-Cutter Service.

Respectfully,

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I do not wish to unduly interrupt the reading of the bill, but I should like to make an inquiry, which I presume will be considered as pertinent. We recently had under consideration and acted upon the agricultural appropriation bill, in which there were very large appropriations for the protection of the public forests. I notice that in this bill there is also an additional appropriation upon the same line. The Senator who was in charge of the agricultural appropriation bill is present, and possibly he might comply with the request which I am about to make, that there be some explanation of the fact that an additional appropriation is required for what seems to me to be practically the same line of work.

Mr. WARREN. This appropriation is under the Secretary of the Interior. It is another Department. All of the public lands, as to survey, sale, purchase, and so forth, are really under the Interior Department, except those which are placed under the jurisdiction of the Agricultural Department as forest reserves. It sometimes occurs that they eliminate certain lands from the forest reserves and restore them to the jurisdiction of the Interior Department. Then the Interior Department advertises the lands and restores them to the open public domain. This small appropriation is for the purpose last stated.

Mr. BACON. It is sufficient for the Senator to say that the items do not relate to the same lands.

Mr. WARREN. Not at all.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Public lands service," on page 85, after line 17, to insert:

Protection of national monuments: For the custody, administration, and protection of national monuments under the control of the Secretary of the Interior, $5,000.

The next amendment was, on page 87, after line 5, to insert:

Arid lands in Idaho and Wyoming: That an additional 1,000,000 acres of arid lands within each of the States of Idaho and Wyoming be made available and subject to the terms of section 4 of an act of Congress entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes," approved August 18, 1894, and by amendments thereto, and that the States of Idaho and Wyoming be allowed under the provisions of said acts said additional area or so much thereof as may be necessary for the purposes and under the provisions of said acts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Surveying the public lands," on page 88, after line 23, to insert the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That in the States of California, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, Oregon, Utah, Washington, and Wyoming, the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico, and the district of Alaska there may be allowed, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, for the survey and resurvey of lands heavily timbered, mountainous, or covered with dense undergrowth, rates not exceeding $25 per linear mile for standard and meander lines, $23 for township, and $20 for section lines; the provisions of section 2411, Revised Statutes of the United States, authorizing allowance for surveys in California and Oregon, are hereby extended to all of the above-named States and Territories and district.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 90, after line 23, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to cause the public-land surveys to be extended over the area embraced within the exterior limits of the Fort Keogh Military Reservation, in the State of Montana, $4,200, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The next amendment was, on page 91, after line 3, to insert:

For the ascertainment, survey, marking, and permanent establishment of that portion of the boundary line between the State of Idaho and the State of Washington from a point in the center of the Snake River opposite the mouth of the Clearwater River, thence due north to the international boundary line between the United States and the British possessions, an estimated distance of 185 miles, including the expense of an examination of the survey in the field, the rate of compensation per mile to the surveyor to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, the same to include the cost of the preparation of the plats and field notes of the survey in triplicate, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "United States Geological Survey," on page 93, line 12, to increase the appropriation for geological surveys in the various portions of the United States from $200,000 to $300,000.

Mr. BACON. I should like to make an inquiry, with the permission of the Senator in charge of the bill. There have been some surveys suspended in the State of Georgia during the past year because of the reason alleged by the Geological Survey that the necessary money was lacking. I simply desire to know of the Senator whether this amendment, which inserts "three" instead of "two," making the appropriation $300,000 instead of $200,000, will be sufficient to cover such surveys as the Director has been heretofore unable to make by reason of the insufficiency of the appropriation?

Mr. ALLISON. I infer that this additional sum will cover the cost of the surveys required. We have given the amount estimated by the Department.

Mr. BACON. The Senator will see the purpose of the inquiry. As I have been met heretofore with the reply that there was not money enough, I wanted to know, when I next made application for the continuation of that survey, that there has been proper provision made in that regard.

Mr. ALLISON. I think this will cover it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 94, line 24, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. This part of the bill seems to relate to the subject-matter, and I desire to ask a question of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], as he is doubtless familiar with it. I notice in this morning's Post what purports to be an extract from a speech by the President of the United States yesterday, in which there occurs this paragraph:

I have begged Congress for an appropriation to perpetuate the Inland Waterways Commission, but my appeals have been unheeded. If Congress does not perpetuate the Commission, I will find a way to do so without the aid of Congress.

I want to ask the Senator from Maine, who is familiar not only with this appropriation bill, but is active in the preparation of all of them, whether or not in this bill, or in any other, there is an appropriation such as that which is spoken of by the President of the United States in the extract from his speech which I have just read?

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will turn to the middle of page 143 he will find an appropriation—

Mr. BACON. Is that the appropriation which is alluded to in this speech?

Mr. HALE. I presume it is. It is the only one we have.

Mr. BACON. Is that the amount which is asked for for that purpose?

Mr. HALE. It has been put in just as estimated for.

Mr. BACON. I think we may then be congratulated that the work may be proceeded with in accordance with law, and not in violation of law.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, I was not present yesterday at the conference at the White House, but a Senator who was present informed me that when that statement was made, which has just been read by the Senator from Georgia, the forty-two governors who were present, and the representatives from all the States, including Georgia, wildly applauded.

Mr. BACON. I do not know about the representatives from Georgia, and I would not undertake to criticize the representatives from any other State. But if any representative from Georgia applauded that sentiment that the President could use money not appropriated by Congress, I would not have any hesitation in condemning him as having done a very improper thing. Having said that much, I think I ought to state the reason.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. HALE. I have not read the newspapers giving the accounts that the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from New York refer to, and so I may say that I do not know enough about it to be certain that what was referred to is the item on page 143. I only know that this is the only estimate which has come to the committee with reference to any waterways commission, and that the committee has inserted it just as estimated for. But what was in the mind of the President of course I do not know. I only know that the committee has put in whatever has been submitted to it by estimate from the Department for any waterways commission. Whether this is the commission, or whether it is some other one, I do not know.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I notice in reading the provision on page 143 that it is headed "International Waterways Commission," and the Waterways Commission referred to by the President seems to have been the Inland Waterways Commission. I desire to say that in the remarks I have just made I do not desire to be understood as condemning the enterprise of improving our inland waterways, but if I am correctly informed as to the nature of our Government and the limitations of law, there can be no application of public funds to any enterprise of this kind unless authorized by Congress. I felt a little interest to know whether Congress was authorizing it, in view of the fact that the President of the United States said that if Congress did not authorize it he would find some other way to provide the money; and I would be very glad to be informed whether there is any provision of law—

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The President did not say "provide the money."

Mr. BACON. Possibly I misunderstood him.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. This seems to be an appropriation for an International Waterways Commission.

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator perhaps is aware of the fact that the President organized a National Waterways Commission—

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. An Inland Waterways Commission; and before the Committee on Commerce a bill is pending providing an appropriation for that Commission. It has not yet been reported out of the committee, I will say to the Senator, and I am sure that it was that Commission which the Chief Executive had reference to yesterday and not the International Waterways Commission.

Mr. BACON. Yes, Mr. President.

Mr. HALE. I think undoubtedly the Senator from New Hampshire is correct.

Mr. BACON. That makes the statement of the President a very important one, and probably justifies me in making the inquiry of the Appropriations Committee. It may be all right that Congress should make the appropriation. I am not sufficiently familiar with the subject to say whether it is or not. But the thing which struck me was this sentence. After the President had stated that he had begged Congress for an appropriation for this purpose, he goes on to say:

If Congress does not perpetuate the Commission, I will find a way to do so without the aid of Congress.

He does not say, as I probably incorrectly stated that he said, that he would find or provide the money; but there can be no other conclusion to my mind than that is what is meant by the statement, because he is speaking of the contingency of Congress not making the necessary appropriation to carry on the work. He then says that if Congress does not make the appropriation he will find the means. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] shakes his head. Of course I do not want to do any injustice to the President.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the President did not say that he would find some other way of providing the money. The Senator then read what the President did say, which was that he would perpetuate the Commission. I ask as a matter of information whether or not there has heretofore been any appropriation made for the Inland Waterways Commission which the President appointed?

Mr. GALLINGER. No.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am informed by two or three Senators here, the Senator from New Hampshire and others who know, that there has been no appropriation made for it. So the Commission exists now without any appropriation, and the President could continue it without any appropriation if the Commission would serve. Therefore I think that not only, as the Senator admits, did the President not say that he would find some means of getting the money other than through an appropriation, but that the Senator's inference is not justified by the President's words.

Mr. BACON. I am pleased that the Senator from Indiana makes that suggestion, because I am unwilling to have the contrary conclusion recognized as a fact. I am not willing that it shall be true that the language does mean what I thought it meant.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President—

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator will let me complete the statement. I prefer that it should be established as a fact that the President did not mean that if Congress failed to appropriate the money he would take some funds somewhere and carry on the Commission. I hope the President did not mean that, and I am glad the Senator from Indiana, standing as near the President as he does, gives us the assurance that in his opinion that is not the meaning of the statement.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Of course I do not assume to speak for the President. I am merely pointing out to the Senator the fact that the President could continue the Commission, just as he created the Commission, without any appropriation, and therefore there was no inference to be drawn from what the Senator quoted from the President to the effect which the Senator first put upon it, to wit, that the President meant he was going to get money in some other way than from an appropriation. That is all.

Mr. BACON. The man who made the headlines evidently came to the same conclusion I did.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Of course, if the Senator is speaking from headlines—

Mr. BACON. No.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. And not from what the President really said—

Mr. BACON. I am merely justifying myself by showing that the same construction was made by others. I am glad to have the suggestion that the President does not mean it, because it would be a gross violation of law if the President meant what I thought he did and should act in accordance therewith. I am more than glad to have the suggestion that that is not what he meant.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, there seems to be some confusion about this matter. I think the provision on page 143 is not what the President referred to. That is the International Waterways Commission, provided for by the act of June 30, 1902, for which $20,000 is appropriated. In the message the President sent to us on the 26th day of February he refers to what I think he alluded to yesterday, if he referred to anything at all. All I know is derived from what the Senator from Georgia has read from the paper. This is a report, and the President says:

I transmit herewith a preliminary report from the Inland Waterways Commission.

I do not know whether he refers to this as the Inland Waterways Commission.

Mr. BACON. Those are the words—"Inland Waterways Commission."

Mr. TELLER. Undoubtedly that is not the proposition involved here. This is like a good many other messages we have had here. It comes here and is read and disposed of and not much attention is paid to it. I do not myself remember whether the President asked for an appropriation or not. I am not sufficiently familiar with the matter to say. For myself, I do not understand why there is any necessity for two of these commissions, an inland and an international. All our waterways which are worth anything are interstate.

As a member of the committee, my attention has never been called to any suggestion by any Department to us to prepare an appropriation. We take the appropriations that come from the House in the bill, and our attention is generally called by some official of the Government to some oversight on the part of the House. We then provide for it. I am quite certain we have not in this bill anything which covers the Inland Waterways Commission. But if the President knows how to get along without an appropriation, it may be economy to let him do so.

Mr. BACON. The Senator from Colorado does not mean by that that there is any possibility that the President could lawfully use money not specifically appropriated for that purpose?

Mr. TELLER. I have not the slightest idea what the President means, if that is a correct statement of what he said. I do not know whether it is or not. I have not even read it in the newspapers. I do not know what he said or what he meant. I am pretty certain this matter never came before the committee in a proper way to justify us in recommending an appropriation.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 124, line 5, to increase the appropriation for continuing the construction of Lock and Dam No. 11 from $86,000 to $200,000.

The reading of the bill was continued to page 187, line 8.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 8, before the word "thousand," I move to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "twenty-four," so as to read:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Public printing and binding," on page 188, line 24, before the word "thousand," to strike out "thirty-three" and insert "thirty-four;" and on page 189, line 9, before the word "thousand," to strike out "seventy-one" and insert "seventy-two," so as to make the clause read:

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I trust the Senate will disagree to that amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes; the text is to be restored.

Mr. HALE. Let the whole amendment be disagreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading was continued. The next amendment was, on page 194, line 3, after the word "subsistence," to insert "including the purchase of two steamships of American registry at a cost not to exceed $1,600,000, for the use of the Isthmian Canal Commission, to be employed in the transportation of supplies, equipment, and material for use in the construction of the canal and employees therefor;" and in line 9, before the word "hundred," to strike out "eleven million two" and insert "twelve million eight," so as to make the clause read:

It is the judgment of Congress that any person who holds employment under the United States or who is employed by and receives a regular salary from any scientific bureau or institution that is required to report to Congress should refrain from participation in the deliberations of said National Academy of Sciences on this subject and from voting on or joining in any recommendation hereunder.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I wish to make a point of order against the next amendment. I presume that it will be made in time, if made after it is read.

The next amendment was, on page 199, after line 19, to add as an additional section the following:

SEC. 7. That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to enter into a contract for furnishing to the United States all electric current used for any purpose whatsoever, except for the lighting of streets, avenues, alleys, or highways, in or in connection with any and all buildings within or in the vicinity of the District of Columbia owned or occupied by the United States or owned or occupied by the District of Columbia, excepting only such buildings as may be occupied by the Congress of the United States; payment for such current to be at the annual rate of 6 cents per kilowatt hour for the first million kilowatt hours and at 2½ cents per kilowatt hour for each or any part of each succeeding kilowatt hour; all current to be metered in the respective buildings and the proportionate cost of the total consumption to be charged against each Department of the United States Government and the government of the District of Columbia, respectively, and paid monthly or quarterly, as it may be agreed, in gross, by the Secretary of the Treasury, to the contractor in accordance with the provisions of the contract herein authorized and out of the appropriations made by Congress from year to year therefor; of the amounts paid on account of the government of the District of Columbia one-half shall be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia. During the fiscal year 1909, payments for electric current under any contract made hereunder shall be made out of appropriations made for the purchase of electric current or for purchase, installation, operation, maintenance, or repair of electrical apparatus within the territory covered by said contract, and for the purpose of such payment said appropriations are hereby expressly made available. For the fiscal year 1910, and annually thereafter, the Secretary of the Treasury shall submit estimates for specific appropriations to meet the obligations of any contract entered into hereunder. In consideration of the rates for current herein specified the contract authorized hereunder shall be for the period of ten years, conditioned, however, that the same may be terminated by the Secretary of the Treasury at any time within the period of the contract, provided that written notice of such purpose to terminate shall have been given to the contractor one year prior to the date of the proposed termination.

From and after the execution of such contract all current actually furnished by the contractor for such buildings as may be occupied by Congress shall be at the same rates fixed by said contract, and the United States shall be entitled at any time during the period of said contract to take and receive such current as the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds may determine for the buildings occupied by Congress at the rates and under the terms of said contract.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, I make the point of order that that is new legislation of a general character. In addition, there is the point that it has not been estimated for.

The amendment proposes to introduce a radical change in the method of supplying electricity for the use of the different Departments of the Government. It not only proposes to do that, but, according to the estimate I have seen made, it proposes to do it at a vast increase of expense to the Government. It would render useless a number of electric plants attached to different Departments of the Government. It seems to me if this sort of legislation is to be entered upon, it ought to be done in some independent measure.

I submit the matter to the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment proposes general legislation and is therefore obnoxious to paragraph 3, Rule XVI. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The next amendment was, on page 201, after line 18, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 8. That all sums appropriated by this act for salaries of officers and employees of the Government shall be in full for such salaries for the fiscal year 1909, and all laws or parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 202, to insert as a new section the following:

ALASKA-YUKON-PACIFIC EXPOSITION.

That all articles that shall be imported from foreign countries for the sole purpose of exhibition at the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition, to be held at Seattle, State of Washington, in the year 1909, upon which there shall be a tariff or customs duty shall be admitted free of the payment of duty, customs fees, or charges, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe; but it shall be lawful at any time during the exposition to sell for delivery at the close thereof any goods or property imported for and actually on exhibition in the exposition buildings or on the grounds, subject to such regulations for the security of the revenue and for the collection of import duties as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe: Provided, That all such articles when sold or withdrawn for consumption or use in the United States shall be subject to the duty, if any, imposed upon such articles by the revenue laws in force at the date of withdrawal; and on articles which shall have suffered diminution or deterioration from incidental handling and necessary exposure the duty, if paid, shall be assessed according to the appraised value at the time of withdrawal for consumption or use, and the penalties prescribed by law shall be enforced against any person guilty of any illegal sale, use, or withdrawal.

That there shall be exhibited at said exposition by the Government of the United States, from the Smithsonian Institution, the National Museum, and the Library of Congress such articles and material of a historical nature as will serve to impart a knowledge of our national history, and especially of the history of Alaska, Hawaii, and the Philippine Islands, and that part of the United States west of the Rocky Mountains. There shall be exhibited from the Executive Departments of the United States such exhibits as will illustrate the function and administrative faculty of the Government and demonstrate the nature of our institutions and their adaption to the wants of the people, special attention being given to such articles, materials, and exhibits as will most practically prove of educational value in connection with the development of commerce in the countries bordering upon the Pacific Ocean, the preservation of forests, the reclamation and irrigation of arid and semiarid lands, the improving and enlarging of transportation facilities and the safeguards of navigation, and the economic value of the investigations and operations of the Government with reference to public health, patents, geology, weather, animal industry, plant industry, soils, entomology, experiment stations, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and public roads. And the International Bureau of American Republics is hereby invited to make an exhibit of the resources of the American Republics, particularly with a view to establishing closer trade relations between the United States and said Republics, and space in any of the United States Government buildings shall be provided for this purpose to secure a complete and harmonious arrangement of such Government exhibit. And said Government board is hereby authorized to rent and use such building or buildings in the District of Columbia as may be necessary in the preparation of said exhibit. The President of the United States may also designate additional articles for exhibition. Said Government board shall be composed of one person to be named by the head of each of the Executive Departments, one by the head of the Smithsonian Institution and National Museum, one by the Librarian of Congress, and one by the Director of the International Bureau of American Republics. Officers of the Army and Navy shall receive said allowance in lieu of the subsistence and mileage now allowed by law; and the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy may, in their discretion, detail retired Army or Navy officers for such duty. Any provision of law which may prohibit the detail of persons in the employ of the United States to other service than that which they customarily perform shall not apply to persons detailed for duty in connection with said Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition. Employees of the board not otherwise employed by the Government shall be entitled to such compensation as the board may determine, and such employees may be selected and appointed by said board. The disbursing officer shall give bond in such sum as the Secretary of the Treasury may determine for the faithful performance of his duties, said bond to be approved by said Secretary. The Secretary of the Treasury shall advance to said officer from time to time, under such regulations as he may prescribe, a sum of money from the appropriation for the Government exhibit herein authorized, not exceeding at any one time three-fourths of the penalty of his bond, to enable him to pay the expenses of said exhibit as authorized by the United States Government board herein created. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to place on exhibition, in connection with the exhibit of his Department, upon such grounds as shall be allotted for this purpose, one of the life-saving stations authorized to be constructed on the coast of the United States by existing law, and to cause the same to be fully equipped with all apparatus, furniture, and appliances now in use in life-saving stations in the United States. The Secretary of Commerce and Labor is hereby authorized and directed to place on exhibition, in connection with the exhibit of his Department, in such building of aquarium as shall be allotted for this purpose, a complete exhibit of the fish and fisheries of the United States, paying special attention to the fish and fisheries of the Pacific Ocean, with a view to demonstrating in the fullest manner possible the economic value of such fish and fisheries: Provided, That the cost of said exhibit herein authorized, including the selection, purchase, preparation, transportation, arrangement, safe-keeping, exhibition, and return of the articles and materials so exhibited, and for rent of building or buildings in the District of Columbia, shall not exceed the sum of $250,000, which sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to aid the people of the district of Alaska and of the Territory of Hawaii in providing and maintaining appropriate and creditable exhibits of the products and resources of Alaska and Hawaii at the said Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition, and for that purpose he is authorized to appoint one or more persons to supervise the selection, purchase, preparation, transportation, arrangement, installation, safe-keeping, exhibition, and return of such articles as may be exhibited from said Territories at said exposition: Provided, That the total expenditure for said exhibit for said district of Alaska on the part of the Government, including such selection, purchase, preparation, transportation, arrangement, installation, safe-keeping, exhibition, and return of the articles so exhibited, shall not exceed the sum of $100,000, which sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: And provided further, That the total expenditure for said exhibit for the Territory of Hawaii on the part of the Government, including such selection, purchase, preparation, transportation, arrangement, installation, safe-keeping, exhibition, and return of the articles exhibited, shall not exceed the sum of $25,000, which sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to aid the people of the Philippine Islands in providing and maintaining an appropriate and creditable exhibit of the products and resources of the Philippine Islands at the said Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition, and for that purpose he is authorized to appoint one or more persons to supervise the selection, purchase, preparation, transportation, arrangement, installation, safe-keeping, exhibition, and return of such articles as may be exhibited from said Philippine Islands at said exposition: Provided, That the total expense of said exhibit on the part of the Government, including such selection, purchase, preparation, transportation, arrangement, installation, safe-keeping, exhibition, and return of the articles so exhibited, shall not exceed the sum of $25,000, which sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

That the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause suitable buildings to be erected on the site of said Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition for said Government exhibit, including an irrigation and biograph building; also a fisheries building complete, with mechanical apparatus; also buildings for the exhibits of the district of Alaska, the Territory of Hawaii, and the Philippine Islands; also buildings for such other purposes in connection with the exhibits herein authorized as in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury may be necessary. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and required to dispose of said buildings, or the materials composing the same, at the close of the exposition, giving preference to the State of Washington or to the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition corporation or to the city of Seattle to purchase the same at an appraised value to be ascertained in such manner as the Secretary of the Treasury may determine.

That the allotment of space for exhibitors in the building or buildings erected under authority of this act for the use of the district of Alaska, the Territory of Hawaii, and the Philippine Islands shall be done and performed without charge to exhibitors by the Government board created by this act.

That dies for medals bearing appropriate devices, emblems, and inscriptions commemorative of said Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition and of the awards to be made to the exhibitors thereat shall be prepared by the Secretary of the Treasury at some mint of the United States for the board of trustees of Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition, a corporation, subject to the provisions of the fifty-second section of the coinage act of 1873, and upon the payment by said Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition of a sum not less than the cost thereof; and all provisions of law against the counterfeiting or imitating of coins of the United States shall apply to the medals issued under this act.

That the United States shall not be liable on account of said exposition for any expenses incident to or growing out of the same, except for the construction of the building or buildings hereinafter authorized and for the purpose of paying the expense incident to the selection, preparation, purchase, installation, transportation, care, custody, and safe return of the exhibits made by the Government and for the employment of proper persons as officers and assistants by the Government board created by this act, and for other expenses, and for the maintenance of said building or buildings and other contingent expenses to be approved by the chairman of the Government board, or, in the event of his absence or disability, by such officer as the board may designate, and the Secretary of the Treasury, upon itemized accounts and vouchers: Provided, That no liability against the Government shall be incurred and no expenditure of money appropriated by this act shall be made until the president of said exposition shall have furnished to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury proof that there has been obtained for the purpose of completing and opening said exposition bona fide subscriptions to the stock of Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition (a corporation), by responsible parties, contributions, donations, and appropriations, from all sources, aggregating a sum not less than $1,000,000.

That $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be immediately available, for the repair and reconstruction of the buildings and for the replacement of furniture and equipment destroyed in whole or in part by cyclone on the 12th day of May, 1908, at Fort Crook military post, in Nebraska.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. On page 6, after line 23, I move to insert:

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to cause the public building in the city of New Haven, Conn., now used for a post-office, and for other purposes, to be enlarged, extended, or remodeled at a cost to the United States of not to exceed $50,000, including all necessary changes in, additions thereto, alterations thereof, and repairs to the present building, and of the heating and plumbing systems therein, and drainage and approaches thereto, which may be incident to such extension and enlargement or remodeling of said building.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I ask that the letter from the Secretary of the Treasury and the letter from the Assistant Secretary recommending this amendment be inserted in the Record, without reading.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, April 29, 1908.

SIR: Referring to your request for a report in connection with S. 6616, authorizing the extension, enlargement, and alteration of the public building at New Haven, Conn., at a cost not to exceed $50,000, I have the honor to submit the following:

It appears from the report of the superintendent of construction, who visited the New Haven building under instructions of this Department, that two one-story additions without basements, of fireproof construction, and having a total ground area of 2,600 feet, will cost $40,000, including necessary alterations in old structure and change of old mechanical equipment.

The attention of your committee is called to the fact that an addition as above indicated will occupy the clear space of 18 feet on either side of the present building.

Respectfully,

GEO. B. CORTELYOU,
Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS,
United States Senate.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, April 3, 1908.

SIR: The attention of the Department has been called to the overcrowded condition of the post-office in the custom-house and post-office building at New Haven, Conn., and a superintendent of construction, thoroughly qualified, being at the building on matters of repairs, was instructed to investigate and report thereon.

His report confirms the information first received, and it would seem that relief is imperatively necessary. The superintendent states that this may be accomplished by the erection of an extension at the south, another on the front of the building, and another at the northeast, all of which would cost, with the necessary modifications to the building incident thereto, approximately $50,000. The general appropriation for repairs, etc., is not available for such work, and the matter is submitted to you for further action as you may deem necessary.

The postmaster is most urgent in pressing the needs of his office, and there is no doubt that all of the divisions, namely, registry division, money-order division, registry lobby, post-office work room, carriers' division, and stamp division should be enlarged, and this can be done only by the erection of extensions.

Respectfully,

L. A. COOLIDGE,
Assistant Secretary.

HON. M. G. BULKELEY,
United States Senate.

Mr. GUGGENHEIM. On page 27, after line 16, I move to insert:

Transportation of silver coin: For transportation of silver dollars by registered mail or otherwise, $75,000, and in expending this sum the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to transport from the Treasury or subtreasuries, free of charge, silver coin when requested to do so: Provided, That an equal amount in coin or currency shall have been deposited in the Treasury or such subtreasuries by the applicant or applicants; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall report to Congress the cost arising under this appropriation.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 98, after line 8, it is proposed to insert:

To enable the governor of Alaska, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to take action to suppress traffic in intoxicating liquors among the natives of Alaska, $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAILEY. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to be inserted at the end of line 7, on page 121.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DEPEW. To come in on page 18, line 9, after the amendment adopted on motion of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 18, line 9, after the amendment already inserted at that place, it is proposed to insert:

For the construction of one steam revenue cutter for anchorage patrol duty in the harbor of New York, $80,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KEAN. In behalf of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who is necessarily absent, I propose an amendment on page 107, after line 17, which I send to the desk. This amendment only provides for putting employees at arsenals on the same footing as other employees of the Government. I ask that the amendment be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey on behalf of the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 107, after line 17, it is proposed to insert:

That after June 30, 1908, all clerks and draftsmen and classified civil-service employees whose compensation is based on a per diem, monthly, or yearly rate employed at United States arsenals, shall be granted thirty working days' leave of absence in each year without forfeiture of pay during such leave: Provided, That it shall be lawful to allow pro rata leave only to those serving twelve consecutive months or more: And provided further, That in all cases the heads of divisions shall have discretion as to the time when the leave can best be allowed without detriment to the service, and that absence on account of sickness shall be deducted from the leave hereby granted.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I make the point of order on that amendment that it provides for a scheme of general legislation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment clearly proposes general legislation, and, therefore, is in violation of the rule. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. TELLER. On page 87, line 6, after the name "Idaho," I move to insert "Colorado;" and in line 8, after the name "Idaho," and in line 15, after the name "Idaho," I move to add the name "Colorado."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. An amendment of the committee has already been agreed to at that point. Without objection, the amendment will be regarded as still open to amendment. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 87, line 6, in the subhead, after the name "Idaho," it is proposed to insert the name "Colorado;" in line 8, after the name "Idaho," it is proposed to insert the name "Colorado;" and in line 15, after the name "Idaho," it is proposed to insert the name "Colorado."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. DANIEL. On page 128, after the word "village," in line 7, I move to insert the words "except when jurisdiction and authority over said roadway has been ceded to the United States." I will briefly explain this amendment, and when it is understood I think there can be no reasonable objection to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 128, line 7, after the word "village," it is proposed to insert:

Except when jurisdiction and authority over said roadway has been ceded to the United States.

Mr. HALE. There is no objection to the amendment.

Mr. DANIEL. Then an explanation is unnecessary, and I ask for the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. On page 104, after line 7, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 104, after line 7, it is proposed to insert:

That the unexpended balance of the appropriation, in pursuance of treaty stipulations, for subsistence and civilization of the Northern Cheyennes and Arapahoes for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1907, be, and the same is hereby, reappropriated and made available for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. I offer another amendment, which I send to the desk, to come in on page 167, after line 22.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 167, after line 22, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That hereafter the fees and compensation of the clerk of the circuit and district court for the district of Montana shall be computed and allowed on the same basis as like fees are allowed, computed, and paid in the district of Oregon.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. On page 136, line 12, I move to strike out "sixty-five" and insert "eighty-five." It is an amendment relating to the improvement of the Yellowstone National Park.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 136, line 12, before the word "thousand," it is proposed to strike out "sixty-five" and insert "eighty-five," so as to read:

Improvement of the Yellowstone National Park: For maintenance and repair of improvements, $85,000, to be expended by and under the direction of the Secretary of War, and to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. I also move, on page 136, after line 15, to insert what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 136, at the end of line 15, it is proposed to insert:

Of which sum $10,000 shall be used for construction of the road as surveyed in the park from the West Gallatin River, and $10,000 shall be available for repair of the Cooke City road within said park.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 169, after line 22, it is proposed to insert the following:

Jurors and witnesses in the United States courts, including commissioners' courts, in the States of Wyoming, Montana, Washington, Oregon, California, Nevada, Idaho, Colorado, and Utah, and in the Territories of New Mexico, Arizona, and Hawaii shall be entitled to receive for actual attendance at any court or courts, including commissioners' courts, and for the time necessarily occupied in going to and returning from the same, $3 a day, and 15 cents for each mile necessarily traveled over any stage line, or by private conveyance, and 5 cents for each mile by any railway or steamship in going to and returning from said courts: Provided, That no constructive or double mileage fees shall be allowed by reason of any person being summoned as both a witness and juror, or as a witness in two or more cases pending in the same court and triable at the same term thereof.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, I believe that we have adopted thirteen amendments to this bill on the floor of the Senate that have never been considered by the Committee on Appropriations. It does strike me that before adding half a million dollars to an appropriation bill at least the amendments ought to be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and be passed upon by that committee. If any of the amendments that have been adopted heretofore have been considered by the Committee on Appropriations, I am not aware of it; and to say the least it is a very dangerous practice to adopt on the floor of the Senate numerous amendments carrying large amounts without their ever being considered by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HALE. I agree with the Senator, and, as this amendment has given rise to discussion, I make the point of order that it is a general scheme of legislation.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. If the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] will withhold the point of order, I ask leave, for the benefit of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY], to say that this matter has been thoroughly considered by a committee of this body. The committee has recommended the adoption of this provision, and I have here recommendations of the judges, United States marshals, the Department of Justice, and others, showing the necessity for the amendment.

Mr. WARREN. I will ask my colleague if a similar provision has not already passed the Senate?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes; it has already passed the Senate.

Mr. CLAY. I did not rise for the purpose of discussing this amendment. I simply had reference to the numerous amendments which we have adopted and which have not been considered by the Committee on Appropriations. If this amendment has been referred to the Committee on Appropriations, I am not aware of it. It was not discussed, I am sure, by that committee. It may have been referred to some other committee. I will ask the Senator if that is so?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and favorably reported from the Committee on the Judiciary and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, but not by them reported as an amendment to the bill.

Mr. CLAY. I simply intended to have reference to the amendments we are adopting in general on the floor of the Senate without having been passed upon by the Committee on Appropriations, and not with a view of especially criticizing this particular amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I hope the Senator from Maine will withdraw his point of order.

Mr. HALE. I withdraw the point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order is withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DICK. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 91, after line 16, it is proposed to insert the following:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to defray the expenses of making petroleum tests and of a meeting of an international commission for the standardization of methods of testing petroleum and its products, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in on page 91, after line 16. I would say that it has been reported from a standing committee and that it has heretofore passed the Senate.

Mr. HALE. Let the amendment be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 91, line 19, after the amendment already agreed to at that place, it is proposed to insert the following:

That all public lands, reserved and unreserved, of the United States now unsurveyed within the States of Idaho, Oregon, Montana, and California shall be surveyed without regard to settlement thereon, pursuant to the general system of surveys of the public lands of the United States, and that said surveys shall be completed as rapidly as possible.

Mr. HEYBURN. I would say that this amendment does not increase the appropriation.

Mr. HALE. There is no objection to the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. I also offer an amendment to come in on page 74, after line 2.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 74, after line 2, it is proposed to insert:

That the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated for the establishment of a fish-cultural station in the State of Idaho, including purchase of site, construction of buildings and ponds, and equipment, at some suitable point to be selected by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. HALE. I must make the point of order against that amendment. There are twenty of such amendments that the committee has not put on. I make the point of order that it is general legislation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that the point of order is well taken, and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, in reference to the remark of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY] as to the amendments that have been put on the bill on the floor of the Senate, I desire it to appear in the Record that the amendment offered by me had been previously passed by the Senate as a bill.

Mr. GORE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert in the bill at the appropriate place the following:

That the sum of $20,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the improvement of the Platt National Park, situated at Sulphur, Okla., such money to be used and expended under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I do not know that that amendment has been reported by any standing committee of the Senate.

Mr. OWEN. That item was reported from the Committee on Public Lands and was also estimated for.

Mr. HALE. All right.

Mr. GORE. As suggested by my colleague [Mr. OWEN], the Committee on Public Lands reported this amendment in the form of a bill yesterday. It is also embodied in an estimate submitted to Congress by the Secretary of the Interior, and is recommended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is, therefore, in order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DANIEL. On page 136, line 1, in the item for repairs and operation of roads, etc., at Fort Monroe, after the word "for," I move to strike out "one-half" and insert in lieu thereof "three-fourths."

Mr. HALE. Let the amendment be stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 136, line 1, after the word "for," it is proposed to strike out "one-half" and insert "three-fourths," so that if amended it will read:

In all, $5,000; for three-fourths of said sum, to be supplied by the United States, $2,500.

Mr. HALE. There is no objection to the amendment, Mr. President.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DANIEL. On the same page, in line 2, I move to strike out "two thousand five hundred" and insert "three thousand seven hundred and fifty." That is consequential upon the amendment just adopted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 136, line 2, after the words "United States," it is proposed to strike out "two thousand five hundred" and insert "three thousand seven hundred and fifty."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DANIEL. There is another amendment I desire to offer in line 8, on page 136, to strike out "one-half" and insert "three-fourths."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On line 8, page 136, after the word "for," it is proposed to strike out "one-half" and insert "three-fourths."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DANIEL. There is also a consequential amendment in line 9, after the words "United States," to strike out "two thousand five hundred and twenty-five" and insert "three thousand seven hundred and eighty-seven."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 136, lines 9 and 10, it is proposed to strike out "two thousand five hundred and twenty-five" and insert in lieu thereof "three thousand seven hundred and eighty-seven."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

SUSPENSION OF COMMODITY CLAUSE, INTERSTATE COMMERCE LAW.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, I ask that the unfinished business, Senate joint resolution No. 74, be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 74) suspending the commodity clause of the present interstate-commerce law.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, I will say that I believe there can be no possible doubt about the fact that the general penalty clause found in the twentieth section of the Hepburn bill attaches to the commodity clause. The general penalty clause is as follows:

That the circuit and district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction, upon the application of the Attorney-General of the United States, at the request of the Commission, alleging a failure to comply with or a violation of any of the provisions of said act to regulate commerce, or of any act supplementary thereto or amendatory thereof, by any common carrier, to issue a writ or writs of mandamus commanding such common carrier to comply with the provisions of said acts, or any of them.

The suggestion of the Attorney-General, which has been adopted as an amendment to this joint resolution, Mr. President, provides in the amplest way for remedies for failure to comply with the commodity clause. I think there has been sufficient discussion, and therefore ask that a vote be taken upon the joint resolution as amended.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. ELKINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. KEAN. There is a communication which came in this morning, as I understand, from the Interstate Commerce Commission in regard to the action of the receiver of the Western Maryland Railroad. I should like to have that communication read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that the communication referred to has been sent to the Printing Office to be printed.

Mr. KEAN. But, Mr. President, I think we ought to have it read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has been sent to the Printing Office under the order of the Senate.

Mr. KEAN. I will inquire what is the pending amendment, Mr. President?

Mr. ELKINS. The amendments have all been acted upon, I think.

Mr. KEAN. Do I understand that the pending amendment is the substitute offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER]?

Mr. ELKINS. There is a substitute offered by the Senator from Ohio.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the substitute proposed by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. KEAN. I regret to say that the Senator from Ohio is not present. I do not like to see a vote taken on the joint resolution in his absence. I have been trying to get him on the telephone, but have not succeeded as yet; and I do not know what his desire is in relation to the matter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, it does seem to me that, in the absence of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], we ought not to proceed with the consideration of that amendment. I submit that the joint resolution ought to go over until the Senator from Ohio is given an opportunity to be present. I think his amendment is a very important one, and I am quite sure he would wish to be here to present it.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN] is going to communicate with the Senator from Ohio. I will state that I called up the Senator from Ohio this morning and said that I thought possibly the sundry civil bill would be concluded this afternoon, and that I did not want to have his amendment acted on in his absence. I said that quite a number of Senators were insisting on a vote, and that if the joint resolution was to be passed, it was important that it should be passed as soon as possible. He was not well enough to come to the telephone, but he sent some one to answer for him, who said the Senator from Ohio would like to vote on his substitute, which repeals substantially the commodity clause under consideration, but that he left it to my judgment whether or not to take a vote in his absence; that he was not at all well and had sent for a physician. That is the situation.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. ELKINS. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. I hope the Senator from Ohio may be well enough to go on with this matter to-morrow. It certainly is desirable that he should be present, if possible, when his amendment is voted on.

MERRIMAC RIVER AND OTHER BRIDGES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4899) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Merrimac River at Tyngs Island, Massachusetts.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I desire to inquire whether this bill has been printed?

The SPEAKER. Oh, yes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is not accessible. We have been unable to secure copies.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] is in error.

Mr. VREELAND. Mr. Speaker, the adoption of this resolution by this House will mean that a bill will be brought before the House of Representatives for passage to amend the banking laws of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, a very large majority of the Republicans of this House have already in conference signified their desire to pass a bill of this kind. We are expecting very large support for this bill on the Democratic side of the House. We have a right to expect that all Democrats will vote for this measure for this reason: For the past three or four weeks the gentlemen upon that side of the Chamber have been conducting an energetic filibuster, having for its alleged purpose the necessity of compelling the Republican side of this House to bring forward measures which have been recommended by the President of the United States.

The Democrats, I suppose, will take to themselves credit that as the result of the filibuster conducted with so much ability by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], followed by the entire Democracy, several bills recommended by the President already have passed, and another bill recommended by the President is now before this body; and they may even hope that other measures will be taken up later on. Of course the truth is that this Republican House has taken up these measures in its own good time and in its own way.

The President of the United States in his annual message urged upon Congress the necessity of passing a banking and currency bill which would provide for emergency currency. The President also urged upon Congress that in addition to that a commission should be appointed to take up the whole question of banking and currency, to find if there were other weak spots in our system, and perhaps to introduce radical modifications in the existing system of banking and currency.

Again, in a special message a few weeks ago the President urged upon Congress the great necessity for this legislation. In response to that message we present here to-day a measure carrying out the recommendations of the President that we shall amend our banking laws, that we shall provide for an emergency currency, and that we shall appoint a commission to report at another Congress upon the whole subject and the whole system. It is for this reason that I say we expect, and we have a right to expect, that the Democrats of the House will give large support to this measure.

This resolution provides that the minority measure of the House may be brought up before this body and may be voted upon first. That is the bill known as the "Williams bill," introduced by the distinguished leader of the minority. That is the bill which has been brought before this body as a minority report from the Committee on Banking and Currency, receiving, as it appears on the face of it, the unanimous indorsement of the minority members of the Banking and Currency Committee.

It is understood, also, that this bill has received the indorsement of the distinguished gentleman who is the candidate of the Democratic party for President. In view, therefore, of the indorsement which this bill has received at Democratic hands, this resolution provides that the Democrats on that side of the Chamber may first give their indorsement to this Williams bill, a bill that provides the country with a better measure, they think, prepared by themselves; and failing to secure that, I assume that they will fall in and support a measure they think perhaps not so good as they have prepared, yet which will give some measure of relief in times of distress.

Suppose the Democrats do not support this bill. Are they not putting themselves in rather an uncomfortable situation? What, then, would this time-consuming filibuster have been aimed against, if, when the very purpose for which they allege they have continued it comes before them, they refuse to support a measure which they have proclaimed they were trying to force us to bring in? They will then put themselves in a position before the country where they back and refuse to accept a measure which they have insisted that we should bring in, because it comes from the Republican side of the Chamber.

That will put the Democratic party in the position of being simply an opposition party, bringing forward nothing of its own, and refusing to assist in the passage of any law, however meritorious, because it comes from the Republican side of the Chamber.

How much time have I left, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has eleven minutes remaining.

Mr. VREELAND. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. COCKRAN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question before he takes his seat?

Mr. VREELAND. Yes, sir.

Mr. COCKRAN. I understand that the gentleman claims that the Democrats should support some one particular measure or else support this?

Mr. VREELAND. I do not know what the gentleman understands.

Mr. COCKRAN. "The gentleman" understands the gentleman to say that.

Mr. VREELAND. I state that there were before this body this afternoon two measures to vote on.

Mr. COCKRAN. By whose act was the House given this choice?

Mr. VREELAND. By its own act.

Mr. COCKRAN. By the majority.

Mr. VREELAND. There are two measures before the House. One of them has the indorsement of the candidate for President of the Democratic party, the leader of the minority in this House, and is indorsed by the minority members of the Committee on Banking and Currency. The second measure is one that comes from the Republican side of the House, adopted after a conference, by a large majority. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. COCKRAN. Will the gentleman allow me to complete my question? I merely want to know what the circumstances are.

Mr. VREELAND. Does this come out of my time?

The SPEAKER. It does.

Mr. VREELAND. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I first yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE].

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, there is now presented to this House a very strange rule for adoption. In the Record of yesterday, that is now on the desk of every Member, under date of May 13, page 6508 of public bills, resolutions, and memorials introduced, is one by Mr. VREELAND, a bill (H. R. 21871) to amend the national-bank laws, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

That is the bill that the House is now asked to take up. Hardly a Member has the bill before him now; it is only within the last ten minutes that it has been printed and brought to the House. That committee is to be discharged from the consideration of a bill referred to them by the Speaker of the House. The committee has not had time to consider it, and a rule is brought in here to discharge a committee of this House. Why set the sixty-four committees of this House aside? I submit that the House is called upon to insult a committee of this House, without its having an opportunity to pass upon the bill, and say that it shall be discharged. [Applause on the Democratic side.] If our heads go first, yours may follow. Members of this House—233 of us—if our heads are to be put upon the block now, whose heads are to follow in the desire to carry out the purposes of the leaders on this side when they want to consider any particular business? I say to you that the Committee on Banking and Currency stand ready to meet this afternoon and report this bill to this House, so that it may proceed in an orderly, regular manner before the country and before the committee of this House. Is there any justification for this proceeding?

Will the country justify such action as this? Will the country justify us in saying that a handful of Democrats in the minority can force legislation through this House, where there are 233 Republicans and 166 Democrats, or 67 Republican majority? How much of a majority do we need on this side of the House to transact business under the rules? How can we of this branch, that represents the voice of the American electorate, go before our constituents and say that we have subordinated ourselves, say that we have denied to ourselves the right to proceed according to the rules of the House to have committees report, and that committees shall be discharged, because, forsooth, for political exigencies and none other, a bill must be presented to this House and to the country? Who is asking for it? Men on this floor have received thousands of letters asking their vote for or against putting wood pulp and print paper on the free list. Thousands of letters have come here asking us to do something on the anti-injunction bill, to do something on the eight-hour bill, to do something that the people want. I pass the platter around to my colleagues and ask you, Who has asked you to do this act? Political exigency! Throw to the business people of the United States a bone when they ask you for something that is good. When they ask you for bread, throw them a stone! Can you proceed in this line? You say, perhaps, that I am speaking outside of my party. No, no! I am speaking, and I have authority to speak, by the very party to which I belong. When we met in conference May 5, 1908, I offered the following resolution which was unanimously adopted—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PRINCE. I ask time to read this resolution.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will two minutes longer be sufficient?

Mr. PRINCE. A minute and a half will do.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield three minutes more to the gentleman, or so much thereof as he may desire.

Mr. PRINCE. This resolution was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That this meeting, or any adjournment thereof, is only a conference and not a caucus, and shall not have the binding effect of a caucus; and that those who participate in its deliberations shall be absolutely free hereafter to act in accordance with their own judgment with reference to all matters considered before it.

My fellow Members, put the yoke upon you if you will. Walk under the yoke, "under buck," as the expression was in the time of the yoke of oxen. Now, the yoke may be easy and the burden light, but I want to say to you I will not put on the yoke; I will not assume the burden and go before my constituents and say that I am in favor of makeshift legislation; that I am in favor of discharging committees of this House; that I am in favor of overriding the wishes of the people; that I am to be a mere tobacco sign, to be moved hither and thither, a mere pawn upon the chessboard! I am here to represent my people. That resolution permits me to represent them, and I shall vote against such resolutions as this, and I ask other men who will have to go before their constituents to consider well, because no one of you can say, as they tried to say when the crime of 1873 was committed, "We did not know anything about it." You all know. You have your eyes open. You walk intelligently and knowingly, and if you vote for this resolution, remember that the next time your committee does not see fit to do what some people want you to do, your heads will be laid upon the block, they will be cut off, and the whole legislation for 90,000,000 people is to roll around three men. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Three men! And I say here and now, to the House and the country, the do-nothing Congress has been here long enough. If it were not for the bright, brainy, forceful character at the other end of the Avenue, I doubt whether we would have done anything except pass a few appropriation bills; but, thank God, there is somewhere in this country, at the other end of the Avenue, a man whose ears are to the ground, a man whose heart is in sympathy with the people, and he is insisting upon legislation, and what little we get is through him. It is through him and his special messages that we accomplish anything in the first session of the Sixtieth Congress for the benefit of the 90,000,000 people that we represent here on this floor. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has twelve minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will ask the gentleman from New York whether he expects to conclude and use all of his time with one speech, or expects to have more than one speech?

Mr. VREELAND. We will use the remainder of our time with one speech.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, there is nothing hitherto evolved out of the history of the human race quite as kaleidoscopic as the Republican party. Some time ago we upon this side of the Chamber were informed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], the majority floor leader, and by the Speaker's "Rules Deputy," the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], and by the other member of that committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] that no legislation having a Democratic initiative would be so much as considered by the majority of this House. You announced to the country that we were legislatively disbarred and that there was no use in our burning our lights over legislative study.

This morning one of the same gentlemen comes to us—I started to say, with a carefully concocted rule, but I am afraid the Speaker has got so that he is afraid even of the Committee on Rules—but with a carefully concocted motion to suspend the rules, in words in which, I think, I find the fine hand of the gentleman from Pennsylvania not only proposing that the Democrats shall initiate legislation, but undertaking to designate just precisely what legislation they shall initiate. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And it is done upon the ground that that legislation bears my name. He does not even permit this side to amend the bill H. R. 16730 to suit itself in as far as it desires to amend it. The rule does not even permit me to amend it in so far as I desire to amend it, especially in one essential part of it, where a typewriter's carelessness in section 7 exists in the bill that was introduced on the 7th of February, 1908.

It is an old adage "Beware of the Greeks bearing gifts;" and if in the old-time men were to beware of Greeks bearing gifts, my heaven! how much more ought we to beware, in these latter days of improved ingenuity, of Illinois, Pennsylvania, and New York Republicans bearing gifts. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

The Banking and Currency Committee considered a bill, and they reported the bill and recommended it to this House. I am opposed to it. I believe everybody, or nearly everybody, on this side is opposed to it, but there is a chance, at any rate theoretically if not practically, that it would receive serious consideration. Indeed, there are those who believe that in a fair fight with the Vreeland bill it might win. There is not a man of you that would propose to give a moment's serious consideration to the Williams currency bill. It is a Democratic bill. If it was the best bill on banking and currency ever introduced in the world, there is not one of you that would dare privately to express an opinion favorable to it without having previously seen the Speaker and explained why you were going to do it and received his permission to do it. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

You have virtually served notice on us that we are disbarred legislatively, and then you select a bill for us and say, "Play to the gallery, you Democrats," by voting for or against it. It is a better bill than yours and we are for it, but we will not let you obscure the real issue which is the abominability of your bill, by putting ours in front. You are inviting us to commit a tactical error offending those few conscientious, honest, nonpartisan Republicans that are opposed to this infamy of the Vreeland bill by substituting ourselves in point of consideration for them and their views. [Applause on the Democratic side.] We decline to be "deposited in that cavity." [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, what have you done? You are going to introduce a bill to reform the currency that goes to the very commercial vitalization of 80,000,000 of people, and you are going to give four hours of debate! Four weeks would not have been sufficient. The gentleman from New York [Mr. VREELAND] says we will oppose his bill "because it is a Republican bill." Why, bless your hearts, we are not in the habit of opposing things because they have a Republican origin, and you know it. [Derisive laughter on the Republican side.]

There is not one of you laughing that does not know it, and you know that your laugh is not sincere, but hypocritical. Upon this side for the last three years there has not been a good measure recommended by a Republican President or a Republican committee—good in our opinion, I mean, of course—that we have not advocated and that we have not helped through. It has been our boast that it is no longer a maxim that "the duty of an opposition was to oppose," but that the duty of the opposition is to oppose wrong things and advocate right things, no matter whence they come. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The history of the party in the rate bill, the history of the party in connection with the anti-injunction recommendations of the President, the history of the party in connection with the employers' liability bill, all prove that what I state is true, and proves your recently attempted vaudeville laugh is a pretense and hypocrisy.

Who stands for this Vreeland bill? Nobody but the Republican machine in this House. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ROTHERMEL] telegraphed all the banks within his district and got answers this morning from nineteen of them, and only three of them did not reply, advising him to beat the Vreeland bill. They regard it as worse than nothing. The people are not demanding it; the business men, farmers, and the banks are not demanding it. Nobody is demanding it. You, even, that Republican machine over there, are not demanding it because you want it. You are demanding it merely to be able to go before the people and say: "We passed something in the shape of an emergency-currency bill." You are passing it simply to get something into conference, and in a secret conference committee to hatch plutocratic mischief. There is not one of you that does not know that it is an abomination and a miserable makeshift. It ought to be called a bill of "authorization for clearance-house associations of national banks which have violated the law," or a "bill of indemnity for Secretaries of the Treasury who have suspended the operation of the law in behalf of the national banks and clearance-house associations." [Applause on the Democratic side.]

You allowed clearing-house associations to circulate notes subject to a 10 per cent tax and by executive act suspended the tax. Have you obeyed the law? Your Secretary of the Treasury suspended the operation of the law, an offense for which Charles I lost his head and James II lost his throne. Now, you are asking the American House of Representatives to legalize that violation of law which was deliberately overlooked by your Secretary, and to render it unnecessary in the future for him to suspend the law. I introduced a resolution here asking whether or not the Secretary of the Treasury had obeyed the law in connection with the circulation of I. O. U.'s and John Thomases—I believe they call them "clearing-house certificates"—throughout the country, and never could get a report from a committee. You dared not make a report, because you knew he had done it and ought to have been impeached for it and removed from office. All that this bill is fit for is an indemnity in the future for this man and men of his ilk.

Mr. Speaker, we have been told by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], and by the other gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] that you have the responsibility. Very well; take it. You have disbarred us legislatively. Proceed to run the court. If you have brains enough, if you have patriotism enough to bring before the House for its consideration a bill that will, in the slightest degree, improve present conditions, bring it before the House. If you think this is a bill that does that, pass it. So far, in my opinion, you have failed to prove that you have brains or patriotism enough to bring before the House a bill that is better even than present conditions—present conditions, bad as they are, growing out of Republican law. [Applause on the Democratic side.] There is not one of you who does not know that at heart you are not in favor of this Vreeland bill as a remedy for existing ills. There is not one of you who will pretend that you regard it as such. You are apologizing for it every day upon the ground that it is simply an expedient—an emergency expedient—and all that.

If I could get twelve men to rise upon that side of the House and give me their words of honor that they would read and honestly consider the bill which is called by my name, I would be only too glad to spend the time in explaining it and trying to get the American House of Representatives to pass it, but there is not one of you who would dare make the assurance that you could possibly vote for it, and your reason would be that it bore my name; that it came from the Democratic side of the House, and that you "have the responsibility for legislation." Now, take your responsibility, and in one year from now, if this bill passes, you will be visited with the penalty attached to the responsibility which you have taken. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I would ask the gentleman from New York if he would consent to a five-minute extension of debate upon the order, upon each side.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, let us have the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. VREELAND. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON]. [Applause.]

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I can not suffer from the same sensitiveness as my colleague on the committee from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE]. Both of us belong to the Banking and Currency Committee, and while we all recognize that committees are very useful agencies in transacting the business of this House, yet they by no means have any right to claim despotic power. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE] believe that any good would be done by referring this measure to the Committee on Banking and Currency? What does he promise us in reference to it—careful and friendly attention, his tender mercies, or a disposition to throw it in the waste basket? Which? Has he not already made a motion and has he not already advocated—

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I can not yield. Has he not already advocated in the very strongest terms that nothing be done with the Vreeland bill? Was not this same measure before that committee? Did it not have lengthy consideration, and was it not on the initiative of the gentleman himself laid on the table and treated with no regard? Then a caucus made up of the Republican Members of this House, a body at least a little larger and a little stronger, took up this subject. For three evenings that caucus considered the question of currency legislation. The Members listened to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE] and to all the opponents of the Vreeland bill. They gave hearings to all comers, and then, by a vote of 128 to 16, determined that we should bring this measure into the House.

Mr. PRINCE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] says we are playing to the galleries in asking his side to vote on this measure. Playing to the galleries in asking you to come before the bar of public opinion and the country and vote for your own measure? [Applause on the Republican side.] Is that playing to the gallery?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Ohio will permit an interruption, I have the very highest regard for the sense of personal integrity and honor of the gentleman from Ohio, higher than almost anybody. Will the gentleman from Ohio tell me upon his word of honor that he would consider the Williams bill upon its merits or if he has ever taken the trouble to read it?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I will say to the gentleman from Mississippi that I have read his bill with a great deal of pains, and have summarized it. There are some things in it I think are very good, but as a currency measure I regard it as objectionable. I regard it as framed in pursuance of a theory that is erroneous, though advocated still by a considerable number of people. [Applause on the Republican side.]

It thus remains for us on our side to bring forward a measure which shall meet the demands of the situation. Confessedly there is nothing on the other side that has been propounded except the Williams bill. I see the statement has been made, without any contradiction, that it has the support of the most promising candidate of the Democratic party for the Presidency. Shall we not have a vote here to-day between your party's measure and our party's measure? I must suggest, with the greatest mildness, that it comes with poor grace for the gentleman from Mississippi to question whether we have the brains and the patriotism to frame a proper bill. Confessedly on that side—I do not want to say anything unkind—you have not the qualifications by whatever name you may call them. [Applause on the Republican side.] We, at least, are ready to present a measure here which we are willing to submit to the House and to the country.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Just for a moment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Would it not be fairer to let this side of the House propose the measure it is willing to go before the country on?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I say "no." You have had this whole winter. While the country has been demanding currency legislation, you have brought in a bill and proclaimed it as your measure. You are asking us to say to you at 11 o'clock and 59 minutes, "Now you can bring in another measure." I say that it is time to do something and dispose of this question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The ink is not dry upon your measure.

Mr. COCKRAN. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. The gentleman from Illinois seems so very solicitous about this pending bill because the Banking and Currency Committee has not had time to consider it. Now, I belong to that committee, and I must deplore the lamentable difference of opinion among its members. I had hoped we could agree—

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Oh, yes; for a minute, if it is a brief question.

Mr. COCKRAN. Can I ask the gentleman from Ohio, with his great reputation for candor, to say whether he approves having a bill of this magnitude passed as a party measure or considered as a party measure?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I would prefer very much to pass it as a nonpartisan measure.

Mr. COCKRAN. And I said also to consider it as a party measure.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. But if it must be passed as a party measure, I stand here to pass it. [Applause.]

Mr. COCKRAN. Now, will the gentleman—

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I must decline to yield further.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio declines to yield. Mr. BURTON of Ohio. It is much to be regretted that nothing can be done on the initiative of the Banking and Currency Committee, but the time has come when something should be done, and it is part of the legislative history of recent currency legislation that the most salutary measures brought before the House and passed have come from sources outside that committee.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I say that it must be regretted, because I myself have the very great honor of belonging to the committee, and had hoped it would be possible to bring forward some measure which might meet with the approval of the majority of the members of the committee and of the House. One measure has been reported, it is true, but has a single step been taken by any member of that committee to bring that before the House? Has not the author himself said that although it appears on the Calendar as the bill of the Banking and Currency Committee, he himself is not in favor of it now?

Now, I do not believe this House can take the responsibility of going to the country without some currency legislation.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I can not yield.

Mr. FOWLER. I would not if I were you.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I will give you plenty of time when it comes to general debate.

There is a delusion abroad that currency legislation helps only financial circles. Such is far from the case. The great capitalist or banker is like one on a commanding eminence. He can foresee the future and provide for the storm. Last autumn, though that great crisis was caused by deep and fundamental forces, its crushing weight and its continuance were greatly aggravated by the absence of a proper currency system. An emergency currency such as this would have met the situation.

In the great West and in the South crops had to remain on farms and in warehouses because there was no currency to take them to the markets. Tens of thousands of men were out of employment in places where, though there was work to do, there was no currency to pay wages or set the wheels of industry in motion. The bank bill is a blessing to the humble. It is the reward and stay of the workingman, who, after sweat and toil, goes home with a quicker step when he realizes that he has in his possession that which will promise gladness for himself and his family. He is entitled to a suitable monetary system, to a dollar that is good the world over; and together with him all who go to make up our complex civilization—the merchant, manufacturer, farmer—all alike are entitled to our very best efforts to give to the business of the country, to its welfare and its upbuilding, judicious, safe, and fair currency laws.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. If this motion passes, will it be possible at any stage of the procedure for a Member who desires to demand, under Rule XVI, section 6, a division of the question between the commission bill and the financial bill?

The SPEAKER. It is not a parliamentary inquiry, as my friend knows, and anticipates a matter not before the House at this time.

The question is on suspending the rules and agreeing to the special order.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 176, nays 146, answered "present" 6, not voting 60, as follows:

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 21871) to amend the national banking laws.

Be it enacted, etc., That national banks, each having an unimpaired capital and a surplus of not less than 20 per cent, not less than ten in number, having an aggregate capital and surplus of at least $5,000,000, may form voluntary associations to be designated as national clearing-house associations. The banks uniting to form such association shall, by their presidents or vice-presidents, acting under authority from the board of directors, make and file with the Secretary of the Treasury a certificate setting forth the names of the banks composing the association, the principal place of business of the association, and the name of the association, which name shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. Upon the filing of such certificate the banks therein named shall become a body corporate, and by the name so designated and approved may sue and be sued and exercise the powers of a body corporate for the purposes hereinafter mentioned: Provided, That not more than one such national clearing-house association shall be formed in any city: Provided further, That the several members of such national clearing-house association shall be taken, as nearly as conveniently may be, from a territory composed of a State or part of a State, or contiguous parts of one or more States: And provided further, That any national bank in such city or territory, having the qualifications herein prescribed for membership in such national clearing-house association, shall, upon its application to the Secretary of the Treasury, be admitted to membership in a national clearing-house association for that city or territory, and upon such admission shall be deemed and held a part of the body corporate, and as such entitled to all the rights and privileges and subject to all the liabilities of an original member: And provided further, That each national clearing-house association shall be composed exclusively of banks not members of any other national clearing-house association.

The dissolution, voluntary or otherwise, of any bank in such association shall not affect the corporate existence of the association unless there shall then remain less than the minimum number of ten banks: Provided, however, That the reduction of the number of said banks below the minimum of ten shall not affect the existence of the corporation with respect to the assertion of all rights in favor of or against such association. The affairs of the association shall be managed by a board consisting of one representative from each bank. By-laws for the government of the association shall be made by the board, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. A president, vice-president, secretary, treasurer, and an executive committee of not less than five members shall be elected by the board. The powers of such board, except in the election of officers and making of by-laws, may be exercised through its executive committee.

Sec. 2. That the association herein provided for shall have and exercise any and all powers necessary to carry out the purposes of this act, namely, to render available as a basis for additional circulation any securities, including commercial paper, held by a national banking association. For the purpose of obtaining such additional circulation, any bank belonging to such national clearing-house association having circulating notes outstanding secured by the deposit of bonds of the United States to an amount not less than 40 per cent of its capital stock, and which has its capital unimpaired and a surplus of not less than 20 per cent, may deposit with and transfer to the association, in trust, for the purpose hereinafter provided, such of the securities above mentioned as may be satisfactory to the board of the association. The officers of the association may thereupon, in behalf of such bank, make application to the Comptroller of the Currency for an issue of additional circulating notes to an amount not exceeding 75 per cent of the cash value of the securities or commercial paper so deposited. The Comptroller of the Currency shall immediately transmit such application to the Secretary of the Treasury with such recommendation as he thinks proper, and if, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury, business conditions in the locality demand additional circulation, and if he be satisfied that a lien in favor of the United States on the securities so deposited and on the assets of the banks composing the association will be amply sufficient for the protection of the United States, he shall direct an issue of additional circulating notes to the association, on behalf of such bank, to an amount not exceeding 75 per cent of the cash value of the securities so deposited.

Sec. 3. That the banks and the assets of all banks belonging to the association shall be jointly and severally liable to the United States for the redemption of such additional circulation; and to secure such liability the lien created by section 5230 of the Revised Statutes shall extend to and cover the assets of all banks belonging to the association, and to the securities deposited by the banks with the association pursuant to the provisions of this act; but as between the several banks composing such association each bank shall be liable only in the proportion that its capital and surplus bears to the aggregate capital and surplus of all such banks. The association may, at any time, require of any of its constituent banks a deposit of additional securities or commercial paper to secure such additional circulation. Upon the failure of such bank to make such deposit the association may, after ten days' notice to the bank, sell the securities and paper already in its hands at public sale, and deposit the proceeds with the Treasurer of the United States as a fund for the redemption of such additional circulation. If such fund be insufficient for that purpose, the association may recover from the bank the amount of the deficiency by suit in the circuit court of the United States, and shall have the benefit of the lien hereinbefore provided for in favor of the United States upon the assets of such bank. The association may permit the withdrawal of any such securities or commercial paper and the substitution of other securities or commercial paper of equal value therefor.

The additional circulating notes issued under this act shall be used, held, and treated in the same way as circulating notes of national banking associations heretofore issued and secured by a deposit of United States bonds, and shall be subject to all the provisions of law affecting such notes except as herein expressly modified: Provided, That the total amount of circulating notes outstanding of any national banking association, including notes secured by United States bonds as now provided by law, and notes secured otherwise than by deposit of such bonds, shall not at any time exceed the amount of its unimpaired capital and surplus: And provided further, That there shall not be outstanding at any time circulating notes issued under the provisions of this act to an amount of more than $500,000,000.

Sec. 4. That whenever any bank belonging to a national clearing-house association shall fail to preserve or make good its 5 per cent redemption fund in the Treasury of the United States, required by section 3 of the act of June 20, 1874, chapter 343, the Treasurer of the United States shall notify such national clearing-house association to make good such redemption fund, and upon the failure of such national clearing-house association to make good such fund, the Treasurer of the United States may, in his discretion, apply so much of the 5 per cent redemption fund belonging to the other banks composing such national clearing-house association as may be necessary for that purpose; and such national clearing-house association may, after five days' notice to such bank, proceed to sell at public sale the securities deposited by such bank with the association pursuant to the provisions of section 2 of this act, and deposit the proceeds with the Treasurer of the United States as a fund for the redemption of the additional circulation taken out by such bank under this act.

Sec. 5. That each and every bank in such clearing-house association located in a city designated as a "central reserve city" under section 5195 of the Revised Statutes and section 1 of the act of March 3, 1887, chapter 378, shall have on hand at all times in gold or lawful money of the United States an amount equal to at least 25 per cent of the total amount of the additional circulation which it may have taken out, in time of emergency, and put into circulation under this act. Each and every such bank located in a city designated as a "reserve city" under section 5191 of the Revised Statutes, or any act amendatory thereof, shall have on hand at all times in like money the like sum of 25 per cent of such additional circulation, of which sum one-half may consist of cash deposits in such "central reserve cities." All other banks in such association shall have on hand at all times in like money an amount equal to at least 15 per cent of such additional circulation, of which sum nine-fifteenths may consist of cash deposits in "reserve cities." Any bank failing to maintain or make good the reserve herein required shall be subject to the provisions of section 5191 of the Revised Statutes. The provisions of section 5192 of the Revised Statutes, of section 3 of the act of June 20, 1874, chapter 343, and of section 12 of the act of July 12, 1882, chapter 290, as to what shall be counted a part of the lawful reserve of a national bank shall apply to the reserve required by this act.

Sec. 6. That in order that the distribution of notes to be issued under the provisions of this act shall be made as equitable as practicable between the various sections of the country, the Secretary of the Treasury shall not approve applications from associations in any State in excess of the amount to which such State would be entitled of the additional notes herein authorized on the basis of the proportion which the unimpaired capital and surplus of the national banking associations in such State bears to the total amount of unimpaired capital and surplus of the national banking associations of the United States: Provided, however, That in case the applications from associations in any State shall not be equal to the amount which the associations of such State would be entitled to under this method of distribution, the Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, to meet an emergency, assign the amount not thus applied for to any applying association or associations in States in the same section of the country.

Sec. 7. That section 5214 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, be further amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5214. National banking associations having on deposit bonds of the United States, bearing interest at the rate of 2 per cent per annum, including the bonds issued for the construction of the Panama Canal, under the provisions of section 8 of 'An act to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans,' approved June 28, 1902, to secure its circulating notes, shall pay to the Treasurer of the United States, in the months of January and July, a tax of one-fourth of 1 per cent each half year upon the average amount of such of its notes in circulation as are based upon the deposit of such bonds; and such associations having on deposit bonds of the United States bearing interest at a rate higher than 2 per cent per annum shall pay a tax of one-half of 1 per cent each half year upon the average amount of such of its notes in circulation as are based upon the deposit of such bonds. National banking associations having circulating notes secured through clearing-house associations shall pay for the first two months a tax of 4 per cent per annum upon the average amount of such of their notes in circulation as are based upon the deposit of such securities, and afterwards an additional tax of 1 per cent per annum for each month until a tax of 10 per cent per annum is reached, and thereafter such tax of 10 per cent per annum, upon the average amount of such notes. Every national banking association having outstanding circulating notes secured by a deposit of other securities than United States bonds shall make monthly returns, under oath of its president or cashier, to the Treasurer of the United States, in such form as the Treasurer may prescribe, of the average monthly amount of its notes so secured in circulation; and it shall be the duty of the Comptroller of the Currency to cause such reports of notes in circulation to be verified by examination of the banks' records, and any officer of any banking association falsely reporting the amount of its notes in circulation shall, upon conviction thereof in any circuit or district court of the United States, be punished by a fine of not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000, or by imprisonment for not less than one year and not more than five years, or by both such fine and imprisonment. The taxes received on circulating notes secured through clearing-house associations shall be paid into the general fund of the United States.

SEC. 8. That section 9 of the act approved July 12, 1882, as amended by the act approved March 4, 1907, be further amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 9. That any national banking association desiring to withdraw its circulating notes, secured by deposit of United States bonds in the manner provided in section 4 of the act approved June 20, 1874, is hereby authorized for that purpose to deposit lawful money with the Treasurer of the United States and, with the consent of the Comptroller of the Currency and the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to withdraw a proportionate amount of bonds held as security for its circulating notes in the order of such deposits: Provided, That not more than $9,000,000 of lawful money shall be deposited during any calendar month for this purpose; and, in the same manner, any such association desiring to withdraw any of its circulating notes, secured otherwise than by the deposit of bonds of the United States, may, without such limitation as to monthly deposits, make such withdrawal at any time by the deposit of lawful money or national bank notes with the Treasurer of the United States, and upon such deposit a proportionate share of the securities so deposited may be withdrawn: Provided, That the deposits under this section to retire notes secured by the deposit of securities other than bonds of the United States shall not be covered into the Treasury, as required by section 6 of an act entitled 'An act directing the purchase of silver bullion and the issue of Treasury notes thereon, and for other purposes,' approved July 14, 1890, but shall be retained in the Treasury for the purpose of redeeming the notes of the bank making such deposit."

SEC. 9. That section 5172 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5172. In order to furnish suitable notes for circulation, the Comptroller of the Currency shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, cause plates and dies to be engraved, in the best manner to guard against counterfeiting and fraudulent alterations, and shall have printed therefrom, and numbered, such quantity of circulating notes, in blank, of the denominations of $5, $10, $20, $50, $100, $500, $1,000, and $10,000, as may be required to supply the banking associations entitled to receive the same. Such notes shall state upon their face that they are secured by United States bonds or other securities according to law, shall be certified by the written or engraved signatures of the Treasurer and Register, and by the imprint of the seal of the Treasury. They shall also express upon their face the promise of the banking association receiving the same to pay on demand, attested by the signature of the president or vice-president and cashier. The Comptroller of the Currency, acting under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall as soon as practicable cause to be prepared circulating notes in blank, and countersigned, as provided by law, to an amount equal to 50 per cent of the capital stock of each national banking association; such notes to be deposited in the Treasury or in the subtreasury of the United States nearest the place of business of each association, and to be held for such association, subject to the order of the Comptroller of the Currency, for their delivery as provided by law: Provided, That the Comptroller of the Currency may issue national-bank notes of the present form until plates can be prepared and circulating notes issued as above provided: Provided, however, That in no event shall bank notes of the present form be issued to any bank as additional circulation provided for by this act."

SEC. 10. That circulating notes of national banking associations, when presented to the Treasury for redemption, as provided in section 3 of the act approved June 20, 1874, shall be redeemed in lawful money of the United States.

SEC. 11. That all acts and orders of the Comptroller of the Currency and the Treasurer of the United States authorized by this act shall have the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall have power also to make any such rules and regulations and exercise such control over the organization and management of national clearing-house associations as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act.

SEC. 12. That all national banking associations designated as regular depositaries of public money shall pay upon all special and additional deposits made by the Secretary of the Treasury in such depositaries, and all such associations designated as temporary depositaries of public money shall pay upon all sums of public money deposited in such associations interest at such rate as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, not less, however, than 1 per cent per annum upon the average monthly amount of such deposits: Provided, however, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to change or modify the obligation of any association or any of its officers for the safe-keeping of public money: Provided, further, That the rate of interest charged shall be equal and uniform throughout the United States.

SEC. 13. That a Commission is hereby appointed, to be called the "National Currency Commission," to be composed as follows: Six members of the Senate, to be appointed by the presiding officer thereof;

SEC. 20. That this act shall take effect upon its passage.

MR. VREELAND. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET].

MR. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, this bill contains two general provisions, and only two. Under the first authority and the procedure for emergency currency is provided. Under the second a commission is authorized, clothed with the power of investigation and reporting to Congress at a later day, after a general investigation, upon the advisability of a change or revision of the banking and currency laws.

For many years there has been a well-founded sentiment among our people favorable to a general reformation and revision of the banking and currency laws of the United States. On rare occasions the attention of the country is challenged directly to the necessity for such changes, but only in times of disaster and storm, and immediately following, has it seemed possible to take up for consideration this broad and important question. The purpose of the promoters of this legislation which is brought to the attention of the House is, by proper investigation of the entire subject-matter of finance and banking by a proper commission, to make a comprehensive report, on which it is believed and hoped that Congress may act in the near future. But on account of the unfortunate and disastrous conditions under which business was almost paralyzed last fall and early winter it has seemed wise to make some provision against the possible recurrence of those conditions while an investigation of the whole subject is under consideration. Therefore it is the duty of this House, taking into account the dangers of a possible recurrence of those conditions, to make such provision as will prevent the disasters under which we suffered last fall.

I know, Mr. Speaker, that the sentiment, which I confess is reasonably broadcast, is that there is no danger of a recurrence of the panicky conditions in business in the near future; but it is impossible for anyone to forecast that we will not have next fall the same character of troubles which befell us last fall. I think it very improbable that another panic will visit us next fall. The fact that the conditions last fall were different from any conditions under which any panic in the history of the United States was ever before inaugurated at least raises a doubt in my mind that we can not rest nor depend upon the predictions of anybody as to the recurrence of those conditions.

The necessity for an increased volume of currency at the crop-moving periods each year has been quite apparent. Under the normal conditions of business the rigid limitations of our currency laws and the lack of the element of elasticity have occasioned more or less stringency in currency in the fall of each year. This normal condition of stringency and lack of sufficient volume of currency last fall was decidedly changed by the unforeseen, unnatural, and abnormal conditions which had caused the lack of public confidence to a remarkable degree, which resulted in the withdrawal of great quantities of currency from circulation and disturbed business generally.

In the recent panic there was no doubt whatever of either the value or the security of the currency of the country, but its value and the standard in which it was measured were universally recognized and regarded as of first quality.

The recent panic followed the unusual and startling disclosures of fraud and mismanagement in some of the great insurance companies and other leading enterprises of the country. It followed the further disclosure of unprincipled financing, as illustrated in the Alton Railway deal and as practiced by speculating bankers of the type of the Heinze syndicate of banks in New York. Overspeculation, unwarranted extension of credits, and a disregard of honest methods in business transactions alarmed the country. These disclosures developed a lack of confidence and trust in men and not in business. The startling disclosures caused people to wonder how far-reaching such practices might be, and created doubt in the minds of many men against their neighbors. This situation was followed quickly by a general spirit of criticism against men and methods, and aroused suspicion which, for intensity and sting, had rarely been equaled. Carping criticism went hand in hand with righteous indignation. Just accusation walked alongside malevolent persecution and abuse. With all these forces combined the onslaught overthrew public confidence, money went into hiding, loans were called, factories were closed, and liquidation set in. It was impossible to foresee these conditions, and they came without warning at a time when the business conditions of the country were at high tide. While it is quite improbable that there would be a recurrence of such conditions next fall, it is quite possible. The practice of providing a strictly emergency currency under the terms of the bill now before the House is, if possible, to prevent disaster to business if some surprising and unforeseen conditions may arise in the future, as they did last fall.

The emergency currency authorized by this bill and the plan for its issue will, in the judgment of many, be a preventive against such disturbance to business, even though we may not be able to prevent the conditions arising similar to those which arose last fall.

The authorization and appointment of a commission to inquire into the general subject of banking and currency would not be in conflict with the provisions for the emergency currency. The work of such commission could safely be pursued to a proper conclusion without the fear that it would be hurried in order to be operative before the possible return of a panic. If it should appear by experience that there was no need for a provision for an emergency currency, although we had made by this bill such provision, there would be ample time in which the commission should make a report and no harm done. From our own experience we know that if there were no other safeguards that would be a sufficient justification to furnish that support against the possible recurrence of those conditions while the commission was pursuing its investigation.

If perchance the operation of the provisions for an emergency currency is not sound, and later experience, even under the investigation of the commission, should prove it unsound, again there is no danger to follow from the authorization of this legislation, because by coupling the two, one a purely emergency provision to guard against all possible distress which might follow from panic conditions, the other the authorization of a proper commission to give full consideration to the entire subject, we believe we have guarded against both difficulties.

The fact that this is an emergency currency, and properly and fully safeguarded against the possible evils of inflation, will appear from a brief, but I hope clear, recital of just what is the procedure which is herein authorized. The machinery is fixed whereby national banks may voluntarily—there is no compulsion—associate themselves in a corporate body, through which corporation or association they may authorize the issue by any one of the banks of the association of a currency not based upon the bonds of the Government. The procedure under the organization is that any securities possessed and owned by that bank, when the board comprising the managers of that association shall find those securities ample and sufficient, may apply to the Comptroller of the Currency and ask an issue upon those securities. The Comptroller, after satisfying himself that the requirements of the law have been complied with, submits the application to the Secretary of the Treasury. First, the association of the banks comprising the corporation passes upon the securities; next, the Comptroller of the Currency, and then the Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary of the Treasury then finds, first, that a condition of emergency for additional money exists in the State in which that particular bank has its home, and, second, that the securities offered are ample to safeguard the Government against loss, and then only 75 per cent of the cash value of the securities offered is permitted to be issued in emergency currency.

The bank which makes the request for this currency must have had at least 40 per cent of its capital invested in Government bonds, upon which the regular national-bank notes, as we now understand them, are issued, and its entire capital and 20 per cent surplus unimpaired. That finds of necessity, first, a condition of panic or paralysis of business in that particular locality, and then as security all of the assets of the bank making the application and all of the banks comprising the association of which it is a member, and then the reserve, which the bill requires as the cash balance to meet the immediate emergency until those securities can perchance be liquidated into cash.

When that currency is issued under that process, the penalty against inflation is the limitation by reason of the taxes which are imposed by the Government; the first sixty days of the time a tax or penalty of 4 per cent is imposed, and for each sixty days additional an additional 2 per cent tax or penalty until 10 per cent has been reached, and thereafter 10 per cent. A reserve of gold or lawful money equal to 25 per cent of the issue is required to be held by the banks receiving the currency.

The limitations and burdens imposed upon the banks make it impossible for such notes to be issued except in extreme cases of emergency. In my opinion, if a mistake is made with reference to these limitations and burdens, it is that they are too severe upon the banks. The doubt, however, has been resolved in this instance against the banks and in favor of the business of the country. Indeed, this measure is not proposed as an aid to banks; it is proposed as an aid to business. Banks receive deposits from the people, and in turn lend those deposits, upon which they receive interest.

A bank is thoroughly justified in pursuing such methods as will result in profit to the bank and its stockholders. Those very methods, honorable and honest as they may be, nevertheless sometimes result, especially in periods of panic, in having the money of the depositors so placed that the bank is unable to meet the demand of depositors and is obliged to resort to arbitrary and sometimes questionable methods in refusing payment upon such demands of depositors until they can themselves receive payment upon loans which they have made. It is only fair, therefore, that when such conditions arise, for which neither the banks nor their depositors are in any way responsible, that some sort of provision should be made which will permit a perfectly solvent bank having good credit and ample collateral to be able to obtain an emergency currency with which it can safely meet the demands of the depositors for the return of the money which is held in custody by the banks. When an individual meets with misfortune or unwise investments and is obliged to raise funds to save his credit, he takes to the bank such collateral as he is able to raise, or the credit of a friend who may be willing to indorse him, and upon the terms of the bank itself raises a sufficient amount of money or credit to save him from loss or bankruptcy. It seems only fair, therefore, that when a bank, having scattered the deposits of its customers upon loans upon which it had sought to profit for itself and its stockholders, and unfortunate conditions arise making it practically impossible for it to secure sufficient cash to meet the demands of its depositors, that provision might be made whereby it can use its credit and its collateral in order to raise money and credit to enable it to meet the demands of its depositors, who have a just claim for the return of the money which the bank holds in its custody for them. An emergency exists in the case of the individual when he is forced to the bank to increase his credit and his cash. The bank exacts interest from him for its accommodation. In the case of the bank, the emergency exists which obliges it to go outside of the ordinary channels of business to use its individual credit to raise cash sufficient to meet the legitimate demands for cash made by its depositors.

In order to avoid the possibility of putting such an element of elasticity into the currency as might enable a bank, when once it had secured the additional or emergency currency, to continue its use when it can at a profit to itself and thereby make possible the inflation of the currency to the disaster of business generally, it is absolutely necessary that the burdens and limitations placed upon such additional issue of currency must be sufficiently heavy and numerous to make it impossible for a bank to realize any profit from such emergency currency after the emergency shall have passed.

In addition to this, the burdens should be sufficiently heavy and the limitations sufficiently strong to make it impossible for any bank or association of banks, however widely separated, to inspire or originate a supposed emergency which might enable them to secure the additional currency and use it for their personal profit. I repeat, and hold that it is the key to this whole subject, that the protection of an emergency currency is in the interest of business generally, and not in the interest of banks. The protection is the protection of the people who are depositors of banks whose deposits have been loaned by the banks in an honorable way and may be tied up by some sudden condition which results in lack of confidence either in banks, men, or business generally, which brings about the withdrawal of the legitimate currency under normal conditions from the channels of trade and creates the emergency to business generally which can only be relieved by some sort of additional supply of cash or its proper equivalent.

I do not wonder, nor am I surprised at the criticism of bankers against this proposed legislation, which imposes such heavy burdens upon them. They are obliged in the first instance to take out at least 40 per cent of their capital in United States bonds, upon which they issue the bank-note currency, as we now understand such notes. They next must submit to the Comptroller of the Currency and the Secretary of the Treasury collateral of good quality as first security for the additional currency which they feel they need because of the existence of a condition of business which is abnormal. If the Secretary of the Treasury shall find that a condition of business creating a general emergency exists in the State in which the bank seeking relief has its home and the security offered by such bank is ample and sufficient to save the Government from loss, then the bank making the application is permitted to receive but 75 per cent of the cash value of the securities offered in the so-called "emergency currency." At once a 4 per cent tax lodges against that issue and continues for the first sixty days that the currency is in circulation and an additional 2 per cent tax for each additional sixty days thereafter, not exceeding 10 per cent as the highest tax. A reserve, equal to 25 per cent of the additional issue, must be maintained by banks in central reserve cities and 15 per cent in country banks, in either gold or lawful money. The only way the bank can be relieved from these burdens of tax and reserve and to recover the collateral deposited for their first security is to pay into the Treasury in lawful money an amount equal to the outstanding notes which they wish retired or return to the Treasury the identical emergency currency issued. Of course the notes themselves must have the identical appearance in shape, color, and language that the ordinary national-bank notes based upon bonds have, and when placed in circulation may not be recovered in order to be retired. Consequently they can not be "called in," as is often expressed.

The banks can secure relief from the burdens imposed by the issue of emergency currency by covering into the Treasury the amount of their issue in lawful money, or the notes themselves if they have them. Naturally, the issue of such emergency notes would increase the volume of the currency, and when the emergency currency is either returned to the Treasury, or an amount of lawful money equal to the issue is paid into the Treasury, it automatically contracts the currency in an equal amount. This process is what gives elasticity to the currency proposed by the legislation. The safety of the currency is the ample security provided for it. This security is, first, the collateral filed with the application, which must be worth 25 per cent more in cash value than the amount of the notes authorized for issue. Second, the executive board of all of the banks in the association of which the bank receiving the emergency currency is a member must pass upon the value of the security offered before the issue is authorized. In addition to this the banks composing the association are jointly and severally liable for the new issue.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, the guard against the possible inflation of the currency is easily seen, by reason of the limitations in taxes and burdens imposed, which no bank could live under if it sought a profit upon the issue. If the securities are ample, if the burden of tax is large enough to guard against inflation, the possible danger against this being used exclusively for an emergency currency is the dishonesty of the bank officials, which will be guarded against by reason of the numbers grouped together being sufficiently large to watch each other.

The association of ten or more banks whose combined capital and surplus must equal at least $5,000,000, would necessitate those banks, through their proper board of directors and the executive committee of the association, carefully guarding the interest of the association. Undoubtedly this would result in a closer scrutiny of the banking methods of each individual bank comprising such association, the greater honesty of such officials, as well as greater safety of the collaterals exacted in its ordinary business. Such supervision and scrutiny would doubtless result in safer methods of banking, better collateral in the case of the individual banks and consequently a better credit to the entire association. This, naturally, would mean increased security upon the emergency notes issued to any bank in such association, as all banks of each association are jointly and severally liable for the redemption of the emergency currency proposed. The emergency provision proposed by the bill is in the nature of a security against the possible occurrence of conditions of panic. It is impossible to provide for safety against the panic as suddenly and as quickly as the panic usually falls upon the business of the country. If a safe and sensible law is already upon the statute books, and the general framework and equipment for the banks to equally exercise their rights to protect themselves against the storm, the panic may be prevented, or if not prevented, the time of its continuance greatly shortened. If the occasion for the use of the equipment and procedure provided by this law does not occur, then there is no hardship upon the banks. If, however, the occasion does arise, banks as well as the people of the country, generally interested as we all are in the maintenance of safe business conditions, will be exceedingly glad that they have at hand the means and methods for meeting the conditions when they arise. As long as normal conditions continue the law may not be needed. The proposition, however, is to meet abnormal conditions when they may arise. The proposal of the emergency currency is to meet these abnormal conditions, and the proposal of a commission is for the consideration of improved banking and currency methods under normal conditions of business.

Does your Western resident, dwelling in a zone of high winds, await the approach of the storm before he digs his cyclone cellar? Or does he provide it as soon as he has taken his family into that dangerous region, where he may suffer by reason of tornadoes or storms? This is a storm currency, a storm condition. The fact that you can not build the cellar after the storm has broken is a reminder of the fact that you can not issue your storm currency after the panic has arrived. We, therefore, make it voluntary upon the banks to accept the responsibility. We require ample security against the possible depreciation of the value of the notes. We fix all of the machinery to meet the storm, and if it does not come, there is no harm done. We hope it never will come. In my judgment, had this bill been upon the statute books when the panic broke last fall, it would not have lasted more than three days at the outside. My belief now is that with this procedure and authority, with the safeguards which I believe the bill contains, the possibility of a recurrence of these conditions is exceedingly remote. The appointment of the commission, in my judgment, Mr. Speaker, is equally strong and defensible with the provision for the emergency currency. Our banking and currency laws ought to be brought down so as to meet the needs of business under the present methods of our commerce and trade, and in accordance with the rapid growth of our commerce and trade. I am exceedingly hopeful that the commission may be able upon investigation to submit to Congress a report upon which we can base legislation which will so change or revise the banking and currency laws of our country as will bring our currency into proper harmony with the methods of business and the needs of business at all seasons of the year.

I have advocated the appointment of a commission without regard to any additional legislation. While I would now be satisfied with such legislation, I can see no disadvantage or harm in making a provision for an emergency currency, as we have provided in this bill, which will be a protection in case of necessity, even while the commission is making its investigation and report. Personally I doubt very much the wisdom of a mixed commission. I much prefer a purely legislative commission. A mixed commission would not be so easy in its operation as a legislative commission. A legislative commission, consisting of Members of the House and Senate, would report by way of a bill directly to their two Houses and at once bring the question into consideration for the enactment of the legislation embodied in the bill. Such members would be answerable and responsible directly to the Congress and the country. In the case of a mixed commission, the members not connected with either House of Congress would be answerable and responsible to nobody but themselves. The legislative commission would have as full power and privilege of acquiring information of all character from all sources that would be possible for the mixed commission to have. I am hopeful, however, that whatever commission may be authorized, even if the provisions for the emergency currency are also enacted into law, that the result of this legislation now proposed may be to the decided advantage and benefit of the business of the country and to the profit of all of the people.

I want to emphasize the purpose of the promoters of this legislation that the report of that commission shall be looked forward to in good faith, and we hope and desire and recognize and believe that when it arrives it will receive as fair and full and complete consideration as will be possible to give a report, of that magnitude.

Mr. COCKRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I will yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COCKRAN. If the commission be necessary, does the gentleman think it consistent with sound principles of legislation and of government to pass a law so entirely without precedent as this before we have received the benefit of the researches of the commission?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I think if I had the means to gratify my personal wishes in building a home, if I was without a home and wanted a shelter, I would not wait until I had the advice of all the architects and builders as to what character of a home I might build, but I would build one for a shelter while I awaited wiser counsel to gratify my ambition.

Mr. COCKRAN. Does the gentleman think that he who is not a builder, but a statesman, would be able to build a building for himself?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I would not, but I could, if I had intelligence enough, make inquiry in the proper sources for information, and I doubtless would be able to meet the conditions.

Mr. COCKRAN. Does the gentleman wish us to understand that we already have sufficient information on which to justify the passage of this measure?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I think we have; I may be wrong. I do not claim to be infallible, but I believe that this provision for a shelter against possibly a return of the storm will do no harm, even if the storm does not come.

Mr. COCKRAN. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. OVERSTREET. And if while we are waiting, provision is made along proper lines to prevent a recurrence, no harm can come if that does not recur.

Mr. COCKRAN. I entirely agree with the gentleman, but suppose that instead of building a structure to shelter him he is deliberately constructing a weight that will crush him. Would the gentleman take that chance?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I would not, and for that reason I deny that there is any weight hanging over the heads of these people or in any provision of this bill.

Mr. COCKRAN. That is the issue.

Mr. OVERSTREET (continuing). That would injure the currency.

Mr. COCKRAN. Why not?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. OVERSTREET. If I had further time I would be glad to pursue the matter with the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES].

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, our friend the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] tells us that this is a bill brought forward here for the purpose of quieting the financial storm. If I read its provisions right, instead of quieting the storm, it will be a fomentor of a storm. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The truth of it is, Mr. Speaker, of all the legislation that has been brought before Congress in the history of the Government there never has been a bill brought here that has lodged in the hands of one man so much power affecting the property and interests of the American people. You tell us that it quiets the storm. Under the provisions of this bill the storm may be beating quick and fast in every part of the Union and the Secretary of the Treasury may say all is calm with him and refuse to allow you to issue one dollar of circulation to be used in the avenues of trade and commerce in this country. Listen to the provisions of the bill. It says:

If in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury business conditions demand additional circulation.

Banks may say, "We need the emergency circulation;" they may offer the flower of their security; they may get upon their knees to the Secretary of the Treasury and tell him of the great necessity for this circulation. But the Secretary, perfectly serene in the calm and quiet of his office in the Treasury building, may answer them and say, "The security you offer is abundant; you have complied with the requirements of the law, but your locality does not need, and therefore you shall not have, any additional currency."

So, Mr. Speaker, we find that this bill provides for an emergency whenever the Secretary of the Treasury sees fit to say there is one. It is all left to him, and the country may be upon the very verge of bankruptcy, property values toppling, and yet the Secretary of the Treasury has the power to deny the issuance of one single dollar of emergency currency. Here is another provision which says that—

If the Secretary of the Treasury be satisfied that a lien in favor of the United States on the securities so deposited, and the assets of banks composing the association, will be amply sufficient for the protection of the United States, he shall direct an issue of additional circulating notes to the association in behalf of such banks to an amount not to exceed 75 per cent of the cash value of the securities so deposited.

What greater power could be lodged in the hands of one man? Absolute and undeniable control of the issuance of $500,000,000 of currency! The power to discriminate as to securities, the right to say that certain securities will be accepted and that certain other securities will not be accepted! Under this provision, Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of the Treasury has the right, in his capacity, to become a bull on the market one day and a bear upon the market the next day.

He may say, for instance, that the bonds of the steel trust are amply sufficient as a security for this circulation and that the bonds of another corporation are not good. He has the power to say that he will issue 75 per cent of the value of certain securities, stocks, bonds, and commercial paper, and upon another class of security that he will issue only 25 per cent of its value. So we see that under the provisions of this bill three great discretionary powers are given to the Secretary of the Treasury. First, he may say that the locality does or does not need additional circulation; second, he can say that some securities are good and some are bad; third, he can say that he will issue the maximum amount of currency upon one class of security and the minimum amount upon another class of security. For instance, he may say that in New York, around Wall street, there is an emergency, local in its character, and he may give them all the money they need; while down in my part of the country, in Kentucky, he may say to the banks there, "Your locality does not need any money, and therefore I will withhold it from you and deny you the right to issue it." [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Not only that, Mr. Speaker, but he may say to the banks in one part of the country where security is offered, "I will allow you 75 per cent, according to the value of the commercial paper you offer," and to the people in another part of the country, "I will allow you only 25 per cent, according to the value of the commercial paper you offer." Why is this extraordinary power lodged in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury? Why, we all recall that during the late financial stringency the Secretary of the Treasury went to the rescue of the banks in New York frequently with millions of dollars, while in the South and the West banks were unable to obtain a dollar. But you say, Mr. Speaker, that the Secretary of the Treasury will not exercise this power arbitrarily. That does not answer the objection to it. All men are human. To give a man the power of a giant is to invite him to use it as a tyrant. [Applause on the Democratic side.] In every part of the civilized world, even in republics, whenever power that belonged to the people was taken from them and lodged in the hands of one man, that man construed it as an invitation to use that power arbitrarily and to the detriment of the people. The very viciousness of this system is shown by the basis of this circulation, making it discretionary with the Secretary to place a value upon securities, and thereby to say what character of commercial paper, bonds, or other securities will be accepted for the issuance of this money. [Applause.]

Yet, under the provisions of this bill, you provide that currency shall be issued upon assets, upon commercial paper, the value of which no man knows. Back yonder in 1893 there was a great contest waged upon this issue. Many thousands of people believed, and honestly so, that the Government should issue money to the farming class of our people, under the sub-treasury scheme, upon the deposit of their crops. They only asked 50 per cent advance, at a reasonable rate of interest, upon the value of their crops; but here, under the provisions of this bill, you issue to the banks 75 per cent of the value of their commercial paper, railroad stocks that are up to-morrow and down next day, mining stocks that fluctuate and fall 50 per cent overnight, commercial paper of every kind—assets which neither feed nor clothe the world. You step in, and to men who speculate in these things you say, "The Government would favor you with a loan of money;" but to the farmer who digs out of the earth those things without which the world would freeze and starve, you say, "You shall not be allowed to borrow money from the Government." [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Before, you would declare that it would be paternalism, socialism, and so forth, to lend money to these farmers. But you absolutely reverse your position now, and while denying them, you lend upon assets such as commercial paper, stocks, bonds, and securities of every kind. These men out upon the farms of this country, those who sing the songs of the Republic and fight its battles, by you were spurned when they contended it was right; but the Republican party, true to its best traditions, allows no principle to stand between it and the corporations which contribute to campaign funds and help to debase elections. You further provide in this bill that in case any of the securities deposited with this association shall depreciate in value, upon ten days' notice you may sell them and deposit the proceeds with the Secretary of the Treasury. Under the provisions of this bill you will make every bank in this country that belongs to this association a victim of the stock ticker and turn every clearing house into an auction block. Designing men, and there are some of them in the banking business, will take advantage of this provision of the law to drive stocks up or down as may suit their interests, and the smaller banks of the country would be fearful to enter into any such agreement as this which might subject them to such disaster.

You are seeking to establish here by this bill that which has been the iridescent dream of the banks of this country for twenty years—that is, an asset currency. You have been seeking to avoid a bond-secured currency, and you are trying by this bill to establish the right of banks to issue money upon assets as against the right of the people to issue money by the Government upon bonds. You are seeking to give to the banks the profit that the Government derives from its bonds by its being the basis of the issuance of the currency and boom the assets of the banks by allowing them to issue it upon commercial paper. I maintain, Mr. Speaker, that under the Constitution of our Government we have no more right to farm out to the national banks, or any other corporation, the right to issue money than we have to give them the right to levy taxes or declare war. One is as much a function of sovereignty as the other. Farming out one is as hazardous to American liberty as the other. All governments in all ages have recognized the principle that the right to issue money is the right of the sovereign. You gentlemen on the other side used to regale us with the delightful anthem that you wanted a dollar that could look the world in the face and say, "I know that my redeemer liveth." But, Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of this bill a dollar so issued would be afraid to make such a statement as this until after the ticker had been consulted and the crier upon the auction block had been heard, and then it would not declare it until after Uncle Sam had become a by-bidder and made it so. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, there is another provision in this bill, which provides that—

The assets of all banks belonging to the association shall be jointly and severally liable to the United States for the redemption of such additional circulation; and to secure such liability the lien created by section 5230 of the Revised Statutes shall extend to and cover the assets of all banks belonging to the association and to the securities deposited by the banks with the association pursuant to the provisions of this act.

Mr. Speaker, if there has been one demand that has come to this Congress greater than any other, it has been that you should make more secure the depositors [applause]—that vast unnumbered throng which makes this Government great; that you should give them protection; that you should throw around them safeguards; that you should make more stringent the laws relative to banks for their protection.

Thousands of our fellow-citizens, who have seen all they possessed—the earnings, meager though they were of a lifetime—swept away by the failure of banks, look to this Congress with hope, but sadly will they be disappointed when they learn that you not only have given them no protection; that you not only have failed to afford them greater protection in the safety of their deposits, but, on the contrary, as shown by the provisions of this bill, you make less secure their deposits than heretofore, by allowing the banks not only to take the flower of its securities—stocks, bonds, and commercial paper—and deposit them with the Government for this emergency circulation, and giving the Government the right to sell these and appropriate the money to its own use, but you go further and allow the Government, after all this has been done, to go to the bank and sell from the depositors the last dollar of assets that it may have. [Applause on the Democratic side.] All of this is made a first lien to the Government as against the depositors or any other creditors of the bank. When the Knickerbocker Bank, in New York, failed, it was discovered that the directors in that bank had loaned to themselves, as directors in other corporations, the money of the bank placed there by depositors. Senator LA FOLLETTE introduced in the Senate an amendment trying to remedy this, but we find no provision of that character in this bill, and the friends of this bill have urged that as the chief objection to the Aldrich bill, which, in my judgment, is its only virtue, namely, the La Follette amendment. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Another provision of section 3 is that as between the several banks composing such association each bank shall be liable only in the proportion that its capital and surplus bears to the aggregate capital and surplus of all such banks. Yet under this provision, Mr. Speaker, what bank with a capital of, say, $4,000,000 would allow nine other banks to become with it members of this association, each of the banks having the right, as this bill provides, to elect a member of the board consisting of one representative from each bank, when this bank, with four-fifths of the capital and surplus, might be made to bear four-fifths of the loss of the other nine banks which constitute the clearing-house association? Therefore it is manifest, Mr. Speaker, that before the smaller banks of the country could join an association and become a component part of the ten which have the right, under this provision, they would have to agree to by-laws which would give the control of this clearing-house district to the one great bank, which of course would have the right then to say what character of securities would be recommended and, therefore, what character of securities would be refused. The smaller banks of fifty, a hundred, and a hundred and fifty thousand dollars capital would not be able to get a dollar of circulation under this bill, because they would not have such character of securities as would be declared to be valid as a basis for this circulation. And even if they should obtain the issuance of money by depositing securities, they would view with great alarm the right given under the provisions of this bill for the association to call for further security or sell the securities deposited and then seek the United States courts to recover the residue from these smaller banks.

Mr. Speaker, the Republican party having been in undisputed control of the Government for the last eleven years has been giving to the national banks of this country the use of the people's money, the millions of surplus in its Treasury, without charging them 1 cent of interest. In the Fifty-eighth Congress an effort was made by the Democratic party to charge interest at competitive rates for the public money, but the Republican party was quick to the rescue of these favored corporations and refused to charge them any interest. They were given the use of these millions of the people's money, gathered from every nook and corner of this Republic by the taxgatherer and paid into the hands of the banks, who reaped a rich harvest by lending it to the American people at such rate of interest as they could obtain, ranging usually from 6 to 10 per cent. In the Fifty-ninth Congress, when the Aldrich bill was under consideration, I offered an amendment providing that this money should be loaned out to competitive bidders at a rate of not less than 2 per cent, and that it should be prorated among the States with due regard to justice. But our Republican friends then were opposed to it. The Speaker ruled the amendment out of order, and upon appeal by me to the House he was sustained by the Republican side and they refused to charge interest on the public money.

The amendment I offered in the Fifty-ninth Congress was as follows:

The Secretary of the Treasury before depositing any public money in the national banking associations designated as depositories for same shall advertise for bids of interest under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, and in depositing said money aforesaid in the national banking associations he shall deposit same with the national banking associations paying the greatest amount of interest for same, but in no event shall the rate of interest be less than 2 per cent. Where the rate of interest bid by more than one national banking association for any deposit of such public money is an equal rate above the 2 per cent aforesaid, the Secretary of the Treasury in such event shall distribute said public money equitably in the various national banking associations throughout the various States making such equal bids, and the rate of interest chargeable upon the public money deposited in the national banking associations under this act shall be computed from the average daily balance of such deposit. Provided, That the amount deposited in any national banking association, under the provisions of this act, shall not exceed 50 per cent of the capital stock of such association.

In speaking upon this amendment at that time I used this language:

But the party in the majority upon this floor, knowing that this amendment would be presented, fearing even their own side upon a vote directly upon it, seek to conceal their true purpose behind parliamentary tactics and deny to the country the opportunity to see their votes recorded upon the amendment itself. The majority knowing I had heretofore offered it in the committee, that I had declared upon this floor on February 16 of this year that I would introduce this amendment, they resort to the previous question to hide behind it, afraid to meet an outraged people upon the direct issue, by saying the amendment was not voted on, when by their votes sustaining the Speaker they made it impossible to vote on it.

The amendment which provides for interest had been submitted to and approved by my Democratic colleagues upon the committee and to the floor leader of the minority upon this side, and had his approval as the true Democratic policy upon the question of the loaning of public money to the national banks. When I appealed from the decision of the Chair refusing me the opportunity to have this amendment considered in the House, a motion was made to lay the appeal upon the table, and in this way we have a direct vote upon the question of whether or not the national banks should use the people's money without interest or pay interest therefor. Every Member upon the floor knew when he cast his vote, if he voted to overrule the decision of the Speaker, that this amendment would be considered, and if adopted the millions of the people's money deposited in the banks would bring into the Public Treasury as interest between five and ten millions of dollars yearly. The record of that vote is now history, but the country is afforded the opportunity of seeing the friends of themselves upon one side and those who believe in giving their money out to corporations without interest on the other side. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, under this amendment the public money would be loaned out under competitive bids of interest to the highest bidder. It provides where two or more associations make equal bids of interest that then the Secretary shall distribute said money equitably to the various banking associations throughout the States making such equal bids, and it limits the amount that may be deposited in any one bank to 50 per cent of the capital stock. Who is prepared to proclaim that this is not just? When this matter was under consideration in the Senate the Senate had an opportunity to vote directly upon the question of interest, and I believe that if the House had been given such an opportunity they would have voted by a considerable majority in favor of making the banks pay interest.

Mr. Speaker, a change has come over the spirit of the dreams of our distinguished adversaries. They are learning that the people of this country will no longer stand for such favoritism and class legislation in regard to their money, and we find them embracing another Democratic principle and charging interest for public deposits, as provided in the Vreeland bill now under consideration. The trouble is, they only partially do right in this matter; they fix the rate at 1 per cent, which is entirely too low. There is hardly a State in this Union that does not get from 2 to 3 per cent for its public money, and has been receiving this amount of interest for all public money for many, many years past. What shall the American people say in their account against the Republican party all these years for their policy of opposing such a law as this? More than a hundred million dollars would be to-day in the Public Treasury, paid there as interest on this public money, but for the fact that the Republican party in this matter, as in all others, has plundered the many for the benefit of the few, has plundered the people for the benefit of the banks, has favored the banks at the expense of the people.

The Republican party may be able to return to the insurance companies the thousands of dollars that were taken from the trust funds, which were held for the benefit of widows and orphans, and given to that party for the purpose of corrupting ballot boxes in national elections in the last decade; but they will have to fry fat from the corporations both night and day in order to gather up the millions that they have given to the national banks by taking it from the people, to reimburse the public which they have plundered. A great objection to this bill, Mr. Speaker, even along this line is that the Republican party in its charge of interest on the public deposits does not pursue a righteous course. Under the provisions of this bill the Secretary of the Treasury has the authority and the power to lend all of this public money at the rate of 1 per cent interest to one favored class of banks or one favored section of the country. He has the right, when Western banks are willing to pay 2 per cent, to lend it to the Eastern banks at 1 per cent interest. He has the right to lend it to the Western banks, which are bidding 1 per cent, while the Eastern banks are bidding 2 or 3 per cent. There is no provision made by which he shall lend it to the highest bidder; there is no provision in the bill which requires him to lend the public money, when there are equal bids by banks from various sections of the country, with due regard to equity, according to population, the bank's capital, surplus, and so forth.

But it puts it in his hands, giving him the right to charge the minimum rate of 1 per cent and lend it where he pleases, when he pleases, and to whom he pleases. Under the provisions of this law the Secretary of the Treasury, along about campaign times, knowing of the friendliness of some gentleman in the East to the Republican campaign fund, some national banker or his friends might contribute several thousand dollars to the Republican campaign fund and be the recipient of a great loan of public money at the lowest rate of interest, basing it upon the theory, as Roosevelt said to Harriman, "We are practical men." This ought not to be. There ought to be a provision for the lending of the public money at a competitive rate of interest, and let the people get the greatest benefit possible for the use of their money, and not place in the hands of one man the lending of two or three hundred millions of dollars, which may be used, as I believe it has been used in the past, for the benefit of the party in power.

Mr. Speaker, the last provision of this bill provides for the appointment of a commission and gives to the President, the Vice-President, and the Speaker of this House each the right to appoint six members, making a total membership of eighteen, and making an appropriation of a sufficient sum to carry out the purposes of the same. Of all the frauds that the devil has ever invented, Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of deceiving mankind—I think I am committed to commissions! [Applause and laughter on Democratic side.] No commission in the history of this country ever reported anything that was of benefit to the people or that was ever enacted into law. Here, this Congress has been in session since last December; the financial situation has been acute; hearings have been had day in and day out before the Committee on Banking and Currency; men from every part of the Union have come before this committee and presented their views upon the currency question; and now this Congress, after all these months of consideration of this question, undertakes to meet the demand of the people for legislation upon this question by the appointment of a commission to consider further legislation.

The truth of the whole matter is that the Republican party is afraid to enact any legislation on the currency question except along the lines proposed in this bill. The proposal of this commission is but a subterfuge to tide them over the election. They fear to enact any legislation on this question before the election, because the people would have an opportunity to pass upon their conduct. They fear the verdict at the polls. They are attempting to treat this question exactly as they are attempting to treat the tariff question, as they are attempting to treat the injunction question, as they are attempting to treat the trust question—by the appointment of a commission as a promise that they will do something after the election. This bill was brought up and introduced only yesterday and is being considered now with less than four hours' debate and will be brought to a vote. And yet these gentlemen will expect the voters to believe that they did not have time to legislate upon a real remedy for the financial trouble or upon the tariff question or the trust question or the injunction question.

I do not believe, Mr. Speaker, in commissions. This body assembled here, elected by the people direct, is the one which has the right under our Constitution to legislate. They ought to exercise it. If they are not competent to do so, they ought to declare it, and give the people the opportunity at the polls to select these wise men who would be appointed on this commission and send them here as legislators, and then we would have no need for this commission. Under the provisions of this bill, this commission is not only to receive its expenses, but those who are not Members of Congress a salary of $625 per month. And section 15 provides that the commission shall give reasonable time for hearings, if deemed necessary, and may appoint such subcommittees and employ such experts as it may deem proper to make investigations of different subjects in different sections of the United States and in foreign countries. Here is a delightful opportunity for junkets into different foreign countries, and imagine with what delight members of this commission will embrace this opportunity to cross the sea upon some palatial Mauretania, consorting with the élite of foreign courts, viewing everything, from the walls of Jerusalem to the ruins of Pompeii, at the expense of the taxpayers while they are studying the financial question. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Nor, Mr. Speaker, am I one of those who share the belief that this Republic of republics should go back to the East for wisdom, as we have formulated here a Government that is the model for all the governments of the earth, and I believe that we can formulate a banking system without any assistance from foreign countries. Then, Mr. Speaker, this commission, appointed by the great triumvirate, the President, the Vice-President, and the Speaker, would but very naturally reflect the judgment of these gentlemen upon the currency question, and we are informed that all of them think alike upon this currency problem, and the report at last would be that the President was right, that Uncle Joe was right, and that the Vice-President was right. I believe that the taxpayers would rather admit it than pay the cost of obtaining it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, the one sentiment uttered by Abraham Lincoln that the stream of time will flow on forever was that this is a Government of the people, by the people, for the people, not a Government of commissions, by commissions, for the people. [Great applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. PUJO. Mr. Speaker, this bill should have been entitled "The digested Vreeland bill for the purpose of enhancing the value of undigested securities." [Applause on the Democratic side.] We find on April 6 the distinguished author of this measure introduced a currency bill. On April 20 he introduced another currency bill; on May 11 another, and, forsooth, on May 12 the last bill, that is now under discussion. Therefore I hope I speak advisedly when I say it ought to represent the digested views of the distinguished author of the measure and of those two or three conferences held in its behalf.

Mr. Speaker, I have been one of the unfortunate members of the Committee on Banking and Currency who have been compelled to sit, in season and out of season since last December giving hearings to the people desiring, or imagining that they desired, relief from the existing currency depression. I do not believe that, outside of the author of this measure, or, at least, a very few and limited number, anybody ever offered one word in support of this bill or one embodying principles similar to those in this bill.

Mr. Speaker, legislation of the character incorporated in this bill, if offered in seriousness, is absolutely unnecessary to be adopted by this House.

On the 1st of last October there was a currency flurry or depression in this country. Times have changed. The banks now have plenty of money. We do not need legislation of this character, and it should never be passed by a deliberative or legislative assembly, because it is basing a currency upon credits and upon bonds which may be used for purposes of issue though not listed on the various stock exchanges of the Union. Besides, Mr. Speaker, the principal amount of emergency currency issued under its provisions will go to the large centers like New York, because, you will notice, a bank can issue emergency currency if it has a surplus of 20 per cent and 40 per cent only of its capital stock paid in. You will find the great banks of the East have not paid up their capital stock comparably with banks throughout the other sections, and they carry most of the operating capital in surplus. Therefore, take even the great rich State of Louisiana, and it will be entitled to only two associations under the provisions of this bill. Some of the States may not be entitled to even one association.

The bill as first introduced put the amount of capital and surplus required to form an association at $10,000,000, but the later editions have been changed so that ten banks uniting, with $5,000,000 capital and surplus, can form an association.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is crude. I will call to your attention its provisions, that any ten banks uniting with a minimum capital of $5,000,000 will have the right, by going through the process detailed in the bill, to obtain the issuance of emergency currency. Upon the failure of one of the uniting banks, thus reducing the number to less than ten, the whole association becomes functus officio, except for the purpose of liquidating its affairs. Then what is the result? One bank, having taken out a certain amount of emergency currency, fails and the other banks constituting the association have only the right to sue and reduce the assets to money and apply the proceeds to the redemption of the notes, and the other nine banks would be compelled to go out of business if there were no other banks to join it, and the currency apportioned to that association would be transferred and used by another.

Under the provisions of this measure the limitation of emergency currency is $500,000,000. The report of the Secretary of the Treasury, filed on January 29, 1908, shows that the capital stock paid in of all the national banks in the United States is $901,681,000, and the surplus $549,000,000, making an aggregate total of nearly a billion and a half dollars. Therefore, the issue being limited to $500,000,000, we have about 33½ per cent to be apportioned to the banks, and you will find when the figures are worked out and you ascertain the number of associations that can be formed in the various States that this money will go largely to the East, where it will be used in speculation, and not be available for the industrial and farming sections of the country, where it is so greatly needed.

Mr. Speaker, I said, and I believe it firmly, that legislation of this character is not only unnecessary, but it is unwise and dangerous. Whenever it once gets upon the statute books it will never be repealed. We find that the reason of the currency famine of 1907 was this: The national-bank act requires all banks outside of reserve cities to maintain a reserve of 15 per cent of their deposits, 9 per cent of which they are entitled to keep in reserve cities.

When it gets into the reserve cities, the reserve bank is entitled to use it as it sees fit, provided it keeps 25 per cent, or $2.25, of that $9, in its vaults. Therefore the law, although intending to protect the depositors by the requirement that 15 per cent of deposits shall be kept as a reserve, is so manipulated that only 8½ per cent—$6 in the vault and $2.25 in the reserve bank—is kept; and the balance of the reserve is loaned out on call to speculative interests, just as it was last fall. And when the bank in the country called upon its reserve bank for its money, it had been loaned out and could not be returned, and the country banks therefore had to suspend payment, as well as those in the large cities which were responsible for the conditions, because of their methods of doing business.

I want to emphasize this fact, that if the law could be amended, and it is the only legislation needed at this session, so as to require banks to maintain the reserve in their vaults and so as to permit the retirement of circulation without limitation, with the consent of the Secretary of the Treasury, there would be no need of legislation of this character. That is what we need. [Applause.]
